

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN THE SUPREME COURT
OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA

[No. 8,668.— Department One.]
November 6, 1882.

CHARLES H. CONDEE ET AL. v. HIRAM M. BARTON.

CHANGE OF CONCLUSIONS OF LAW BEFORE ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.—The declaration of the general conclusion of law from the facts found is the rendition of the judgment in so far that when entered the judgment entered may relate to such rendition for certain purposes; but this does not make the conclusions of law first announced final and beyond the reach of the Court so as to preclude the Court from changing the conclusions of law at any time before the judgment is entered.

JUDGMENT, WHEN FINAL.—A judgment is not final until it is recorded.

REAL ESTATE BROKER — COMMISSIONS — ESTOPPEL.—A real estate broker is not estopped from claiming his commissions because the memorandum of agreement between himself and the defendant describes the defendant as owner of the property to be sold.

APPEAL by defendant from judgment of the Superior Court of the County of San Bernardino, and from an order vacating and setting aside the decision and conclusions of law in favor of defendant and thereupon deciding and filing conclusions of law in favor of plaintiffs. ROLFE, J.

Action on contract. The complaint set forth the execution of an agreement in writing, its performance by plaintiff, and a breach thereof by defendant.

The agreement was as follows:

"Memorandum of agreement made and entered into this twenty-eighth of January, A. D. 1882, by and between H. M. Barton of the first part and Condee & Marshall, parties of the second part, witnesseth that whereas the said party of first part is the owner of two hundred and twenty acres of land in Lugonia district, known as the Barton tract, in San Bernardino County, State of California, together with twenty-two shares of water in Sunnyside division, of the North Fork ditch of the Santa Ana River, and is desirous of selling the same through the agency of the said Condee & Marshall.

"Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed between the parties hereto that the said tract of land together with the water rights shall and is hereby placed in the hands of the said Condee & Marshall, as agents for sale, on the following terms, to wit,—the tract is to be platted and mapped and advertised, and sold in such tracts as the said Condee & Marshall shall see fit, and all realized over fifty-five dollars per acre shall be retained by said Condee & Marshall as commission for the sale of said tract of land and water rights, and the said Barton agrees to receive not less than one quarter cash down on each sale made by Condee & Marshall, and upon receipt of said payment the said Barton agrees to execute a bond for a deed allowing the balance, three fourths, to be paid in equal payments of one, and two, and three years, at ten per cent. per annum interest; interest payable semi-annually; and it is further agreed that the said Condee & Marshall shall have one year from date hereof to affect the sale of said tract of land and water right as above agreed.

"Dated at San Bernardino, January 28, 1882.

"H. M. BARTON,

"CONDEE & MARSHALL."

Defendant's bill of exceptions shows the following facts: In this case, on this third day of July, 1882, the Court signed and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The conclusions of law are in the following words, to wit: "As conclusions of law, the Court decides that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any judgment against the defendant, but that the defendant should have judgment against plaintiffs for his costs and disbursements in this action expended and incurred."

Immediately upon the announcement by the Court of its decision and the filing of the said findings and conclusions of law, the plaintiffs made their motion, to wit: The Court having filed its findings in this case, plaintiffs move the Court for judgment in their favor on the findings of fact as filed, and to set aside the conclusions of law therein made, and give judgment for plaintiffs as prayed for. Thereupon the Court ordered that entry of judgment be stayed till said motion was heard. Subsequently, on September 4, 1882, upon argument of said motion, and before the Court ruled on it, the defendant objected to its being allowed, on the grounds: 1. That the Court having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and made its decision, that the action of the Court can not be reviewed except upon a motion for a new trial or appeal from the judgment. 2. That the findings of fact do not support a judgment for plaintiffs.

The Court afterwards, on September 5, 1882, made and caused to be filed this order and decision: "In the above-entitled cause, the Court having heretofore filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thereupon the plaintiffs, by their attorney, having moved the Court for judgment in their favor upon the facts as found by the Court, and the same having been fully considered by the Court, it is now ordered that the aforesaid conclusions of law in favor of the defendant be vacated and set aside, and upon the facts so found as aforesaid, the Court decides and finds as conclusions of law, that plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the defendant for the sum of four thousand four hundred dollars, together with costs of this action. Let judgment be entered accordingly."

Thereupon judgment was entered for plaintiffs. After decision in department, a petition for hearing in bank was presented and denied.

Satterwhite & Curtis, for Appellant.

The bill of exceptions shows: After the Court had signed and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law, or in other words, made its decision, it could not change its conclusions of law or decision except upon a motion for a new trial. Or if the point could not be reviewed on motion for new trial, then the only remedy would be an appeal from the judgment. When the trial is by the Court, the filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law, is the rendition of the judgment. (C. C. P., §§ 632, 633.)

We call the Court's attention to the fact, that no other order for judgment is necessary but the findings and conclusions of law. That is the decision which authorizes judgment to be entered by the Clerk. (C. C. P., § 633.) This talk, therefore, by lawyers or Courts, about the "order for judgment being entered in the minutes," is entirely gratuitous in a case like this. The decision of the Court is the judgment. (Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416; Cal. State Tel. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 150.)

"The judgment is not always rendered immediately after the rendition of the verdict, or even after the findings of fact by the Judge, because a special verdict may be returned, and in such a case it frequently happens that what judgment shall be rendered thereon is reserved for argument. So after the facts have been found by the Court, what conclusion of law (judgment) follows may be reserved for argument." (Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 420.)

When the jury return a general verdict, that is the rendition of the judgment, and the Clerk must enter judgment in conformity thereto within twenty-four hours. (C. C. P., § 664.) A special verdict leaves the rendition of the judgment to the Court. (C. C. P., § 624.) Therefore, we say that when a special verdict is returned, or findings of fact filed, without any conclusions of law, the case is open to the Court to render whatever judgment it believes is correct. But when a general verdict is returned, or findings of fact and conclusions of law are filed, the Court can not vacate or set either aside, except upon a motion for new trial under Code of Civil Procedure, Sections 633, 657. (27 Cal. 688; 38 id. 528; 42 id. 507; 43 id. 452; Los Angeles Co. Bank v. Baynor, 9 P. C. L. J. 743; 51 Cal. 507.)

Henry M. Willis and C. W. C. Rowell, for Respondents.

A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact. (Code C. P., § 656.) When the facts are found by the Court correctly, why ask for a re-examination of the issues of fact? Qui bono. It is urged that Subdivision 7 of Section 657, C. C. P., applies. Such is not my construction. That means such an error of law in the admission or rejection of testimony or giving an instruction as would or might have produced a change in the verdict of the jury or decision of the Court. A change in the facts found or established by proper evidence on trial. (Gambert v. Hart, 44 Cal. 542; Martin v. Matfield, 49 id. 42.)

When no errors in the admission or rejection of testimony or instructions given are assigned, and it is conceded the facts are properly found, but the Court at first comes to a wrong conclusion, it is the duty of counsel and proper practice to call the trial Court's attention to its error and have it corrected before final judgment. The trial Court has full control over its records until an appeal is prosecuted to this Court! (Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 9; Swain v. Naglee, 19 id. 127; Heyeler v. Hendsell, 27 id. 491; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 id. 172; Leviston v. Swan, 33 id. 480; Estate of Schroeder, 46 id. 305; Mulliken v. Hull, 5 id. 245.)

When the findings of fact are defective they may be corrected on motion. (Pralus v. Jefferson G. & S. M. Co., 34 id. 558; Hathaway v. Ryan, 35 id. 188; Cowing v. Rogers, 34 id. 648.) If the trial Court can correct an error of fact on its being pointed out, why not an error of law?

The Court:

We know no principle that would estop the plaintiffs from claiming their commission, because the "memorandum of agreement" describes the defendant as owner of the property to be sold.

We can see no objection to the practice of changing the conclusions of law, based upon the finding of facts at any time before judgment is entered. The declaration of the general conclusion of law from the facts found, is the rendition of the judgment in so far, as that, when entered, the judgment entered may relate to such rendition for certain purposes. But this does not make the conclusions of law first announced final and beyond the reach of the Court. There is no judgment which is final until a judgment is recorded.

Judgment and order affirmed.

APPEAL.—On the authority of Reed v. Allen, 10 P. C. L. J. 239, appeal dismissed.

APPEAL by defendants from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Merced. MARKS, J.

Petition for writ of mandate to compel the Board of Supervisors of Merced County to award the county printing to the plaintiff. The petition for the writ was filed in the Superior Court of Merced County on August 27, 1880. Defendants demurred to the writ; the demurrer was overruled, and defendants declining to answer, judgment was given against them. The notice of appeal was dated November 5, 1880.

As appears from return of service indorsed thereon, it was served on the sixth day of November, 1880, on the plaintiff, Rowena G. Steele, personally, at the county of Merced, by the Sheriff of that county. The affidavit of service of the notice upon the plaintiff's attorney is in the words and figures following:

"State of California, County of Merced, ss.: Zue G. Peck, being duly sworn, deposes and says: he is a white male citizen over the age of twenty-one years, and he is clerk in the office of Frank H. Farrar, District Attorney of Merced County, California. That, as such clerk, he did, on the eighth day of November, A. D. 1880, deposit in the United States post-office in the town of Merced, county of Merced, State of California, a sealed envelope with a six-cent United States postage stamp imprinted thereon, containing a true and correct copy of the annexed notice of appeal, and directed to Mrs. Laura DeForce Gordon, 29 Montgomery Block, San Francisco, California.

"That affiant is informed and believes, and so states the facts to be, that said Laura DeForce Gordon is the attorney of record for the plaintiff in the action wherein the annexed notice of appeal is given, and that her place of business is at 29 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

ZUE G. PECK."

Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no service of the notice of appeal was shown in the transcript on appeal.

Laura De Force Gordon, for the motion.

This appeal should be dismissed, as there is nothing in the transcript to show or prove service of "Notice of Appeal," which must be shown. (Hildreth v. Gwindon, 10 Cal. 490.) The alleged service on Rowena G. Steele by the Sheriff personally is nugatory and void. (C. C. P., § 1015; Grant v. White, 6 Cal. 55; Abrahams v. Stokes, 39 id. 150; Whittle v. Renner, 55 id. 395; Prescott v. Salthouse, 53 id. 221.) The only proof offered is a pretended service shown by the affidavit of Zue G. Peck, which affidavit is manifestly insufficient in the following particulars:

1. It does not show that the residence or place of business of the parties giving notice is in a different place than that of the respondent's attorney, to whom they thus attempt to give notice. Service by mail can only be made where the persons making the service and the person to whom it is to be made, reside, or have their places of business, in different places, between which there is a regular communication by mail. (C. C. P., § 1012; Moore v. Bessie, 85 Cal. 184; Schenck v. McKie, 4 How. Pr. 246.)

2. The affidavit of Peck fails to show a single step towards a valid service of "Notice of Appeal." It does not show that the mailing of the notice was done at the request of the appellants or their attorney, or on their behalf. Without some authority to do so, he had no right to mail the notice, and it should be disregarded. (McMillan v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 379.)

3. It does not show that the postage was paid. The affiant's statement there was "a six-cent U. S. postage-stamp imprinted upon the envelope," inclosing "annexed Notice of Appeal," does not indicate whether that amount was sufficient to pay the postage on the same, nor does he state that the said stamps were uncanceled.

4. The affidavit of the mailing of the notice does not show that the notice of appeal mentioned in said affidavit was the notice of appeal in this cause, or to what cause it did refer.

5. The affidavit fails to state that, at the time of the mailing of the notice, the residence or place of business of the plaintiff's attorney was in the City and County of San Francisco, to which place he swore he had addressed the said notice on the eighth day of November, 1880, although the affiant says he "believes" that on the fifteenth day of November, 1880, the date on which the jurat is made to the said affidavit, that the place of business of plaintiff's attorney is in the said City and County of San Francisco; but there is nothing in this affidavit of mailing notice that even pretends to show that the residence of plaintiff's attorney was in San Francisco at the date of mailing the notice. There is an interval of seven days between the time of mailing notice and the making of the affidavit that "affiant believes the place of business of plaintiff's attorney to be in San Francisco." It is wholly immaterial where plaintiff's attorney resided seven days after the mailing of the notice. Where did she reside or have her place of business on the eighth of November, 1880, the date of mailing of the notice? (Moore v. Besse, supra.)

6. The affidavit contains no mention that there is a regular communication by mail between the place of business of the person giving notice and the person to whom the notice is given, as is positively required by the statute (C. C. P., § 1012.) Nor does it show that there is any communication by mail whatever, which renders the pretended service fatally defective, and must be so regarded. (People v. Alameda T. P. Road Co., 30 Cal. 182.) The affidavit of service is ineffectual, if not strictly in compliance with the statute. (People v. Alameda R. Road Co., and cases cited, 30 id. 182; Dall v. Smith, 32 id. 475.) "The appeal should show due service." (Franklin v. Reiner, 8 id. 341.) "Unless it affirmatively appear in the record that a copy of the notice of appeal has been served upon the adverse party or his attorney, the Supreme Court cannot take jurisdiction of the case. (Hildreth v. Gwindon, 10 id. 490.)

Frank H. Farrar and P. D. Wigginton, contra.

The Court:

The motion to dismiss the appeal in this case is sustained on the authority of Reed v. Allison, 10 P. C. L. J. 239, and cases cited therein.

Appeal dismissed.

PIERRE PRIET ET AL. v. CHARLES HUBERT ET AL.

COUNTY WARRANT — DUPONT STREET COMMISSION.—Action brought under the fifteenth section of the Act to authorize the widening of Dupont Street in the City and County of San Francisco (Statutes 1875-6, p. 433). Hunter, one of the defendants, was the owner of a lot of land, and plaintiffs had a leasehold interest therein. The Dupont Street Commissioners assessed the damages to the lot at ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars in favor of Hunter, "and to all owners and claimants, known and unknown." A warrant (No. 92) was drawn on the Dupont Street Fund in favor of Hunter for the ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, and was by him indorsed to one Tibbey, who was Secretary of the Board of Commissioners. Afterwards, the Board ascertaining that there was a lease of the lot, and a doubt or dispute about the value thereof and of the damages, drew another warrant (No. 114), the one in controversy, payable out of the same fund and for the same amount, and deposited it with the defendant Reynolds, as County Clerk, and notified the defendant Hubert, as Treasurer of the City and County, of the drawing and depositing thereof, and of the description of the lot of land covered by warrant No. 114. Afterwards Hubert, through a deputy, paid in full to Tibbey warrant No. 92. The Court below held the payment was to Hunter, received by his authorized agent, and was in full satisfaction of the award and of warrant No. 114, and denied relief as against the defendants Hubert, Treasurer, and Reynolds, County Clerk. In this Court, Held: If the finding, that warrant No. 92 was delivered to and left with Tibbey by defendant Hunter, "with power and authority from said Hunter to deliver the same to defendant Hubert, Treasurer, and collect and receive from him the amount expressed therein," means that there was an actual agreement between Hunter and Tibbey, to the effect that the latter should collect the warrant, either for himself or Hunter, the evidence does not support the finding. The evidence clearly shows that the warrant was to be left with Tibbey, "to be placed in the hands of the County Clerk" until such time as the dispute between Hunter and the plaintiffs should be determined.

WHEN PAYMENT BY TREASURER IS VIOLATION OF OFFICIAL DUTY.—The payment by the Treasurer, with full knowledge of the facts, to Tibbey of the moneys which he himself had set apart for the payment of warrant No. 114 was made in violation of his official duty.

EFFECT OF UNAUTHORIZED PAYMENT.—Such payment to Tibbey of the money which should have been reserved for distribution in accordance with the decree, herein, was not a payment to Hunter; nor could the plaintiffs be deprived of their interest in warrant No. 114, or the proceeds thereof, by the circumstance that the Treasurer had paid a like sum to another person upon another warrant in which the plaintiffs had no interest.

PARTIES — BILL IN EQUITY — EFFECT OF DECREE IN THIS CASE.—Section 15 of the Act, provides that a party in interest may in a case like this proceed against the Treasurer by a bill in equity; all persons in interest, if known, being made parties. And it was the intent of the Legislature that the decree of the Court should adjudicate the conflicting claims and provide for a just and proper distribution between the claimants and should conclusively determine the duty of the Treasurer to pay to the parties adjudged to have an interest in the warrant the sum decreed to be the value of such interest.

DIRECTIONS AS TO PROCEEDINGS AND DECREE.—In this case directions given as to the proper proceedings to be taken, and decree to be entered by the Court below.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from the judgment in the Twelfth District Court, City and County of San Francisco, in favor of the defendant Charles Hubert, and from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. Appeal by defendant David Hunter from the judgment in said Court against him in favor of the plaintiffs, and from the judgment in favor of the defendants Charles Hubert and Thomas H. Reynolds, and also from the order denying a motion for a new trial. DANIEL FIELD, J.

This is an action brought by plaintiffs to have determined the respective interests of the plaintiffs and the defendant David Hunter in a warrant, No. 114, drawn by the Board of Dupont Street Commissioners in the City and County of San Francisco upon the City and County Treasurer to pay the damages assessed under the Act of March 23, 1876 (Stats. 1875-6 p. 433), and deposited with the defendants Thomas H.

Reynolds, as Clerk of the City and County, under the provisions of Section 15 of the Act.

The Court below gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs against the defendant David Hunter for the sum of one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars as damages; and judgment in favor of the defendants Charles Hubert and Thomas H. Reynolds as against both plaintiffs and the defendant Hunter.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

D. H. Whittemore, for Plaintiffs (Appellant and Respondent).

He, after a statement of the evidence and argument upon the fact, concluded: "We are satisfied with our judgment against Hunter, and he is greatly to blame for placing it in Tibbey's power to get the money — ours as well as his own — and he is clearly responsible to us. It is only in the event that the judgment between Hunter and Hubert is reversed, that we ask to have the judgment between plaintiff and Hubert reversed."

H. J. Tilden, for David Hunter, Appellant.

Warrant No. 92 was never issued by the Commissioners. Issue is to send out, to put in circulation for use. (Webster's Dict.) Nor was there any authority for the drawing of warrant No. 92. It was never delivered to Hunter, but was kept by H. S. Tibbey, the Secretary of the Commissioners to be deposited with the County Clerk as required by said Act. Nor was it indorsed. Indorsement consists in writing one's name on a negotiable instrument, and delivering it to another person with intent to pass the title. (Civil Code, §§ 3108, 3128; Story on Promissory Notes, § 120, a; Marston v. Allen, 8 M. & W. 499.)

Certainly the evidence does not show that Hunter delivered it to Tibbey, or intended to pass the title to him or any one; nor is it negotiable. A negotiable instrument is one for a fixed amount and payable absolutely, and not from any particular fund. (3 Kent, side page 76; Story on Bills of Exchange, § 46; Civil Code, § 3095.) Warrants drawn on the County Treasurer are not negotiable. (People v. Gray, 23 Cal. 125; Dana v. San Francisco, 19 id. 486; Argentina v. San Francisco, 16 id. 275; Martin v. San Francisco, id. 285.)

Tibbey was acting in his official capacity as Secretary of the Dupont Street Commissioners at the time and in the matter of the signing of said warrants by Hunter, and in retaining warrant No. 92; and he retained it as such Secretary, in obedience to a law binding both on Tibbey and on defendant Hunter, in order that said Commissioners could deposit it with the County Clerk. Tibbey did not retain the warrant as indorsee. Hunter had no reason to suppose that the Commissioners would not perform their duty and comply with the provisions of said Act, and deposit said warrant with the County Clerk.

If the Treasurer had paid the warrant in good faith, and without notice of the facts, there might be some excuse for the payment; but the Treasurer had notice of the drawing of warrant No. 114 for the award of damages to said lot No. 2, block No. 118; he was the Treasurer of the Dupont Street Commissioners, was served with written notice of the drawing of warrant No. 114 for the damages to said lot, and registered the warrant on July 14, 1877. (See Civil Code, §§ 18 and 19; McClure v. Town of Oxford, 94 U. S. 432; Christy v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 338; Wade on Notice, § 439; Commercial Bank of Rochester v. Colt, 15 Barb. 506.)

If warrant No. 92 had been a negotiable instrument, the payment, under the circumstances of this case, would not have been valid.

The rule is that a payment is valid only when made bona fide, without any knowledge of facts which justly impair or destroy the rights of the holder. (Story on Bills of Exchange, § 450; Redington v. Woods, 45 Cal. 421; Dresser v. Missouri R. R., 93 U. S. 93; Civil Code, § 3164.)

The Court erred in rendering a money judgment against defendant Hunter and in favor of the plaintiff, because, as stated above, this is an equitable action in the nature of a special proceeding for the just distribution of warrant No. 114, as provided by section 15 of said Act, and not an action for damages.

I respectfully submit that the judgment should be reversed and a judgment entered distributing the warrant No. 114 between the plaintiff and defendant David Hunter.

J. F. Cowdery and W. C. Burnett, for Respondents Hubert and Reynolds.

Warrant No. 92 was issued by the Board of "Dupont Street Commissioners" under their official seal, used by the Board to verify their official acts (Stat., § 4), April 20, 1877, for ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, for the award for damages, etc., to David Hunter, or order, signed by the President and Secretary of the Board; and there was not from that time any power in the Board to issue another warrant for the identical damages. (Stats., §§ 11, 14, 15.)

There was but one "Dupont Street Fund," and that was created by the statute, and consisted of all the moneys arising from the sale of bonds, and no subdivisions thereof are provided for by the statute; and all of said moneys, whether placed in bags, boxes, or anywhere else in the Treasurer's office, were simply moneys in gross of the "Dupont Street Fund," and were payable upon the presentation of warrants as they came in.

Warrant No. 92 was drawn to David Hunter, or order, and indorsed by him, "Received payment, David Hunter." The principles of "indorsements," mentioned in appellant's points and authorities, do not reach the case of an admission of payment.

McKINSTREY, J.:

The action was brought under the fifteenth section of an Act to authorize the "widening of Dupont street." (Stats. 1875-76, p. 433.) The section reads:

"In all cases, when the owner or owners of any subdivision of land taken for the widening of said street, or of any improvements destroyed or injured, is or are unknown, or is or are known to be laboring under any legal disability, and in cases where there are liens or incumbrances, or leases, or conflicting claims, or disputes or doubts about the title of any lot or subdivision of land, which can not be adjusted between the parties in interest, in all such cases it shall be the duty of the Board of Commissioners to draw a warrant on the Treasurer of said city and county, payable out of said Dupont Street Fund, for the amount awarded in each case as the value of the respective lots of land taken for said street, or for damages awarded on account of improvements destroyed or injured by reason of the widening thereof, as fixed in said report, and to deposit said warrant with the County Clerk of said city and county; and thereupon, and on proof of the same, the said Board shall be entitled to be put in possession of such lots of land as shall be taken for said street in the same manner as provided in Section 16 of this Act, and the title to said lots of land shall thenceforth be vested in said city and county as effectually as if the same had been conveyed by deed executed by the true owners thereof. Said Board shall also notify the said Treasurer of the drawing of said warrant, and furnish him with a description of the lot referred to by said warrant; and the parties in interest in said lot may proceed against the Treasurer by bill in equity for an adjudication to settle the conflicting claims to the same, or to provide for its just and proper distribution, in which suit all parties in interest or dispute shall be made parties, if known. On entry of a final decree of Court in such action, the said County Clerk shall deliver the warrant to the party or parties entitled thereto, according to the order of the Court. The only requisition upon the Treasurer shall be to answer whether he has the money in the 'Dupont Street Fund' to pay the warrant when presented."

The Court below found that the Dupont Street Commissioners assessed the damages for the lot described in the complaint at ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, and assessed the same in favor of David Hunter, one of defendants, "and to all owners and claimants, known and unknown."

The Court also found "that on the twentieth day of April, 1877, the Board of Dupont Street Commissioners drew a warrant, such as was provided for in such cases by said Act of the Legislature, in favor of said David Hunter, for said sum of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, gold coin, payable out of the Dupont Street Fund, provided for in said Act, and being for the award and assessment aforesaid, which warrant was numbered ninety-two (92), and was in the words and figures as set out by copy in the amended answer of defendants, Hubert, Treasurer, and Reynolds, County

Clerk, of the City and County of San Francisco, filed herein on the eighteenth day of September, 1879, and was signed by the President, and countersigned by the Secretary of said Board, as were all other warrants ever drawn by that Board, and indorsed as follows, viz.: 'No. 92, $10,922. Warrant on Dupont Street Fund, in favor of D. Hunter.'

"That afterwards, on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1877, said defendant, Hunter, indorsed said warrant No. 92 as follows, viz.: 'David Hunter,' which indorsement was witnessed in writing, as follows, viz.: 'Indorsement correct, H. S. Tibbey;' and at the same time last aforesaid, said Hunter further indorsed said warrant No. 92, as follows, viz.: 'Received payment, David Hunter;' which indorsement last aforesaid was then, and had been for years last preceding that time, and still is the usual indorsement acknowledging receipt of money due upon warrants upon the treasury of said City and County of San Francisco.

"That at the time last aforesaid, said warrant No. 92 was delivered to said Hunter, and by him delivered to and left with one Henry S. Tibbey, with power and authority from said Hunter to deliver the same to defendant Hubert, Treasurer, as aforesaid, and collect and receive from him the amount expressed therein of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, gold coin.

"That afterwards, on the ninth day of July, 1877, said Board found that there was the said lease of said lot, and a doubt or dispute about the value thereof, and of any damages to the leasehold interest thereunder caused by the widening of Dupont street under said Act of the Legislature, drew another warrant, No. 114, payable out of said fund, for the same amount of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, for which said warrant No. 92 had been drawn, as aforesaid, and so awarded to said lot of land, as hereinbefore stated, and deposited the same with defendant Reynolds, County Clerk, and on the fourteenth day of July, 1877, notified defendant Hubert, Treasurer, of the drawing and deposit thereof, and of the description of the lot covered by said warrant No. 114.

"That on the thirtieth day of August, 1877, said Tibbey presented said warrant No. 92 pursuant to his power and authority aforesaid, to said defendant Hubert, Treasurer, who paid the same to him on that day out of the money in the Dupont Street Fund to its full amount of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, gold coin, and marked the said warrant No. 92 'paid' and filed the same in his office.

"That at the time of such payment defendant Hubert had no notice, nor had he ever received any notice that said warrant No. 92 was drawn for the value of the identical lot and damages for which warrant No. 114 was drawn.

"That said Hunter and said plaintiffs are the only persons who have ever claimed any part of said award of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, and said Hunter is the only person who has ever claimed the whole thereof."

If the finding, that warrant No. 92 was delivered to and left with one Henry S. Tibbey (Secretary of the Dupont Street Commissioners), by defendant Hunter, "with power and authority from said Hunter to deliver the same to defendant Hubert, Treasurer as aforesaid, and collect and receive from him the amount expressed therein of ten thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars, gold coin," means that there was an actual agreement between Hunter and Tibbey to the effect that the latter should collect the warrant, either for himself or for Hunter, the evidence does not support the finding. The evidence clearly shows that the warrant was to be left with Tibbey "to be placed in the hands of the County Clerk" until such time as the dispute between defendant Hunter and the present plaintiff should be determined. As there was nothing on the face of No. 92 to indicate that it represented the award for the property in which the plaintiff claims an interest, it may be that Hunter, by indorsing it as he did, clothed Tibbey with its ostensible ownership, and that those ignorant of the real arrangement between the parties might assume Tibbey to be the owner. It may be that, by reason of such indorsement, the Treasurer would have been justified in paying the warrant to Tibbey — had he been in a position to defend the payment of warrant No. 92 to any one.

The moneys awarded for the lot of land described in the complaint, and improvements thereon, were not paid to Hunter or to any one authorized by Hunter to receive them, Hunter, personally, has never received them, and, if he is to be treated as having received them it is because he is estopped by his indorsement of warrant No. 92 from denying that Tibbey was authorized to receive them for him. But such estoppel could only be asserted by the Treasurer in case he had paid to Tibbey the sum called for by the warrant, in ignorance of the fact that Tibbey was not authorized to receive the money. The evidence shows, beyond dispute, that the Treasurer paid to Tibbey the sum called for by No. 92 in violation of his official duty, and with full knowledge that 92 represented the amount of damages allowed for the property to which the present plaintiff asserted a claim, and that he paid 92 with the money which he himself had set aside for the payment of 114, then on deposit with the County Clerk to await the determination of this action. The payment to Tibbey of the money which should have been reserved for distribution in accordance with the decree herein, was—under the circumstances—no more a payment to Hunter than would have been a payment of the sum to a stranger, or an appropriation of it by the Treasurer himself. (To avoid any possible misapprehension it is proper here to say that the payment was made by a deputy of the Treasurer and not by that officer personally.) It is not necessary to decide whether the Treasurer would be authorized in this action to object to a decree that defendant Hunter had an interest to the extent of a certain sum in warrant 114, and its proceeds, on the ground that he had already paid inadvertently to Hunter a like or greater sum. As the case is presented it appears the Treasurer has never paid to Hunter or to his order any portion of the amount awarded to the property in which plaintiff claims an interest as lessee.

Certainly the plaintiff here, who, beyond all question, is entitled to an interest in warrant 114, and in the proceeds thereof, to the extent of one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, could not be deprived of his claim against the treasury by the circumstance that the County Treasurer had paid a like sum to another person upon another warrant. Plaintiff had no connection with the receipt for, or indorsement of warrant 92 by defendant Hunter, nor did the law make the latter the agent of plaintiff to receive any warrant awarded to property in which the plaintiff was interested. Plaintiff had no interest in 92 or in any other warrant than 114; the only warrant deposited with the County Clerk.

The decree of the Court below should have adjudicated the conflicting claims of plaintiff, as lessee, and of defendant, as lessor, in warrant No. 114, and have provided "for its just and proper distribution." (§ 15.) At first view we were inclined to the opinion that the office of the Court would have been discharged by declaring the interest of each in the warrant No. 114, leaving any defense which the Treasurer might have against the payment of warrant 114 to be asserted when its payment should be demanded. But Section 15 provides that a party in interest "may proceed against the Treasurer by bill in equity," and a fuller consideration of its terms satisfied us that the Legislature intended that the decree in an action like the present should be binding upon the Treasurer, and conclusively determine his duty to pay to each of the parties adjudged to have an interest in the warrant the sum decreed to be the value of such interest.

As there is but one warrant, the decree hereafter to be entered should provide (the parties being properly indemnified) for the appointment of an officer of the Court to receive it, for the parties in interest, from the County Clerk, who, on the entry of final decree, must deliver the warrant to the party or parties entitled thereto, according to the order of the Court (§ 15), and for a distribution of the amount collected upon the warrant by such owner.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with direction to the Court below to enter a decree in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

R. S. BAKER v. E. DICKSON ET AL.

FORCIBLE ENTRY — POSSESSION.—Plaintiff was in possession, through his servant and employee, of the premises in question, when the defendants, after entering peaceably thereon, forcibly ejected the servant therefrom.

Held: It was not necessary that plaintiff should be there in person; the employee's possession was that of the employer; it does not require the actual personal presence of the employer to constitute possession in him.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of San Bernardino. SEPULVEDA, J.

C. W. C. Rowell and H. M. Willis, for Appellants.

Brunson & Wells and Waters & Gibson, for Respondents.

Ross, J.:

This is a clear case. The evidence sufficiently shows that on the fourteenth day of September, 1881, the plaintiff was in the possession of the property described in the complaint — the Temescal Tin mine, situated in San Bernardino County — and had been in such possession since the third of January of the same year. He was not there in person, nor was it necessary that he should be. He was there by and through his servants and employees. But their possession was his possession. It does not require the actual, personal presence of the employer to constitute possession in him. It would be strange if it did.

On the fourteenth of September the plaintiff was in the possession of the premises through an employee of the name of West. During the evening of that day, one of the defendants — Hoag — went to the house occupied by West and wanted him to "go out prospecting." The next morning Hoag returned and wanted West to go off prospecting with him. West declined, and while they were standing talking, the other defendants — Haight, Dickson, and Wyman — came up in a light wagon. They pretended to be hunters; and having inquired for water for their horses, and being directed by West to a spring some four hundred yards from the house, they drove in that direction. West remained around the house during the day and until late in the afternoon, when he went about a hundred yards below to see about his saddle-horse. While he was gone, Dickson, who had been stationed in the vicinity, took possession of the house, and on West's return, was sitting in the door, and forbade his entering. On his way back, West was passed by Hoag, who was on horseback, and who rode hurriedly to the house, dismounted, and going to the kitchen door, said to West as he attempted to enter: "Young man, you can't get in here; the ranch is jumped." West passed to the other door, and Dickson forbade his entering there. On being asked what he would do if he did, Dickson replied: "You come in, and I will d—d quick show you what I will do." Dickson and Wyman were armed. The "jumpers" proceeded to load West's personal effects in the wagon and hauled them off, and as Hoag started with the wagon, he said to Dickson: "If any one comes fooling around here, shoot h—l out of him." West, deeming discretion the better part of valor, saddled his horse and rode away. Thereupon the plaintiff demanded of defendants restitution of the premises, which demand being denied, he commenced the present action against them for the detention thereof, and was properly awarded judgment in the Court below.

If the defendants have rights in the property in question, the law affords ample means for their assertion and vindication; but it does not sanction such proceedings as are disclosed by the record in this case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

JAMES CAMP ET AL. v. REBECCA C. GRIDER ET AL.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE AGAINST HOMESTEAD—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM — ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS—SUBSEQUENTLY ACQUIRED TITLE INHERES TO MORTGAGEE—PUBLIC LAND—HOMESTEAD—STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—
The title to public land subsequently acquired by a mortgagor, inures to the benefit of his prior mortgagee.

Sections 1475 and 1500, Code of Civil Procedure, must be so construed as to give effect, if possible, to both sections, and this can be done by limiting Section 1500 to all mortgages and liens other than liens or incumbrances on the homestead which liens and incumbrances on the homestead are, by Section 1475, specifically required to be presented for allowance against the estate.

The purpose of the Legislature in requiring the presentation of such liens and incumbrances on the homestead for allowance against the estate, was to preserve the homestead if possible.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District, in and for the County of Del Norte. HAYNES, J.

Action to foreclose a mortgage. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision in bank, a petition for rehearing was presented and denied.

William Gibbons and L. F. Cooper, for Appellant.

No action could be brought to enforce the lien of said mortgage against said homestead: 1. Until the claim secured by such mortgage has been presented as other claims against the estate; and, 2. Until it is shown that there are no funds in the estate to pay any portion of said claim. (C. C. P., § 1475.)

The foregoing section and Section 1500, which provides that a claim secured by mortgage need not be presented if recourse against any other property of the estate be waived, were in full force and effect at the time plaintiffs commenced their action; and if plaintiffs were to be controlled by the Code at all, the Code, as it stood at the time of commencing the action, controls them. If the law, as it stood at the time the contract was made, is to control, it would be much easier and pleasanter for appellant. (Harp v. Calahan, 46 Cal. 233.)

Section 1475, of the Code of Civil Procedure, directs the presentation of claims secured by mortgage only when a homestead has been duly set apart by the Court; it is special or particular in its provisions; it does not interfere with the operation of Section 1500; said last named section has a large field of usefulness reserved. "It is a familiar rule in construing statutes that where there are two laws upon the same subject, they must be so construed as to maintain both, if it can be done without destroying the evident intent and meaning of the latter Act."

The law does not favor a repeal by implication, and unless the former Act be referred to, or is clearly repugnant, to the provisions of the latter, both must stand. (Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 42.) Considering Sections 1475 and 1500 as two sections of the same Act, we contend that they must be so construed as to give some effect, if possible, to each section. (People v. Waterman, 31 Cal. 413; Langenour v. French, 34 id. 92.)

Section 1859, of the Code of Civil Procedure, directs that: "In the construction of a statute, the intention of the Legislature, and in the construction of the instrument, the intention of the parties is to be pursued if possible, and when a general and particular provision are inconsistent, the latter is paramount to the former. So a particular interest will control a general one that is inconsistent with it." (People v. Wells, 11 Cal. 338.)

It certainly is proper that Section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be construed to govern the procedure in the matter of enforcing claims against a homestead, and Section 1500 as applicable to all other secured claims. Both sections are thereby given force and effect: the province of neither is invaded. The note calls for interest at one per cent. per month, payable two years after date. After maturity, only legal interest can be charged.

James E. Murphy, for Respondent.

Was it necessary to present the note and mortgage to the administratrix for her approval or rejection before commencing suit to foreclose? We claim that no such presentation was necessary, provided that plaintiffs in their complaint expressly waived all recourse against any property belonging to the estate, as was done in this case.

Section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "No holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon, unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator, except in the following case; An action may be brought by any holder of a mortgage or lien to enforce the same against the property of the estate subject thereto, where all recourse against any other property of the estate is expressly waived in the complaint; but no counsel fee shall be recovered in such action unless such claim be so presented." This was the law when the note and mortgage were made, and though repealed July 1, 1874, it was re-enacted April 15, 1876, which was long before the mortgagor, Grider, died, and before the notice of the administratrix was published or this suit commenced.

At the time this contract was made there was no law of any kind requiring a mortgage against a homestead to be presented to the administrator. Section 1475, upon which the appellants rely, went into effect on the first day of July, 1874, and cannot be held to apply to this contract. To do this would be to give it a retroactive effect, which is unconstitutional, and also against an express provision of the Code of which this Section 1475 is a part. (Hibernia Savings and Loan Society v. Hayes, 56 Cal. 297.)

Section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure distinctly provides as follows: "An action may be brought by any holder of a mortgage or lien to enforce the same against the property of the estate subject thereto, where all recourse against any other property of the estate is expressly waived in the complaint; but no counsel fees shall be recovered in such action unless such claim be so presented."

We claim that there is no conflict between this section and Section 1475, but that both must be construed together, as conferring upon a mortgagee a double remedy, either of which he may pursue: 1. He may proceed under Section 1500, foreclosing only and expressly waiving all recourse against the estate; 2. He may prove up his claims before the administrator, as provided in Section 1475, Code of Civil Procedure, in which case, if the estate is sufficient to pay the mortgage, he gets it all, otherwise he takes his percentage out of the estate and forecloses for the residue. He can pursue either of these remedies. (Hibernia Savings and Loan Society v. Jordan, 5 Pac. Coast L. J. 381.) See also for an able exposition of this doctrine the opinion of Mr. Justice McKee, in the Hibernia Savings and Loan Society v. Hayes, 56 Cal. 300-303.

We contend that Section 1500, Code of Civil Procedure, should govern, because: 1. It is a later enactment than Section 1475, and must be held to modify and control the general section last named; 2. It is special in its character, designating in what manner liens may be collected without presentation to the administrator or executor, i. e., by expressly waiving all claim for a balance against the estate.

The mortgaged premises having been selected and filed on by the mortgagor as a homestead subsequent to the giving of the mortgage, and the same also having been by the order of the Probate Court all set aside to the widow as a homestead, it was no longer a part of the estate, and the administratrix, as such, had no interest therein.

The presentation of this claim to the administratrix for allowance or rejection would have been entirely a needless and an idle form, no action on part of the administratrix in the premises could have affected in any manner the estate; because the mortgaged premises were no longer a part of the estate; while the authority of an administrator is limited to the allowance or rejection of such claims as are against the estate. (Harp v. Calahan, 46 Cal. 283; Schadt v. Hepp, 45 id. 433; Whitmore v. S. F. Savings Union, 50 id. 145; Christy v. Dana, 42 id. 175.)

While Section 1475 provides that "If there be subsisting liens they must be presented as other claims against the estate." It must be remembered that this section applies to such liens against the homestead as are intended to be made a claim against the estate.

We ask the Court to carefully read the clause of Section 1475 immediately following the paragraph quoted, to wit: "If the funds of the estate be adequate to pay all claims against the estate, the claims so secured must be paid out of such funds. If the funds of the estate be not sufficient for that purpose, the claims so secured shall be paid proportionately with other claims allowed, and the liens or incumbrances on the homestead shall only be enforced against the homestead for any deficiency remaining after such payment."

It is respectfully submitted that if this section controls Section 1500, it would be an attempt to compel a mortgagee to proceed against property other than his security to collect his debt, and as plaintiff's contract was made more than two years before the passage of Section 1475, it could not under any consideration have a retroactive effect and compel the plaintiff in this case to abandon his security, and, in violation of his contract, to pursue an expensive, slow, and uncertain proceeding to collect his debt. (Code Civil. Pro., § 3.)

Ross, J.:

L. B. Grider, on the twenty-fifth of June, 1872, executed to the plaintiffs his promissory note for the sum of twenty-three hundred and twenty dollars. To secure its payment, he and his wife, Rebecca C. Grider, joined in the execution to the plaintiffs of a mortgage upon certain property, a part of which the husband was at the time cultivating, but the title to which was then in the Government of the United States. Grider afterwards, in the year 1873, obtained the title to the property. The title thus acquired by him inured to the benefit of his mortgagors. (Christy v. Dana, 42 Cal. 179; Kirkaldie v. Larrabee, 81 id. 445; Clark v. Baker, 14 id. 612.) Subsequently, to wit, on the twenty-first of October, 1874, Grider filed, pursuant to the statutes of the State, a declaration of homestead on the mortgaged premises, and on or about the twenty-sixth of February, 1878, died in the county of Del Norte, leaving as his sole heir his widow, the defendant Rebecca C. Grider. On the first of June thereafter letters of administration upon the estate of the deceased were duly granted by the Probate Court of said county to the said Rebecca, who duly qualified as administratrix and entered upon the discharge of the duties of her office. On the twenty-first of June, 1878, the Probate Court, after due proceedings had, set off the said premises to the said Rebecca as a homestead. The present action was instituted to foreclose the mortgage. The complaint does not aver, nor do the findings show, that the mortgage claim was ever presented to the administratrix for allowance, but the plaintiffs in their complaint allege that "they expressly waive any and all recourse against any other property of the estate of the said L. B. Grider, deceased, other than the premises described in said mortgage;" and they contend, that having thus waived all recourse against any other property of the estate, they are entitled to maintain this action without presentation of the mortgage claim, by virtue of Section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is, and since March 15, 1876, has been, as follows: "No holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon, unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator, except in the following case: An action by any holder of a mortgage or lien to enforce the same against the property of the estate subject thereto, where all recourse against any other property of the estate is expressly waived in the complaint."

The appellant, who was the defendant in the Court below, relies on Section 1475 of the same Code, which from March 24, 1874, to April 16, 1880, read thus: "If the homestead selected and recorded prior to the death of the decedent be returned in the inventory appraised at not exceeding five thousand dollars in value, or was previously appraised as provided in the Civil Code, and such appraised value did not exceed that sum, the Probate Court must, by order, set it off to the persons in whom title is vested by the preceding section. If there be subsisting liens, or incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate. If the funds of the estate be adequate to pay all claims allowed against the estate, the claims so secured must be paid out of such funds. If the funds of the estate be not sufficient for that purpose, the claims so secured shall be paid proportionally with other claims allowed, and the liens or incumbrances on the homestead shall only be enforced against the homestead for any deficiency remaining after such payment."

Both of the sections quoted were in force at the time of Grider's death and at the time of the commencement of the present action. They should be so construed, as to maintain both, if possible. This can be done by limiting the operation of Section 1500 to all mortgages and liens other than liens or incumbrances on the homestead, specifically required to be presented by Section 1475. (Gonzales v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 297; Langenour v. French, 34 id. 92.)

The purpose of the Legislature in providing, by Section 1475, that if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate, was undoubtedly to preserve the homestead if possible. That purpose is as clearly shown as can be by the language employed in the section: "If the funds of the estate be adequate to pay all claims allowed against the estate, the claims so secured must be paid out of such funds. If the funds of the estate be not sufficient for that purpose, the claims so secured shall be paid proportionally with other claims allowed;" and this is followed with the express declaration that "the liens or incumbrances on the homestead shall only be enforced against the homestead for any deficiency remaining after such payment."

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

THE PEOPLE v. SUMPTER E. DOGGETT.

EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER—MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS.—A defendant charged with crime has the right to have the jury instructed, that in determining whether or not he is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, his good reputation as to the traits involved in the charge, if proved, should be weighed as any other fact established, and that it may be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to his guilt.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. FREELON, J.

Davis Louderback and C. H. Parker, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

Ross, J.:

The Court below refused to give the following instruction requested by the defendant:

"The law at the outset clothes the defendant, in a criminal case involving the charge of murder, with the presumption of innocence; and when the proof tends to overthrow this presumption, and to fix upon such defendant the presumption of such a crime, the latter is permitted to support the original presumption of innocence by proof of good character for peace and quietness; and the good character of the defendant for peace and quietness is itself a fact in the case. It is a circumstance tending in a greater or less degree to establish his innocence. And therefore in the present case, the good character of the defendant, if proved to your satisfaction, is to be considered by you in connection with the other facts and circumstances of this case in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant." It is conceded by the Attorney General that the instruction so requested correctly states the law, and that unless the general charge of the Court covers the same point, the case must be sent back for a new trial.

The Attorney-General, however, claims that the effect of the instruction requested and refused, was embodied in the following portion of the Court's charge: "I think I have neglected to charge the jury in regard to character, under the decisions of our Supreme Court. And those decisions are the law of this State, and of this case. Good character, when proved, is a fact to be considered by the jury, just the same as any other fact in the case is to be considered as bearing upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. It has been held before, and is now held in other tribunals, that good character was only applicable in doubtful cases to turn the scale, when the jury was in doubt from the other evidence as to whether a defendant was guilty or not. And our Supreme Court has said, that it goes in with the mass of all the other proof, to be considered by the jury in connection with all the evidence in the case, as a substantive fact bearing, or tending to bear, upon the question of guilt or innocence."

Omitting some comments that might justly be made on this part of the charge, it is safe to say that it would be a favorable construction of it to hold, that by it the Court told the jury that the good character of the defendant, if proved, was a circumstance in the case for their consideration in making up their verdict. But that, as was held in People v. Bell, 49

Cal. 489, would not be adding anything to the mere fact of letting the testimony in regard to good character in.

The defendant had the right to have the jury instructed, that in determining whether or not he was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, his good reputation as to traits involved in the charge, if proved, should be weighed as any other fact established, and that it might be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. (People v. Bell, supra; People v. Raina, 45 Cal. 202; People v. Ashe, 44 id. 291.)

CHARLES W. DAVENPORT v. HIS CREDITORS.

CREDITOR NEED NOT NECESSARILY BE A JUDGMENT CREDITOR.—Under the Insolvency Act of May 4, 1852, it was not required that a creditor should be a judgment creditor, in order to give him a status in court to oppose the application of an insolvent for a discharge.

OPPOSITION BY CREDITOR TO DISCHARGE OF INSOLVENT.—The setting aside by the Court in which it was rendered of a judgment recovered by Van W. against D., on the ground that no notice was given to D.'s attorneys, does not prevent Van W. from opposing, as a creditor under the Insolvency Act of May 4, 1852, the application of D., under that Act, for a discharge, when the opposition filed by Van W. and the schedules filed by D. in the insolvency proceedings show that he is a creditor of D.; and it is error for the court, on motion, in the insolvency proceeding, to dismiss the opposition of Van W. on the ground that he has no status in Court on which to make such opposition.

TRIAL BY JURY OF ISSUE OF FRAUD.—Under Section 20 of the Insolvency Act of May 4, 1852, the issue upon the question of fraud on the part of the insolvent should have been tried by a jury.

APPEAL by Isaac S. Van Winkle, an opposing creditor, from an order dismissing his opposition to the discharge of the plaintiff, and also from the order of final discharge of the insolvent. HALSBY, J.

Proceeding in insolvency. The judgment against the insolvent referred to in the opinion was recovered after the commencement of the insolvency proceedings. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

Issue having been joined upon the question of fraud, it was the duty of the Court to summons a jury to try the issue. The matter could not be tried on affidavits or upon a motion. Independent of his judgment, the appellant was a creditor of insolvent in an amount exceeding forty thousand dollars, and upon his claim alone, not reduced to judgment, he could oppose a discharge. A creditor is not bound to be a judgment creditor. (Ins. Law of 1876, § 20.) The opposition of appellant to respondent's discharge alleges acts of fraud, and appellant was entitled to a trial. (Ins. Law of 1876, § 28.)

Du Brutz & Dickenson, for Respondent.

Van Winkle's claim, as a creditor, could be investigated at any time. Before he could oppose discharge, he must prove his claim, that a condition precedent; having no claim proven and not offering to prove any, he was not a creditor, and had no status in the Insolvent Court. (Ins. Law of 1876, § 1020.)

Before invoking the Insolvent Law, he should have submitted himself to it; which fully appears he never did. The motion to dismiss was properly made, and on proper grounds: Van Winkle appeared in response thereto, and made no effort to prove his claim.

Ross, J.:

More care on the part of counsel in regard to references made in briefs would save the Court much time and labor. In this case, the counsel for both sides refer to the Insolvency Act of 1876, as the one under which the proceedings were had, and, by number, to sections not found in that Act at all. The Act of 1876 has nothing to do with the case. The proceedings were had under the Act of May 4, 1852. Davenport filed in one of the late County Courts a petition praying to be adjudged an insolvent. Accompanying the petition was a schedule, in which Van Winkle was named as one of his creditors. Van Winkle's claim against Davenport was based on some partnership transactions between the parties. Within ten days after the appointment of an assignee of the insolvent's estate, Van Winkle filed in writing his opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, and an application for the revocation of the appointment of the assignee, on the ground of fraud alleged to have been committed by Davenport. In his opposition Van Winkle charged distinct acts constituting the alleged fraud on the part of Davenport, consisting, among other things, of the alleged fraudulent receipt and appropriation of a considerable portion of opponent's funds; and further charged that in an action between the parties in one of the then District Courts of the State, an account had been stated of the partnership affairs, by which it had been ascertained and found that there was a large indebtedness due from Davenport to opponent, for which judgment was entered. Davenport filed an answer, by which he put in issue the averments of fact contained in the opposition of Van Winkle. The judgment entered against Davenport in favor of Van Winkle was afterwards set aside by the Court in which it was entered, on the ground "that no notice was given" to Davenport's attorney, and subsequently Davenport moved in the insolvency Court to dismiss Van Winkle's application for the revocation of the appointment of the assignee and his opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, on the ground that he, Van Winkle, had "no status in Court on which to make such opposition." That motion was granted, and an order of discharge was subsequently entered.

The idea of the party making the motion, and of the Court in granting it, seems to have been that Van Winkle ceased to be a creditor of Davenport when the judgment entered in the District Court was set aside. But that was not at all so. If the facts stated in Van Winkle's opposition were true, he was a creditor; for in that it was distinctly charged that Davenport was indebted to him in the sum of seventeen thousand two hundred and eighty-one dollars, received by him in a fiduciary capacity. Besides, in the schedule filed by the petitioner himself, Van Winkle is named as one of his creditors. Issues having been raised upon the question of fraud on the part of the insolvent, it became the duty of the Court, by virtue of Section 20 of the Act of May 4, 1852, to summon a jury for the purpose of deciding on that accusation.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views here expressed.

GEORGE DOUGHERTY v. JACOB ROSENBERG ET AL.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS — AGREEMENT.—Agreement which may be performed within a year is not within the Statute of Frauds. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff being about to commence separate suits against R. (defendant's testator), B., and H., for the enforcement of certain assessment liens against each of their several lots of land owned by them respectively, R. verbally promised plaintiff that in consideration that the plaintiff would not bring the suit to enforce the lien against the lot owned by him, but would "altogether forbear" to bring such suit, and would commence and prosecute suits against B. and H. for the enforcement of the assessments against their lots respectively, and succeed in recovering final judgments in such suits against B. and H., he, the said R., would, upon such final recovery, pay to the plaintiff the amount of the assessment against the lot owned by him.

Held: Such agreement is not void under the provision of the Statute of Frauds requiring a writing for agreements that, by their terms are not to be performed within one year from the making thereof.

Id.—CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENT.—The agreement of the plaintiff was "altogether," not "always," to forbear, and an agreement to refrain altogether for an indefinite time is not within the operation of the statute.

Id.—The promise of the plaintiff was "altogether" to forbear to bring suit to foreclose the lien against the lot of R. until he should recover final judgments against B. and H., events which might occur within the year.

Id.—The statute does not declare void a contract which may not be performed within a year, or which is not likely to be performed within that period. It includes only agreements which, fairly and reasonably interpreted, do not admit of a valid execution within the year.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from the judgment of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
DWINELLE, J.

Action on contract. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court. After decision by Department No. 1, a petition for hearing in bank was filed and denied.

J. C. Bates, for Appellant.

The promise is not within Statute of Frauds. Section 3156, Subdivision 1, Hittell's Digest, is substantially the same as Section 1624, Civil Code, which provides for different cases. "An agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof," must be in writing, and subscribed by party to be charged.

Said section does not provide that a contract that can not be performed, or may not or is not likely to be performed within a year, but one that by its terms is not to be performed within one year. Parsons, in his work on Contracts, vol. 8, pp. 35, 36, says the rule may be thus stated: "If the executory promise be capable of entire performance within one year, it is not within the clause of statute." The following cases from this Court are somewhat in point, and those from other States are very strong in our favor: Feeny v. Daly, 8 Cal. 85, and cases cited; Barringer v. Warden, 12 id. 311; Stark v. Raney, 18 id. 622; McLaren v. Hutchinson, 22 id. 187; Kent v. Kent, 62 N. Y. 564; Moore v. Fox, 10 Johns. 243; S. C., 6 Am. Dec. 338; Plempton v. Lea, 26 Tex. 614; Blanchard v. Weeks, 34 Vt. 592; Rogers v. Brightman, 10 Wis. 65.)

James M. Taylor and Cope & Boyd, for Respondents.

This agreement is void under the Statute of Frauds. It is an entire agreement. One part of it can not be separated from the other. All parts of it must stand or fall together. One of its covenants or stipulations is, that plaintiff shall "always forbear to bring or commence any suit or proceeding to enforce said lien," and this stipulation, if valid, binds plaintiff's representatives as well as himself. (2 Para. on Cont. 531-533; 1 id. 127 and 131.)

It is a continuing obligation to always forbear. The Statute of Frauds in force on the twentieth day of May, 1870, the time said agreement is alleged to have been made, provided as follows: "Section 12. In the following cases, every agreement shall be void, unless such agreement or some note or memorandum thereof, expressing the consideration, be in writing, and subscribed by the party charged therewith: Every agreement that by the terms is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof." (Statutes of 1850, p. 267; Brown on Stat. Frauds, 509.)

It will be observed that this statute is different from the English statutes, and the statutes of several of the States. Those statutes provide in effect that no action shall be brought upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof. (Brown on Stat. Frauds, 503-538.)

Our statute makes the agreement void. The statute affects the entire agreement between the parties—not a part of it. If any part of it is not to be performed within a year, the entire agreement is void.

This is the natural import of the language used in the statute, and the Court will not, by a forced and unnatural construction, compel the defendants to perform those stipulations of the agreement which are to be performed on their part when the stipulations of the agreement which are to be performed by the plaintiff are vitiated by the statute and can not be enforced.

If plaintiff, contrary to his agreement, had brought suit, or should hereafter bring suit, to enforce the alleged lien, defendants could not set up the agreement to always forbear to bring such suit, because it is void.

In the case of Broadwell v. Getman (2 Denio, 87), the defendant could have performed within a year all the stipulations of the agreement to be performed on his part; but the plaintiff who sought to enforce the agreement against the defendant, was not to perform all its stipulations on his part within the year, and in the opinion of the Court, at page 89, it is said: "As this agreement was made in January, 1841, and could not be completely executed until the close of the season of 1842, it was within the statute, and not being in writing and signed, was void. Upon this point it would seem difficult to raise a doubt upon the terms of the statute. An agreement is an entire thing, and where that can not be completely executed, on both sides, until more than a year has elapsed, the case falls within the express words of the enactment. It is also within the spirit."

The following authorities are applicable to the question under consideration: Main v. Walters, 5 East. 10 (new ed., Vol. 3, p. 21.) (In this case the word agreement is construed to mean, "that which is to show what each party is to do or perform.") Saunders v. Wakefield, 4 Barn. & Ald. 603; Sears v. Brink, 3 Johns. 215; S. C., 3 Am. Dec. 475; Stephens v. Winn, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 372; Henderson v. Johnson, 6 Ga. 391; Taylor v. Pratt, 3 Wis. 695; Pitkin v. Long Island R. R. Co., 2 Barb. Ch. 230, 232; Roadwell v. Getman, 2 Denio (N. Y.), 87; Frary v. Sterling, 99 Mass. 461; Lockwood v. Barnes, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 128; S. C., 38 Am. Dec. 694; Holloway v. Hampton, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 415; Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 109, 110; Patten v. Hicks, 43 id. 509, 511; Swift v. Swift, 46 id. 286.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The complaint alleges that plaintiff, being about to commence separate suits against Michael Reese (defendant's testator), J. W. Brittain, and D. V. B. Henarie for the enforcement of certain assessment liens against each of three several lots of land owned by said persons respectively. Reese (on the twentieth day of May, 1870) verbally promised plaintiff, that in consideration that plaintiff would not bring the suit to enforce the lien against the lot owned by him, but would "altogether forbear" to bring such suit, and would commence and prosecute suits against Brittain and Henarie for the enforcement of said assessments against their lots respectively, and succeed in recovering final judgments in said suits against Brittain and Henarie, he, the said Reese, would, upon such final recovery in said suits, pay to the plaintiff the amount of said assessment on the lot so owned by him, to wit, the sum of nine hundred and ninety-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents, and interest thereon, etc.

The defendants demurred. The Court below sustained the demurrer, and, plaintiff declining to amend, rendered the final judgment in favor of defendants, from which plaintiff has appealed. It is claimed by respondents that the agreement set forth in the complaint is void under the statute of frauds, in force when the agreement was made. The twelfth section of the statute reads: "In the following cases every agreement shall be void, unless such agreement, or some note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged therewith: 1. Every agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof." (Stats. 1850, p. 267.)

It is urged, that if any part of the agreement is not to be performed within a year, the entire agreement is void; that where, by its terms, it can not be completely performed "on both sides" (Roadwell v. Getman, 2 Denio, 89) until more than a year has elapsed, the case falls within the express words of the enactment. And — applying these principles to the case — it is said one of the promises of plaintiff is, by its terms, not to be performed within the year, to wit, the promise "always to forbear" to bring the suit. But the agreement of plaintiff was "altogether," not "always," to forbear, and an agreement to refrain altogether for an indefinite time is not within the operation of the statute. (Browne on the Statute of Frauds, 279.) As we construe the agreement, however, the promise of plaintiff was altogether to forbear to bring suit to foreclose the lien against the lot of Reese until he should recover final judgments in the actions against Brittain and Henarie — events which might occur within the year. Such was the evident intent of the parties. There is nothing in their language to indicate they intended, in case Reese did not pay when final judgments should be entered against Brittain and Henarie, the plaintiff should further forbear. It can not be said, therefore, that by its terms the contract was not to be performed within the year. The statute does not declare void a contract which may not be performed within a year, or which is not likely to be performed within that period. It includes only agreements which, fairly and reasonably interpreted, do not admit of a valid execution within the year. (Browne on Stat. of Fraud, 273.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to overrule the demurrer.

DISMISSAL OF APPEAL — AFFIDAVIT — VERBAL STIPULATION.

APPEAL from Superior Court of Butte County. Motion to dismiss appeal on ground of failure to file transcript. Affidavits were filed by the appellant tending to show a verbal stipulation, extending the time within which the transcript might be filed. Counter-affidavits were filed by the respondents.

The COURT: .

The motion to dismiss the appeal must prevail. If it be admitted that affidavits can be considered which tend to show a verbal stipulation to extend the time to file the transcript, there are in this case affidavits more numerous and pointed to the effect that no such stipulation was made.

S. P. TAYLOR v. W. S. HUGHES, JUSTICE, ET AL.

CERTIORARI — FISH COMMISSIONERS — JUSTICE'S COURT.

APPLICATION for writ of certiorari to review a judgment of a Justice's Court, and adjudging the defendant guilty of a violation of Section 637, Penal Code.

The petition was as follows:

"Your petitioner would respectfully show to this Honorable Court that on or about the sixteenth day of May, 1882, a complaint was filed and a warrant issued out of the Justice's Court of the Township of San Rafael, Marin County, State of California, whereof W. S. Hughes is the Justice, against S. P. Taylor. That the said complaint charged your petitioner with having committed the crime of misdemeanor. That the act of your petitioner so constituting the alleged misdemeanor as charged in the said complaint is as follows: Said S. P. Taylor, then and there being the owner of a dam which obstructs the waters of Papermill Creek in Marin County, California, failed to construct and keep in repair sufficient fishways on such dam; the said S. P. Taylor having theretofore, to wit, on the fifth day of May, 1882, been requested to construct and keep in repair sufficient fishways on such dam by the Fish Commissioners of the State of California. That your petitioner demurred to and moved to dismiss the said complaint upon the grounds that the acts charged in said complaint did not constitute a public offense and that more than one offense is charged in said complaint. That the court thereupon overruled the said demurrer and denied the said motion to dismiss the said complaint, and thereafter such proceedings were had that the defendant was convicted of the crime of misdemeanor as charged in the said complaint. That thereafter, to wit, on the seventeenth day of June, your petitioner moved in arrest of judgment, on the grounds that the said Justice's Court had no jurisdiction in the premises; that the complaint filed herein does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, and that more than one offense is charged in said complaint. That the Court thereupon denied said motion in arrest of judgment, and thereafter, to wit, on the seventeenth day of June, 1882, sentenced your petitioner to pay a fine of fifty dollars. That the defendant, your petitioner, thereafter duly appealed to the Superior Court of Marin County on a statement of the case from the said order and judgment of the said Justice's Court overruling the said demurrer to the said complaint, and from the order denying defendant's motion to dismiss the said action, and from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, and thereafter such proceedings were had that on the second day of October, 1882, the said Superior Court affirmed the judgment of the said Justice's Court, and a remittitur was issued forthwith to the said Justice's Court, and directing said Court to execute its said judgment. That the said Justice's Court is about forthwith to execute its said judgment. That your petitioner shows that the said Justice's Court had not any jurisdiction to try said cause or render judgment against the defendant, nor to enforce the same, for the reason that the said act so charged in the said complaint, and of which your petitioner was convicted as aforesaid, constitutes no misdemeanor or public offense, or any offense known to the law. That the said Justice's Court of the Township of San Rafael, County of Marin, exercising judicial functions, exceeded its jurisdiction in overruling defendant's demurrer to the said complaint, in denying defendant's motion to dismiss said action, and in denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, and in proceeding with the trial of said matter, and in convicting the defendant of a misdemeanor in doing the act charged in the complaint, and in now proceeding to the enforcement of its said judgment. That there is no further appeal in said cause from the acts of said Justice's Court; and there is not any plain, speedy, or adequate remedy to the defendant, your petitioner, other than by writ of review. Therefore your petitioner respectfully prays your Honorable Supreme Court of the State of California, under its seal, to issue to G. W. Davis, Esq., County Clerk of said Marin County, and to the Justice's Court of San Rafael Township, County of Marin, State aforesaid, and to the Justice, W. S. Hughes, thereof, a writ of review directing the said Justice's Court through its proper officers and G. W. Davis, County Clerk, to transmit and certify to your Honorable Supreme Court the judgment roll and records, and a transcript of the records and proceedings, including the statement on appeal in the said action of the People of the State of California against S. P. Taylor, and prays that your Honorable Court will so order in the premises as to it may seem lawful and meet, and your petitioner will ever pray.

THE SANTA CRUZ GAP TURNPIKE JOINT STOCK COMPANY v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE COUNTY OF SANTA CLARA.

MANDAMUS — CERTIORARI — PROHIBITION — PREROGATIVE — WRIT — RES ADJUDICATA.— When, upon issue of law or fact joined, a Superior Court has adjudicated the merits of an application for mandamus or other prerogative writ, such adjudication is as conclusive (except on appeal) upon this Court as it is upon another Superior Court.

ID.— ID.— ID.— ID.— ID.— APPEAL.— In issuing such writs the Supreme Court and the several Superior Courts are peers — each having original jurisdiction; whether the judgment of each is final, it is not necessary in this case to decide.

Semble: An appeal will lie in such cases from the judgment of the Superior Court.

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus.

D. B. Moody, for Plaintiff.

S. F. Leib and J. H. Campbell, for Defendant.

Rule 28 of this Court provides: "In any application made to the Court for a writ of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, procedendo, or for any prerogative writ to be issued in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, and for which an application might have been lawfully made to some other Court in the first instance, the affidavit or petition shall, in addition to the necessary matter requisite by the rules of law to support the application, also set forth the circumstances which, in the opinion of the applicant, render it proper that the writ should issue originally from this Court, and not from such other Court—the sufficiency or insufficiency of such circumstances so set forth in that behalf will be determined by the Court in awarding or refusing the application. In case any Court, Judge, or other officer, or any board or other tribunal, in the discharge of duties of a public character, be named in the application as respondent, the affidavit or petition shall also disclose the name or names of the real party or parties, if any, in interest, or whose interest would be directly affected by the proceedings, and in such case it shall be the duty of the applicant obtaining an order for any such writ, to serve or cause to be served, upon such party or parties in interest, a true copy of the affidavit or petition, and of the writ issued thereon, in like manner as the same is required to be served upon the respondent named in the application and proceedings, and to produce and file in the office of the Clerk of this Court the like evidence of such service."

It may be that this Court would consider as a "circumstance" which would induce it to issue a prerogative writ, the fact that the Superior Court had refused to take jurisdiction of, or to consider, the application, upon the merits. But when, upon issue of law, or fact joined, a Superior Court has adjudicated the merits of the application, such adjudication is as conclusive (except on appeal) upon this Court as it is upon another Superior Court. In issuing writs of mandamus, certiorari, and prohibition, the Supreme Court and the several Superior Courts are peers. Both the Supreme Court and the Superior Court has original jurisdiction. (Const., Art. vi, §§ 4 and 5.) Whether the judgment of each is final—in view of the language of the sections referred to—it is not here necessary to decide. Seemle, an appeal will lie in such cases from the judgment of the Superior Court. (Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 269.)

The defendant in the proceeding now here pleads that "heretofore and before the commencement of this proceeding the plaintiff commenced the same proceedings, for the same purpose, in the Superior Court of the County of Santa Clara, and on the eighteenth day of October, A. D. 1882, said proceedings in said Superior Court resulted in a judgment of said Superior Court, by it then duly given and made, that plaintiff was not entitled to such relief, and that the application therefor be denied, a true and correct certified copy of which proceeding and judgment in said Superior Court are hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A.'" The exhibit is made a part of the answer herein, and contains a copy of the complaint or petition in the Superior Court. It is not disputed that such complaint or petition is in all respects like the complaint filed in the present proceeding. The "exhibit" further shows that the defendant in the Superior Court (defendant here), by motion, in the nature of demurrer, moved the said Superior Court to vacate the writ, upon the ground that the complaint or petition did not state facts upon which the same should issue; further, that the motion or demurrer having been sustained by the Superior Court, with leave to amend the complaint or petition, plaintiff, in open Court, refused to amend, and thereupon a final judgment was entered by the Superior Court that the writ be denied, and in favor of defendants for their costs, etc.

If an appeal lies from the judgment of the Superior Court, the plaintiff has "a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." (C. C. P., § 1036.) If an appeal does not lie from the judgment of the Superior Court, the answer of defendant is a plea of a former adjudication, between the same parties, in a Court of competent jurisdiction.

The cause will be set down for trial upon the issue of fact raised by the answer. The fact will be determined by inspection of the record, but, as yet, the existence has been alleged, not proved.

B. J. RHODES, ASSIGNEE, ETC., v. FRANCOIS E. SPENCER, SUPERIOR JUDGE, ETC.

NEW TRIAL — VERDICT IN EQUITY CASE — CONVEYANCE IN FRAUD OF CREDITORS — PRACTICE.—In an action by the assignee of an insolvent to set aside a conveyance, a jury was impaneled to whom the issue of fraud was submitted, leaving certain other issues to be disposed of by the Court; and the trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff on the issues submitted. Afterwards, on motion of the defendant, the Court made an order for a new trial of the issues submitted to the jury; and refused to proceed with the trial of the remaining issues; and an application was made to this Court for writ of mandamus to compel him to proceed.

Held: The facts set forth in the petition do not entitle plaintiff to the relief prayed for.

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus to Francis E. Spencer, Superior Judge of Santa Clara County.

The plaintiff was assignee of M. Farrell, an insolvent debtor, and brought his action in the lower Court to set aside an assignment made by Farrell to one William P. Dougherty of a tract of land used as a brick-yard, "together with the implements, material, plant, stock in trade, and live-stock," used in connection therewith. On the trial special issues were, by consent, submitted to the jury, covering the issues as to fraud and notice on the part of Dougherty, and also with reference to the number of bricks received by him; and the remaining issues, referring to the value of the personal property and the damages suffered by the plaintiff, were left to be disposed of by the Court. A verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and thereupon the remaining issues were set for hearing by the Court, but before the hearing a new trial of the issues submitted to the jury was granted by the Court on the motion of the defendant.

Vincent Neal, for the Plaintiff.

Only one motion for a new trial can be made in an action, and that can only be made after all the issues have been heard. The order granting a new trial was therefore a nullity. (Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126.)

No brief on file for Defendant.

The Court:

We think the facts set forth in the petition do not entitle the plaintiff to the relief prayed for.

JAMES PHELAN v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

CONSTRUCTION OF ORDER OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS — SIDEWALK — STREET IMPROVEMENT — SAN FRANCISCO — ACCEPTANCE OF STREET IMPROVEMENTS.— Section 22 of Chapter iv. of Order 697 of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco provides that: "No street or portion of a street shall be accepted by the Board of Supervisors except upon the report of the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways and the committee of the Board of Supervisors on streets, wharves, grades, and squares, showing that such street or portion of a street is sewered with brick and paved and curbed with stone." Conceding that for certain purposes the sidewalk is a portion of the street, this order was not intended to require the sidewalk as well as the roadway to be sewered with brick and paved and curbed with stone.

Id.— Each requirement has reference to the object to be accomplished, that is, the sewer to be of brick, the roadway paved, and the sidewalk curbed.
Id.— The Board of Supervisors in accepting the street determined that the respective objects had been accomplished.

APPEAL by the defendant from the judgment of the Twenty-third District Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order of the Superior Court of said city and county denying a motion for a new trial. THORNTON, J., of District Court; WILSON, J., of Superior Court.

Action upon contract to recover judgment against the City and County of San Francisco for street improvements made on a portion of one of its accepted streets.

Section 22 of Chapter iv. of Order 697, referred to in the opinion, is as follows: "No street or portion of a street shall be accepted by the Board of Supervisors except upon the report of the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways and the committee of the Board of Supervisors on streets, wharves, grades, and squares, showing that such street or portion of a street is sewered with brick and paved and curbed with stone; and no street-crossing shall be accepted except on like report showing that such crossing is so sewered, curbed, and paved with stone, and sidewalks and angular corners thereof, and suitable crosswalks, manhole and cover, cesspools, and culverts constructed. The acceptance of a street, part or portion of a street, or street-crossing, shall be by resolution."

After the work was performed the Board of Supervisors duly accepted it. The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. F. Cowdery, City and County Attorney, for Appellant.

J. M. Wood and J. C. Bates, for Respondent.

THE COURT:

Conceding that for certain purposes the sidewalk is a portion of the street, we can not say that Section 22 of Chapter 4, of Order 697 of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, was intended to require the sidewalk, as well as the roadway, to be "sewered with brick and paved and curbed with stone." As we understand, the sewer was to be of brick, and the roadway was to be paved, and the sidewalk curbed. These requirements appear to have been complied with. Each requirement was to have reference to the object to be accomplished; and the board, in accepting the street, determined that the respective objects had been accomplished.

Judgment and order affirmed.

B. STRUEVEN v. HIS CREDITORS.

EFFECT OF INSOLVENCY ACT OF 1880 ON THE PROCEDURE IN CASES INSTITUTED UNDER ACT OF 1852 — STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION — PLEADING — INSOLVENCY.

— The Insolvency Act of 1852 under which the proceedings were commenced did not require the answer of the petitioner to the opposition of a creditor to be verified. Prior to the filing of the answer to the opposition, the Insolvency Act of 1880, which requires the verification of the pleadings, had gone into effect. Held: The answer to the opposition should have been verified.

ID.—EFFECT OF PROVISIO OR SAVING CLAUSE IN REPEALING CLAUSE OF ACT.—

The provision in Section 68 of the Act of 1880, that the Act is not to affect any case previously instituted, is not intended to keep alive the former mode of procedure in conflict with the Act.

OBJECTION FOR THE FIRST TIME IN SUPREME COURT.—The objection that the opposing creditor had not proved his claim before filing his opposition can not be taken for the first time in the Supreme Court.

APPEAL by Donnelly, Dunne & Co., opposing creditors, from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco granting a discharge. HALSEY, J.

Proceeding in insolvency. On the seventeenth of March, 1880, the respondent Strueven filed his petition in the Superior Court asking a discharge from his debts. On the fifth of May, 1880, A. J. Donnelly and others, creditors appealing, filed their opposition in writing, alleging divers frauds, committed by petitioner, for which they claimed he should be denied his discharge. This opposition was verified. On May 14, 1880, the petitioner filed an answer to the opposition consisting of a general denial not verified, which appellants moved to strike out, and afterwards, on the twenty-second of July, the petitioner elected to file an amended answer to the opposition. This answer was not under oath.

On the twenty-sixth of July, 1880, the opposing creditors gave notice of motion to strike out this last answer, because it was not verified, and to dismiss the petition for want of answer, and on the sixteenth of August, 1880, the Court denied the motion to strike out the amended answer, to which the opposing creditors took their bill of exceptions, which sets forth the foregoing facts. On the twentieth of August, 1880, the Court entered an order discharging the petitioner from his debts, and from this order an appeal is taken.

William Matthews, for Appellants.

The Court erred in refusing to grant the motion to strike out. The Insolvent Act, approved April 16, 1880, had taken effect June 15th. Section 50, of that Act, provides that the opposition and the answer to it shall be verified. (Statutes of 1880, p. 330.) This provision concerned procedure and the remedy merely, and therefore operated upon the pending case, and governed all pleadings filed after its passage. (Donner v. Palmer, 23 Cal. 40.)

The Court below seemed to think that the clause in Section 68 of the Act (Statutes 1880, 334), providing that the repeal of previous insolvent laws, "shall in no manner invalidate or affect any case in insolvency," then pending, in some way so acted to continue in force the repealed Act as to the pleadings in this case. It is submitted that no such result follows. Such a construction would give us two systems of procedure on foot at the same time.

The word "affect," as used in the section referred to, is a repetition of the word "invalidate," and is used in the sense in which it is employed in Sections 8 and 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, under the previous insolvent law, the opposing creditors were entitled to an answer under oath. The Act itself was silent on the matter. (Insol. Act., § 20, Statutes of 1852, p. 73.) The Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, furnished the rule to guide the Court. (C. C. P., § 4.) Under it, answers to all verified pleadings must be verified. (C. C. P., § 446.)

H. Lowenthal, for Respondent.

This answer, or "plea," the appellants moved to strike out, and for a dismissal of all proceedings, which motion was denied. This ruling we say was proper. The record shows that appellants were not creditors of insolvent. Nor does the record show that they have proved their alleged claim, as required by said Act. This we say was necessary before they could contest the insolvent's discharge. (See Section 10, Cowdery's Insolvent L. of Act 1852.) Appellant should have applied for leave to intervene in the proceedings. (4 Cal. 337.) The Insolvent Act of 1880 in no manner affected this case, the opposition having been filed prior to the passage thereof. (See Section 68, Act 1880.) The statutes of 1852 did not provide that the opposition to a discharge should be by a verified or any petition; all that it said upon the subject is, "That any creditor (meaning of course a creditor who has proven his claim as in § 10 provided) should deem it necessary to oppose it on the ground of some fraud having been committed by the insolvent debtor, he shall, within ten days thereafter, lay before the Court which has already taken cognizance of the case, his written opposition, stating the several grounds, etc., whereupon in case of accusation of fraud, after having received the debtor's answer, the court shall order a jury summoned, etc., for the purpose of deciding on the said accusation." (See § 20 of said act.)

And we say that an oral plea in open court received by the judge thereof, and entered of record is all that was requisite under said statute, as no form of pleadings is prescribed.

And we say that inasmuch as the statute is silent as to the manner in which the Court is to receive the answer, it is reasonable to presume from the language of the section that the answer or plea may be orally received by the court, and ordered to be recorded by the clerk, or the same may be reduced to writing and handed to the Court to be filed of record; such has been the rule laid down in all insolvency cases that ever came before the courts since the repeal of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The above proposition is sustained in case of D. B. Sanborn v. His Creditors, 37 Cal. Reports, p. 611. Again: The petition of appellants contains charges of fraud against the respondent, which, if admitted, might subject him to criminal prosecution, and we say, on that ground, the insolvent, even if the statute required a verified answer, could avail himself of his right to file an unverified plea. (See Section 446, Code Civil Procedure.)

The Court:

The insolvency proceedings were commenced under the Act of 1852. That Act did not require the answer of the petitioner to the opposition of a creditor to be verified. Prior to the filing of the answer in this case, the Legislature had passed the Insolvent Act of 1880, which requires verification of the pleadings. This requirement concerns procedure merely, and governs pleadings filed after its passage. According to Section 68 of the Act of 1880, that Act is not to affect any case previously instituted; but there is no indication of an intention to keep alive the former mode of procedure in conflict with the Act. The court erred in dismissing the opposition and in making a decree of discharge.

The objection that the opposing creditor had not proved his claim before filing his opposition is taken too late, when taken in this Court for the first time.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

SETTLEMENT OF STATEMENT ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—Mandamus to a Superior Judge to compel him to settle plaintiff's statement on motion for new trial. The statement did not set forth any of the evidence, but simply referred to the reporter's notes and directed that they should be inserted in full.

E. W. McGraw, for Plaintiff, cited C. C. P., §§ 274, 648; 2 Hittell's Codes, § 10,648; 3 id., § 10,274; Kimball v. Semple, 31 Cal. 659; Hess v. Winder, 30 id. 349; Loucks v. Edmondson, 18 id. 203.

McAllister & Bergin, for Defendant.

The COURT:

This is an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the Hon. T. K. Wilson, a Superior Judge of the City and County of San Francisco, to settle plaintiff's statement on motion for a new trial. When the statement was served on the attorneys for the adverse parties, and before any amendments thereto were proposed, defendants "protested against the pretended statement on motion for a new trial which had been served upon them, that it is utterly insufficient and fails to set forth any proper statement of the case. It merely amounts to a reference to the reporter's notes, without incorporating said notes in the proposed statement." The learned Judge, in denying the motion to settle the so-called statement, placed his refusal on the ground that "the proposed statement is wholly insufficient, as a proposed statement on motion for a new trial, and must be disregarded." We think the motion to settle the proposed statement was properly denied. It does not set forth any of the evidence in the case, but simply refers to the reporter's notes. Its language is: "All of which" (the facts in the case) "will more fully appear from said statement of the facts which reads as follows (insert reporter's notes in full)." Such a statement is not a proper one, and the Court may disregard it. (People v. Getty, 49 Cal. 584; People v. Sprague, 53 id. 422.)

THE PEOPLE v. ALVINO F. PICO.

LARCENY — EVIDENCE — VARIANCE AS TO SEX.—A variance as to the sex of the animal charged to be stolen, is immaterial.

ID.—ID.—ID.—HORSE — DEFINITION.—At common law the word "horse" was used in its generic sense, and was held to include all animals of the horse species, whether male or female; and the Legislature of this State, in using the word "mare" (in Sec. 487, Penal Code), did not intend to modify or change the common law rule, but inserted the word, possibly, for more definiteness.

ID.—ID.—INSANITY — GENERAL REPUTATION.—Insanity is not to be proven by general reputation.

ID.—ID.—ID.—HEARSAY.—For the purpose of showing the insanity of the defendant, a witness testified to his throwing away a suit of clothes; but on cross-examination it appeared that the witness had no personal knowledge of the clothes being thrown away, or of the reason therefor; he knew of the circumstances only by hearsay. Held: The testimony was properly stricken out.

ID.—ID.—ID.—OPINION OF FAMILY.—Evidence that the defendant was always treated by his family as an imbecile or an insane person is inadmissible.

ID.—ID.—ID.—OPINION OF ACQUAINTANCES.—Witnesses were examined for the purpose of showing the sanity of defendant, and from their examination it appeared that they were acquainted with him and had more or less opportunity for acquiring knowledge on which to base an opinion.

Held: The witnesses having shown themselves, respectively, to have been acquainted with the defendant, the determination of the question as to whether that acquaintance was of an intimate character was within the discretion of the Court below, with the exercise of which, there being no abuse, this Court will not interfere.

ID.—ID.—ID.—INSTRUCTION—LARCENY—DEFINITION—FELONIOUS INTENT.—The Court instructed the jury: "It is further claimed that although the jury may believe the defendant took the animal in question; yet, unless at the time of such taking he then intended to steal the same, he must be acquitted. I instruct you that if the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and without the knowledge and consent of the owner of this animal, or of any person who could give such consent, or as a mere trespasser and wrong-doer, drove away said horse, not then intending to steal the same, but that thereafter, while still in such wrongful possession of said horse, he feloniously sold the same and appropriated the proceeds of such sale to his own use, such taking, sale, and appropriation constitute, upon the part of the defendant, the crime of larceny as fully and completely as though such felonious intention had existed in the defendant at the first taking of such animal." Held: The instruction was correct.

ID.—ID.—ID.—INSANITY—DEFINITION—REASONABLE DOUBT.—The Court instructed the jury: "The standard of accountability is this: Had the party sufficient mental capacity to appreciate the character and quality of the act? Did he know and understand that it was a violation of the rights of another, and in itself wrong; did he know that it was prohibited by the laws of the land, and that its commission would entail punishment and penalties upon himself? If he had the capacity thus to appreciate the character and comprehend the possible or probable consequence of his act, he is responsible to the law for the act he has committed and is to be judged accordingly. The defense of insanity is a defense which may be and sometimes is resorted to, in cases in which the proof of the overt act is so full and complete that any other means of avoiding conviction, and escaping punishment, seems hopeless. While, therefore, this was a defense to be weighed fairly, fully, and justly, and when satisfactorily established must recommend itself to the sense of humanity and justice of the jury, they are to examine it with care, lest an ingenious counterfeit of this mental infirmity shall furnish immunity to guilt." "In all other matters excepting that of insanity, defendant is entitled to every reasonable doubt." The Court also refused to give instructions embodying the converse of these propositions.

Held: The instructions were correct, and it therefore follows that the instructions asked for and refused were incorrect.

ID.—ID.—INSANITY.—When a defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction it is not error for the Court, where it entertains no doubt as to his sanity, to refuse to submit the issue of insanity to a jury, under Sec. 1868, Penal Code.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Santa Clara. BELDEN, J.

A. W. Crandell, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, for Respondent.

MYRICK, J.:

The defendant was by information accused of grand larceny, in that he "did feloniously take and steal one roan horse," the property of one S. P. Stockton. The plea was not guilty. The defendant was convicted as charged.

1. It appears from the bill of exceptions that on the trial the people gave evidence tending to prove that the defendant took from the Normal School grounds in San Jose, a roan mare, harness and buggy, belonging to S. P. Stockton, and after using the same in the public streets of San Jose, and declaring that the mare belonged to one Archer, left the harness and buggy by the side of a street, and sold the mare for ten dollars and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. The defendant moved the Court to instruct the jury to acquit him, on the ground of variance, in that he was charged with stealing a horse, while the proof showed the animal taken was a mare.

This was refused. Although the Courts of some of the States have held, under a statute similar to that of this State (Section 487, subdivision 3, Penal Code), where both words "horse" and "mare" are used, the proof must agree with the indictment as to the sex of the animal, yet, as at common law the word "horse" was used in its generic sense, and was held to include all animals of the horse species, whether male or female, we are of opinion that the Legislature of this State, in using the word "mare," did not intend to modify or change the common law rule, but inserted the word possibly for more definiteness.

2. The defendant introduced evidence tending to prove that he was insane before, at, and after the taking, and at the time of the trial. No suggestion was made by counsel then or at any time before or during the trial, that defendant was not then in a condition to be tried. The District Attorney, during the trial, inquired of counsel for defendant if he asserted that defendant was then insane, to which one of the defendant's attorneys replied that they did not, and the other stated that they claimed he was at the time of the alleged offense and still was insane. The bill of exceptions states that, "it did not then or at any time during the trial appear to the Court that there was any doubt that defendant was not sane." The defendant's attorney asked a witness: "What do you say as to his general reputation, whether sane or insane?" An objection was sustained. Insanity is not to be proven by general reputation. The ruling was correct.

3. For the purpose of showing the insanity of the defendant, a witness testified to his throwing away a suit of clothes. On cross-examination it appeared that the witness had no personal knowledge of the clothes being thrown away, or of the reason therefor—he knew of the circumstance only by hearsay. This testimony was, on motion, stricken out. It needs no authority, save well-known principles, to show the correctness of this ruling.

4. A witness was asked if the defendant was always treated by his family as an imbecile or an insane person. Objection to this was sustained. This ruling was correct. How he was treated by his family would not tend to prove insanity; they may have been mistaken as to the condition of the subject and as to their mode of treatment; besides, the answer would be but the opinion of one person based on the opinions of others.

5. Persons were examined as witnesses on behalf of the people for the purpose of showing the sanity of defendant. Their examination showed that they were acquainted with him, and had more or less opportunity for acquiring knowledge on which was to base an opinion. The opinions of these witnesses were objected to on the ground that they had not shown themselves intimate acquaintances of the defendant. The witnesses having shown themselves respectively to have been acquainted with the defendant, the determination of the question as to whether that acquaintance was of an intimate character was within the discretion of the Court below, with the exercise of which, there being no abuse, this Court will not interfere.

6. The Court instructed the jury that the misdescription as the sex of the animal was immaterial, and was no variance. Also, as follows: "It is further claimed that although the jury may believe the defendant took the animal in question, yet unless at the time of such taking he then intended to steal the same he must be acquitted. I instruct you that if the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully, and without the knowledge and consent of the owner of this animal, or of any person who could give such consent, but as a mere trespasser and wrong-doer drove away said horse, not then intending to steal the same, but that thereafter, while still in such wrongful possession of said horse, he feloniously sold the same and appropriated the proceeds of such sale to his own use, such taking, sale, and appropriation constitute, upon the part of the defendant, the crime of larceny as fully and completely as though such felonious intention had existed in the defendant at the first taking of such animal."

"It is further claimed on the part of the defendant that if he did in fact take, sell, and appropriate the proceeds of said property as claimed by the prosecution, he is not to be held criminally accountable for so doing by reason of his insanity at the time of such appropriation and taking.

"The standard of accountability is this: Had the party sufficient mental capacity to appreciate the character and quality of the act? Did he know and understand that it was a violation of the rights of another, and in itself wrong? Did he know that it was prohibited by the laws of the land, and that its commission would entail punishment and penalties upon himself? If he had the capacity thus to appreciate the character and comprehend the possible or probable consequences of his act, he is responsible to the law for the act thus committed and is to be judged accordingly."

"The defense of insanity is a defense which may be, and sometimes is, resorted to in cases in which the proof of the overt act is so full and complete that any other means of avoiding conviction and escaping punishment seems hopeless. While, therefore, this was a defense to be weighed fairly, fully, and justly, and when satisfactorily established must recommend itself to the sense of humanity and justice of the jury, they are to examine it with care, lest an ingenious counterfeit of this mental infirmity shall furnish immunity to guilt."

"In all other matters except that of insanity, defendant is entitled to every reasonable doubt."

The defendant asked the Court to give instructions embracing the converse of the propositions contained in the foregoing instructions. The instructions given by the Court are correct; it therefore follows that the instructions asked for and refused were incorrect. (People v. M'Donnell, 47 Cal. 134; People v. Dennis, 39 id. 625; People v. Coffman, 24 id. 230; People v. Myers, 20 id. 518.)

7. After the verdict of conviction, the Court fixed January 23, 1882, as the day for sentence. On that day the Court heard evidence upon the question of the defendant's insanity at that time, and the Court being in doubt upon that subject, continued the time for sentence to January 27, 1882, and directed that two competent physicians make an examination of him, and report as to defendant's insanity at that time. On the 27th, the two physicians having examined the defendant, were not fully determined whether he was sane or insane, and no report was made by them, and the time for passing sentence was postponed to January 30th. On that day defendant's counsel moved the Court to summon a jury to try the question of the present sanity of the defendant; the Court, then having no doubt as to defendant's entire sanity, denied the motion, refused to allow the question to be determined by a jury, and proceeded to pronounce the sentence.

These matters do not appear in the judgment, but are stated in a bill of exceptions. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

Conceding that upon this appeal we can review the action of the Court in denying the motion to submit to a jury the question of defendant's sanity, we do not see that an error was committed. The Court did not pronounce judgment so long as any doubt existed as to defendant's sanity. The object of the statute was accomplished. According to Section 1201, Penal Code, a defendant may show for cause against judgment that he is insane; and if, in the opinion of the Court, there is reasonable ground for believing him to be insane, the question of insanity must be tried by a jury. At the time of passing the sentence, the Court had no doubt as to the entire sanity of the defendant.

Judgment and order affirmed.

R. W. WARREN v. R. L. SCHAINWALD ET AL.

PURCHASE BY PARTNER — PARTNERSHIP — FRAUD — TRUST.— One member of a firm composed of several copartners, after the death of one of them, falsely and with the intent to prevent a proposed settlement, represented to his surviving copartners that he had become the owner of the interest of the deceased, and thus prevented a purchase by them of such interest.

Held: That he can not by compromise of a suit brought by one to whom the interest of the deceased was transferred and assigned, against all of the surviving copartners for an accounting, acquire the interest of the deceased and maintain for his own benefit a suit against the remaining members of the firm to enforce the claim for the full amount of the profits which would have been due to the estate of the deceased copartner. The purchase of the interest of the deceased was made for the benefit of the plaintiff and defendants; and, after repaying the amount expended by the plaintiff in compromising the claim, the residue of the profits should be divided among all of the surviving copartners according to their respective interests.

APPEAL from a judgment in favor of the defendants in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. HUNT, J.

Action for a statement of partnership accounts. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Naphtaly, Friedrich & Ackerman, for Appellant.

Plaintiff is not estopped from equitably claiming said interest. In purchasing said interest he occupied no fiduciary relation to the remaining partners. He was not dealing with a creditor of the firm. Until the affairs of the partnership are wound up and a balance-sheet struck, the relation of debtor and creditor between the surviving partners and the representative of the deceased partner does not arise. (Gleason v. White, 34 Cal. 263.)

At the time of the purchase by plaintiff the partnership affairs had not been wound up. The surviving partners were entitled to the exclusive possession of the assets, and were trustees for all concerned in the copartnership; but for what purpose? Merely to wind up the concern, collect the outstanding accounts, sell the property, pay the liabilities (if any), and the balance (if any) divide among the survivors and the representative of decedent. They were trustees for no other purpose.

It is only in matters within the scope of the partnership business that each is the agent of the partnership. (Civil Code, Sec. 2429.) Towards each other the utmost good faith must be exercised in the management of the business. Neither one can use partnership funds in the purchase of property in his own name. If he does, he will be treated as holding in trust. (Civil Code, 2410.)

The obligations of copartners inter sese, whatever may be their nature and extent, refer only to the conduct of the business in which the firm is engaged. (McKenzie v. Dickinson, 43 Cal. 133; Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wallace, 518.) This principle is not changed by Section 2411, Civil Code. The one partner can not obtain any advantage over the other in the partnership affairs. "In all proceedings connected with * * * a partnership, every partner is bound to act in the highest good faith towards his copartner." Said section imposes no greater obligations than does the common law.

It is only in matters connected with the partnership that partners are bound to act in the highest good faith towards each other, and no stronger illustration of this rule can be found than in the case of McKenzie v. Dickinson, where this Court holds that a partner may, with his own funds, purchase a judgment against his copartner, and enforce it by a levy upon and sale of his copartner's interest in the firm, and may become a purchaser at such sale. Hence, in matters not within the scope of the partnership business, the partners towards each other do not occupy confidential relations—they are not trustees for each other—as to those matters they deal with one another at arm's length, not only during the existence of the copartnership but after its dissolution.

The copartnership having been dissolved by the death of Louis Pokoney, in September, 1878, the effect of that dissolution was to put an end to all power of the partners or agents, except so far as necessary to close up the business. (5 Wait's Actions and Def., 140.) It was not necessary to purchase the Pokoney interest in order to close up the business. The Pokoney interest could not have been purchased by the firm without the consent of all the surviving partners.

Chickering & Thomas, for Respondents.

Upon the death of a partner, the partnership is terminated as to future dealings; "yet for some purposes it may be said to exist, and the rights, duties and powers and authorities of the survivors remain, so far as it is necessary to enable them to wind up and settle the affairs of the partnership." (Story on Partnership, §§ 325, 344 and cases cited.) The surviving partner, in all matters connected with the dissolution of such copartnership, and with the winding up of its affairs are trustees for each other, and as a natural consequence cannot make a profit out of each other. (Civil Code, §§ 2410-2411.)

The settlement of the claim of the estate of Louis Pokoney was a necessary part of the dissolution. The affairs of the firm could not have been wound up without settling with the estate, either with or without a suit. It was a claim against the copartnership and the interest of each of the survivors therein, and differed from the claim of a copartnership creditor in the order of its payment only.

As in a creditor's claim, the surviving partners would have been the sole parties defendant. In case of suit a judgment on it would, in like manner, run against the surviving members. The satisfaction of the judgment would in like manner be made out of the joint property of the partnership. It was not, as in McKenzie v. Dickinson, 43 Cal. 120, a claim against an individual member or individual members of the firm, but it was at the time of its purchase by Warren, a claim against Warren himself, and the other copartners, in their capacity as joint trustees of the estate of the deceased partner. (Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457; Smith v. Walker, 38 Cal. 385.) They also cited Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wall. 518; Bigelow on Fraud, p. 234-190; C. C. §§ 1709, 1710, 2224, 2228, 2410, 2411; Story on Partnership, § 344; Kelly v. Rogers, 21 Minn. 151.)

The Court:

On the eighteenth day of April, 1877, the plaintiff, Warren, and the defendant, Schainwald, and others entered into a copartnership for the manufacture of powder, under the firm name of R. W. Warren & Co.

One Louis Pokoney was a member of the firm, and he departed this life in the month of September, 1878.

After the death of Pokoney, the surviving partners continued the business under the firm name, until the tenth day of January, 1879, at which time the entire assets of the firm were sold and transferred to the Vulcan Powder Company.

In the month of December, 1878, the plaintiff and the defendants, Schainwald and Baum, had a meeting at which one of the defendants stated that the interest of Pokoney's estate could be purchased for the sum of three thousand dollars, and the defendants expressed a willingness to purchase it at that price, but the plaintiff then and there stated that he was the owner thereof; and thereupon the defendants refrained from purchasing the same. The finding shows that the defendants were prevented from effecting such purchase by the statement of plaintiff. The Court further finds that "the statement made by the plaintiff was untrue, and was made for the purpose of preventing the proposed settlement."

The Pokoney interest was transferred and assigned to one Lilienthal, and on the fifteenth day of January, 1879, he brought a suit against the surviving members of the firm of R. W. Warren & Co. for a settlement and accounting of the partnership dealings, and thereafter, in the month of September, 1879, the plaintiff, Warren, compromised said suit by paying therein a sum less than three thousand dollars.

The object of the present suit is to charge the defendants with the profits of the business which would be due to the estate of Pokoney if such interest were still in the estate. The Court below held that after Warren was repaid the amount expended by him in compromising the Lilienthal claim, the residue of the profits accruing to the Pokoney interest should be divided among the surviving partners of the firm of Warren & Co. according to their respective interests in the business of the copartnership.

We think the judgment of the Court below was correct. It is apparent from the facts in the case that the Pokoney interest would have been purchased by the surviving partners for their mutual benefit, if the plaintiff Warren had not prevented such purchase by misrepresentation. Under the circumstances of the case he was justly held to have purchased for the benefit of himself and the defendants, his co-partners.

Judgment and order affirmed.

J. D. STEVENSON v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURT—ADMINISTRATION UPON ESTATE OF LIVING PERSON.—After administration had been granted upon the estate of a supposed deceased person, and the administration closed, and the administrator discharged, the supposed decedent appeared in person and filed his petition to vacate and annul the proceedings; and an order was made granting the motion.

Held: There is no doubt of the correctness of the action of the Court. Administration upon the estate of a living person is totally void.

APPLICATION for writ of certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court vacating and annulling all the proceedings in the matter of the estate of James Valentine. HALSEY, J.

The decree discharging the administrator was dated December 24, 1877. The petition of Valentine was filed February 11, 1881, and prayed that a citation should issue to the administrator to show cause why the proceedings in the matter of his estate should not be set aside and annulled. After citation to the administrator and trial, a decree was rendered adjudging that all the proceedings had in the matter of the said estate should be set aside and that the property described in said proceedings should be returned free of any and all claims or titles set up or asserted thereto, by the administrator or any one claiming under him.

L. E. Pratt and Wright & Wright, for Plaintiff.

The Probate Court had jurisdiction to grant the administration. When a petition in proper form was presented in that Court alleging certain facts to exist, which if established by proof, would give the Court jurisdiction over the estate, then the Court had the power to inquire into the truth of those allegations and to determine the existence of those facts. When it determined the facts to be established, its jurisdiction was fixed. (C. C. P. §§ 97-98; Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Board of Equalization of Placer County, 43 Cal. 365; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 id. 391.)

The Court loses jurisdiction to make any order in an estate after a decree of distribution other than to enforce said decree and to discharge the administrator. (Estate of Garraud, 36 Cal. 277; Bell v. Thompson, 19 id. 707.)

L. Quint, for Defendant.

That Valentine has a remedy can not in good faith be questioned. (Jochumsen v. Suffolk Savings Bank, 3 Allen, 87; Wales v. Willard, 2 Mass. 120; Cutts v. Haskins, 9 id. 543; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. 20; S. C., 16 Am. Dec. 372; Smith v. Rice, 11 Mass. 507; Sigourney v. Sibley, 21 Pick. 101; Emery v. Hildreth, 2 Gray, 228; Allen v. Dundas, 3 T. R. 125.)

Where then can it be found except in the Court and in the proceeding out of which the injury arose? (State of California v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233; Hamberlin v. Terry, 1 Smed. & Marsh Ch. 589.)

Ross, J.:

The question in this case is whether the Court in which was had administration upon the estate of a man supposed to have been dead, but who subsequently and after the administration had been closed appeared "in the flesh," and moved the entry of an order vacating and annulling the proceedings, rightly granted the motion and entered the order. We have no doubt of the correctness of the action of the Court in that particular.

Administration may lawfully be had upon the estate of a dead man, but not upon that of one in life. Until death occurs there is no "subject matter" over which it is possible for any Court to exercise jurisdiction. It is true that the Court of Probate, before issuing letters of administration, must first determine affirmatively the question of death. But notwithstanding such determination the fact that the supposed intestate is alive may still be shown, and when shown, establishes the nullity of the entire proceedings. The authorities in support of this proposition are numerous. (Sec. 1, Williams on Executors, American notes by Perkins to page 632, and notes to page 631; Vol. vii. Robinson's Prac., p. 324; Jochumsen v. Suffolk Savings Bank, 3 Allen, 87; Fisk v. Norvel, 9 Texas, 12; Duncan v. Stewart, 25 Ala. 408; Allen v. Dundas, 3 T. R. 125.)

In Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch. 23, Chief Justice Marshall said: "Suppose administration to be granted on the estate of a person not really dead. The act, all will admit, is totally void. Yet the ordinary must always inquire and decide whether the person whose estate is to be committed to the care of others be dead or in life. It is a branch of every cause in which letters of administration issue. Yet the decision of the ordinary that the person on whose estate he acts is dead, if the facts be otherwise, does not invest the person he may appoint with the character or powers of an administrator. The case, in truth, was not one within his jurisdiction. It was not one in which he had a right to deliberate. It was not committed to him by the law. And although one of the points occurs in all cases proper for his tribunal, yet that point can not bring the subject within his jurisdiction."

In Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 226, 227, this Court said that the fact of death and the place of residence of the deceased at the time of death must be alleged in the petition for letters, and must be true in point of fact, "and when they do not both exist in point of fact the proceedings are utterly void and not voidable." Further on, the Court said: "It is apprehended that no one would insist that a grant of administration before the death of a person, however regular, could be sustained anywhere. The decision of the Probate Court, that the man was dead, would not be conclusive against him; and the fact of residence is of equal importance to give the particular Court jurisdiction, and the decision of one point is no more conclusive than the decision on the other."

was overruled, and we think rightly so, in the subsequent case of Irwin v. Scriber, reported in 18 Cal. 499, but it has not been disturbed as respects the question of the fact of death. Nor do we think it ought to be. It is a great mistake to place the fact of death and the place of residence of the supposed intestate in the same category. Until there is a death there is no subject matter for the jurisdiction of any Court. What is the subject matter? It is the appointment of a personal representative to a decedent, who is without one. If the subject matter exists, the question whether the Court had jurisdiction in the particular case, or not, may depend, as said by the Court of Appeals of Virginia in Andrews v. Ivory, 14 Gratt. 236, "upon a variety of facts; as whether the deceased resided in the county whose court made the order, or had land there; or died there; or had estate of any kind there. If, after passing upon these facts and taking cognizance of the case, the order of the Court could, at any period in any collateral proceeding, be avoided by evidence that the decedent did not reside, or die, or leave estate in the commonwealth, all the inconveniences and other evils would be produced which are referred to in Fisher v. Bassett, 9 Leigh, 119, and other cases before cited, and which are designed to be prevented by the principles laid down in those cases." Some of those evils are thus stated by Mr. Justice Rosevelt in the case of Monell v. Dennison, 17 How. Pr. 426: "To allow it (the decision upon the question of inhabitancy) to be called in question collaterally, and on every occasion and during all time, would be destructive of all confidence. No business in particular depending on letters testamentary or of administration could be safely transacted. Payments made to an executor or administrator, even after judgment, would be no protection. Even if the debtor litigated the precise point and compelled the executor to establish it by proof, the adjudication would avail him nothing should a subsequent administrator, as in this case, spring up, and, after the lapse of a fifth of a century, demand payment a second time, when a scintilla of evidence on one side remained, and all on the other had perished. A large number of titles, too, depend for their validity on decrees of foreclosure, and these decrees are often made in suits instituted by executors or administrators or their assigns. Must these, too, be subject to be overhauled at any period, however remote, on the nice question of residence—a question often difficult to decide where the facts are close, and much more so, of course, where the facts are obscured by lapse of time and loss of documents and witnesses?" Such a doctrine the Court correctly held too dangerous for judicial sanction.

But here was an application by a party whose estate had been administered, upon the supposition that he was dead, to show to the Court in which the proceedings were had, the fact that he was all along alive, and the consequent non-existence of the subject matter, without which no jurisdiction could by possibility have attached to any Court. That it was competent for him to prove the fact we have no manner of doubt, and we are also of opinion that he sought to make the proof in the appropriate tribunal. (State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233; Hamberlin v. Terry, 1 S. and M. Ch. 589.)

Demurrer sustained and proceedings dismissed.

McKINSTRY and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., and MORRISON, C. J., concurred.

MYRICK, J., concurred in the judgment.

McKEE, J. concurring:

I concur. Administration of the estate of a living person is void, ab initio and throughout. The only jurisdiction a Probate Court has in respect to the administration of estates is over the estates of deceased persons. It has no jurisdiction whatever to administer the estates of living persons as if they were dead. Cases in support of these plain propositions abound in the books. For it has often happened that many "Enoch Ardens" have had to assert in the Courts their right to property of which they have been, in their absence, unlawfully deprived by void proceedings against them in Probate Courts. In addition to those cited by Mr. Justice Ross, the cases of M'Pherson v. Cunliff, 11 S. and R. 422; S. C., 14 Am. Dec. 642; Appeal of Peebles, 15 S. & R. 42; Wales v. Willard, 2 Mass. 120; Smith v. Rice, 11 id. 507; Bolton v. Jacks, 6 Robt. 166; Morgan v. Dodge, 44 N. H. 255; Melia v.

Simmons, 45 Wis. 334; and D'Arusment v. Jones, 4 Lea, 25, will be found instructive and conclusive upon the question involved in the present case. I know of no case opposed to the doctrine of those cases except it be the case of Roderigas v. East River Savings Institution, 63 N. Y. 460. In that case the Supreme Court of New York held that money paid to the administrator of a supposed decedent could not be recovered back, although it appeared that at the time of issuing the letters of administration the party was not dead. But in Lavin v. The Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, 18 Blatch. 1, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the State of New York, it was decided that that case had no support elsewhere in the authorities of the English or American Courts. A living person, says the Court, can not be concluded by a Surrogate's decision that he is dead. As to him, such a decree is absolutely void, and he may claim his property as taken from him "without due process of law."

ELIZA GARLICK v. W. R. BOWER.

VERDICT — JURY — ISSUES — NEW TRIAL — EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.—The action was brought to recover the possession of one thousand three hundred and fifty-three sacks of wheat, or the value thereof, alleged to be one thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, and one hundred and fifty dollars, damages and costs. The defense was a general denial and justification under a writ of attachment. The action was tried before a jury, and the following verdict was rendered: "We, the jury in this cause, find a verdict for the plaintiff, Mrs. Garlick, and assess her damages at one thousand eight hundred dollars." On motion of defendant the Court set aside the verdict and granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law, and the evidence, and on the ground that the damages were excessive, etc.

Held: 1. The verdict in failing to find the value of the property did not cover the issues submitted to the jury.

2. The verdict for one thousand eight hundred dollars damages was a verdict for damages in excess by one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, of the damages claimed by the plaintiff.

3. For these reasons the verdict was against law and the evidence, and it was properly set aside by the Court on the motion of defendant for a new trial.

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court of the County of Kern, granting a new trial. BRUNDAGE, J.

Action to recover the possession of a quantity of wheat in sacks, or the value thereof and damages and costs. The facts are stated in the opinion.

S. Solon Holt and George V. Smith, for Appellant.

J. W. Freeman and R. E. Arick, for Respondent.

Under the pleadings, the verdict and judgment should have been for a return of the property taken, or for its value. (Section 667, C. C. P.) The verdict was not for the return of any number of sacks of wheat, as claimed in the complaint, nor was the estimate upon the number of sacks taken by the Sheriff, but simply for the sum of one thousand eight hundred dollars. Under Section 662, C. C. P., the Court was justified in vacating the verdict without an application by the defendant.

The Court:

This was an action to recover possession of one thousand three hundred and fifty-three sacks of wheat or the value thereof (alleged to be one thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars), and one hundred and fifty dollars damages and costs. The answer contained a general denial and the defense of justification by attachment. The case was tried by the Court sitting with a jury, and the trial resulted in the following verdict: "We, the jury in this cause, find a verdict for the plaintiff, Mrs. Garlick, and assess her damages at one thousand eight hundred dollars." On motion of the defendant the Court below set aside the verdict and granted a new trial, on the grounds that the verdict was against law and the evidence, and the damages were excessive, etc., and from the order granting a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The verdict did not cover the issues submitted to the jury. The value of the property was not found. Besides, the damages assessed were one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars in excess of the damages claimed by the plaintiff. The verdict was therefore against law and the evidence, and there was no error committed in setting it aside. When the verdict was rendered by the jury it would have been proper for the Court to have called their attention to the fact that it was incomplete, and remanded them to put it in proper form; but having omitted to do that it was not error afterwards to set it aside, on the motion for a new trial made by the defendant.

Order affirmed.

MOSES HOLLAND v. M. M. GREEN.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER — COMPLAINT — PLEADING.— The complaint alleged "that on the twenty-sixth day of January, 1882, the defendants unlawfully entered upon said land, and turned this plaintiff out of the possession thereof, by threats and menacing conduct, and ever since that time, said defendants have and still do hold the possession thereof, by threats of violence against this plaintiff." Held: Sufficient.

IN — UNLAWFUL ENTRY — GOOD FAITH.— In such an action a lease to the defendant from a third person is not admissible in evidence.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. HOWARD, J.

The lease from Mary L. Gould referred to in the opinion was offered "for the purpose of showing the good faith of the entry of" the defendant.

Will D. Gould & James H. Blanchard, for Appellants.

The complaint jointly alleges two offenses: the defendants "unlawfully entered" upon the land in question, and that they "hold possession thereof by threats of violence." "The combining of principles applicable to the different elements of the cause of action leads to uncertainty and confusion; the two ideas should have been kept separate and distinct." (Fogarty v. Kelly et al., 24 Cal. 320.)

There is no finding how the entry was made. It is alleged to have been unlawful. "One who has the title and present right of possession, may always take peaceable possession of what he claims to be his own." (Phoenix Mill and Mining Co.

v. Lawrence et al., 55 Cal. 144; Potter v. Mercer, 53 id. 674; Dennis v. Wood, 48 id. 364; Powell v. Lane, 45 id. 678; Townsend v. Little, id. 676; Shelby v. Houston, 38 id. 410-22.)

Bicknell & White and Chas. J. Ellis, for Respondent.

All the questions involved in this appeal are discussed in the case of Voll v. Hollis, 60 Cal. 569.

THE COURT:

The first ground upon which appellants rely for a reversal of the judgment below is that the complaint is substantially defective. The averment is "that on the said twenty-sixth day of January, 1882, the defendants unlawfully entered upon said land, and turned this plaintiff out of the possession thereof, by threats and menacing conduct, and ever since that time said defendants have and still hold the possession thereof by threats of violence against this plaintiff." We think that the above averment brings this case within Section 1159, C. C. P., which provides that "every person is guilty of a forcible entry * * * who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct, the party in possession."

2. The second finding is that the defendants "then and there by force, threats, and menacing conduct toward the plaintiff, turned him out of the possession of said land, and ever since that time the defendants have and still do hold possession of said land;" and the evidence in this case was sufficient to support the finding.

3. The Court did not err in excluding evidence of a lease from Mary L. Gould to one of the defendants. (Voll v. Hollis, 60 Cal. 569.)

Judgment and order affirmed.

SPRING VALLEY WATER WORKS v. ANTONE SCHOTTLE ET AL.

RULES OF BOARD AS TO NOTICE NO PART OF RECORD ON CERTIORARI.—Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, denying the application of the Spring Valley Water Works for a writ of review, and confirming the action of the Board of Equalization of the city and county above named. The writ was sued out to review the action of the Board of Equalization in raising the assessment of the franchise of the Water Works above named, from five thousand dollars to five million dollars, and to have it vacated and set aside as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the Board. It was contended by appellant that no notice as required by law was given to the Water Works, inasmuch as it was not given in accordance with a rule prescribed in advance by the board.

Held: On the authority of Gerretson v. Supervisors, 9 P. C. L. J., 685, these rules are no part of the record and proceedings to be brought up on certiorari.

WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS TO FORM OF NOTICE—DISCRETION OF BOARD AS TO TIME OF NOTICE.—An application having been made by a taxpayer of the city and county, to the Board of Equalization, that the valuation of the franchise of the company be raised from five thousand dollars to fourteen million dollars. Notices to appear and show cause before the Board of Supervisors at their chambers in the New City Hall, on Friday, June 24th, at ten o'clock A. M., why the assessment of the Spring Valley Water Works should not be raised to fourteen million dollars, addressed to the President and Secretary of the Spring Valley Water Works, were served on June 23d and 24th on these officers by leaving them (the notices) "at the office of the Spring Valley Water Works, at its principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco." It also appears from the record that a notice addressed "to the Spring Valley Water Works Company, Charles Webb Howard, President, and William Norris, Secretary," was served on the twenty-fourth of June, 1881. This notice bore date the day just named, was entitled "In the matter of the equalization of the assessment of the Spring Valley Water Works Company," and the tenor of it was to inform and notify the Water Works Company that the petition to have the assessment on its franchise raised, then on file with the Board of Equalization, would be taken up and acted on by the board at its chambers at the New City Hall, on Saturday, June 25, 1881, at ten o'clock A. M., and it was thereby cited to appear and then there show cause why the petition referred to should not be granted. This notice issued by an order of the Board made on the twenty-fourth of June, 1881, and was served on the same day by leaving it at the office of the Company as stated with regard to the notice first mentioned. On the twenty-fourth of June, 1881, the Board took up the application to increase the valuation of the franchise of the Spring Valley Water Works. Charles N. Fox Esq., attorney, then appeared and protested on behalf of the Spring Valley Water Works against a consideration of the application made in reference to said Water Works at that time for want of jurisdiction on the part of the Board, inasmuch as the Board had adopted no rule prescribing the form and manner of notice, and therefore any further action by the Board would be in violation of law, and that sufficient time was not allowed the Spring Valley Water Works as contemplated by law to prepare and present its case. He (Fox) stated that a notice had been served upon the Secretary of the Company on the afternoon of the preceding day, at four o'clock, just at the time of the closing of the office, to appear before the Board this morning. Afterwards, on the same day, Mr. Fox reiterated his objections to the Board's proceeding, and stated that the President of the Company was out of town when the notice was served on the Secretary, and the notice to the President to appear was not received by him until this morning—meaning the morning of the 24th. The Board determined the question of jurisdiction adversely to the contention of Mr. Fox. He (Fox), then requested that the hearing of the case be postponed until the next day (Saturday) or the Monday following, so as to give the Company an opportunity for preparation and consultation. A like request for postponement on behalf of the San Francisco Gas Light Company was also made (the cases of these two companies were heard together), and on motion, further action in the cases of the Spring Valley Water Works and the San Francisco Gas Light Company was postponed until the forenoon of the next day, Saturday, twenty-fifth of June, at ten o'clock. On the next day (twenty-fifth of June) at the request of R. P. Clement, Esq., who appeared on behalf of the San Francisco Gas Light Company (the case of the Company last named being heard with that of the Spring Valley Water Works), and requested a further postponement of the cases of both companies until two o'clock on that day, for the purpose of allowing the respective counsel to have a consultation with the officers of the companies as to these cases. The cases of the above mentioned companies were afterwards on same day taken up for hearing, when the attorneys were called on to make an admission as to the value of the stock of the companies mentioned. Thereupon Mr. Fox stated that on yesterday he agreed, if ever the case reached that point, that he would admit that the market value of the stock (referring to the Spring Valley Water Works stock) on the seventh day of March, 1881, was par, reserving the right to object to its relevancy, but that on reflection he declined to appear for the Water Company further than to make the point made at the preceding meeting, to the jurisdiction of the Board for want of notice to the Company, and to repeat that no notice had been yet given the Company. After this the Board proceeded to act upon the case of the Spring Valley Water Works, and raised the assessment.

Held: 1. That Section 3681 of Political Code providing for the giving of notice by the Clerk of the County Board of Equalization in certain cases, has no application to this case.

2. The appearance of the company on the notices served, waived all objections to the mere form of the notice.

3. The reasonableness of the time given by the notice to show cause in cases where the law prescribes no definite time, must in a great measure be left to the discretion of the Board.

4. The notice under all the circumstances in this case was not as to time unreasonable.

FRANCHISES DEFINED.—FRANCHISE OF SPRING VALLEY WATER WORKS.—The Spring Valley Water Works was a corporation prior to the seventh day of March, 1881, organized and existing under the laws of this State, having its principal place of business and doing business in the city and county of San Francisco. All corporations organized under the laws of this State, are, by the general law, vested with certain powers by express grant. They are invested with further powers by the particular act under which they are incorporated, or by the title of the code under which they are incorporated, or by the title of the code under which they are formed. The Spring Valley Water Works is a corporation formed and doing business under an Act passed April 14, 1858, for the formation of corporations for business and commercial purposes, and an Act passed April 22, 1858, entitled "An Act for the incorporation of water companies." Under the laws of the State this corporation has power to have succession by its corporate name for a period of time (which must not exceed fifty years), to sue or be sued in any Court, to make and use a common seal and alter the same, at pleasure, to hold, purchase, and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require, to appoint such subordinate officers and agents as the business may require, to make by-laws, not inconsistent with any existing law, for the management of its property, the regulation of its affairs, and the transfer of its stock, as well as all power necessary to the exercise of the expressly granted powers. It has also the power under the Act of 1858, to purchase or to appropriate and take possession of, and to use and hold, all such lands and waters as may be required for the purposes of the company, upon making compensation therefor. This last power enables the corporation to purchase the land and waters required for its business against the will of the owner, by availing itself of the provisions of the laws for the condemnation of land; in other words, to acquire such lands by the exercise of the power of eminent domain. It has the right also under the Act of 1858, subject to the reasonable direction of the Board of Supervisors, to use so much of the streets, ways, and alleys of the City of San Francisco, as may be necessary for laying pipes for conducting water into the city, or any part of it, and also the right to furnish water to the inhabitants of the City and County of San Francisco, and, as this court has recently determined, to the city also. The water so furnished is to be paid for at rates to be fixed each year in a mode established by law. A further power or right inhering in this company by the laws of the State, was the power or right to divide its capital stock into a number of shares which are personal estate, each share representing a minute fractional part of such stock, and each share capable of ownership, of being sold and bought and transferred by a simple process, of passing by will, or to one's heirs after his death through the medium of an administration, and each share securing to the owner a right to participate in the profits and property of the company. The before mentioned powers, or privileges, were supplemented by further grant, which inured to the advantage of the petitioner, which will be found in the third section of the Act of 1858, by which all the privileges, immunities, and franchises that might be thereafter granted to any individual, or corporation, relating to the introduction of fresh water into the City and County of San Francisco, or into any city or town in this State for the use of the inhabitants thereof, were also granted to all companies incorporated before or after the passage of that Act.

Held: 1. Franchises are special privileges conferred by Government on individuals and which do not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right.

2. The common right refers to the right of citizens generally at common law. Such rights of citizens, though frequently spoken of as franchises, are not the franchises here meant; and it may be conceded that where such rights are granted to corporations, they are not franchises. But independent of the right to exist as a corporation and to exercise powers in its corporate capacity, there are privileges granted to the Water Works, which do not by the common law, belong to citizens generally; such as the right to lay down pipes in the streets, ways, and alleys of a city, and to collect rates for water furnished. Conceding that the Constitution by Section 19 of Article xi. grants this right to every person, it does not follow that it is not a franchise. They are vested by a grant of the sovereign power and not by the common law; and the generality of the grant does not deprive them of the character of franchises.

3. The right to collect rates for use of water supplied to the City and County of San Francisco or the inhabitants thereof which the appellant has possessed at least ever since the Act of 1858 went into effect, is expressly declared to be a franchise by the Constitution of the State in the second Section of Article xiv. thereof.

4. The very existence of a corporation as such, is a franchise, and it exercises its franchise in every act which it performs as a corporation. A corporation, whose existence is a franchise, may possess powers and privileges, which, in themselves, are not franchises; but it usually owns along with such privileges some that are franchises; but whether the powers be entirely of the kind which are franchises or not, its existence and right to employ its corporate powers is a franchise.

FRANCHISES TO BE TAXED.—It was the intention of those who framed and ratified the Constitution to place such franchises in the category of property to be taxed. The word "franchises," as used in the first section of Article xiii., is used generally without any qualifying words, and is intended to embrace all franchises of the character above referred to, whether vested in individuals or bodies politic.

IN. — CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.—The clause "and all other matters and things real, personal and mixed, capable of private ownership" in Section 1 of Article xiii., does not qualify the word "franchises," which preceded it. The words used show clearly that they were intended to add something to what preceded them, to refer to kinds of property not previously mentioned, not to qualify anything. They constituted a declaration that in enumerating the property to be taxed it was not intended to confine the enumeration to "moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises," but to include all other kinds of property, and that by no construction of the word property, as used in the section were any kinds of property to be left out.

IN.—FRANCHISES ARE PROPERTY.—All these rights exist until the legislative authority has acted so as to impair them or take them away; and until such legislation is enacted, the rights of property remain unimpaired. Shares of stock, whether real or personal estate, are property.

CHARTER OF CORPORATIONS.—In this State, the charter is the statute or statutes granting and defining the powers of the corporation, under which it is constituted and exists, together with the instruments required to be executed by the provisions of such statute or statutes. These are sometimes called the constating instruments. Such franchises are legal estates, not mere naked powers, and are powers coupled with an interest, which vest in the corporation by virtue of its charter or constating instruments.

POWER OF STATE TO TAX FRANCHISE.—There can be no doubt of the power of a State to tax the franchise at its assessed value. There may be more difficulty in arriving at its value than that of a parcel of land or personal chattels, but still its value may be estimated, and such value may exceed the value of the tangible property of the corporation.

IN.—MODE OF TAXATION.—In this State, the Constitution having declared that franchises are property, and that all property in the State not exempt from taxation shall be assessed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law (Const., Art. xiii., Sec. 1), it would seem to follow that the tax must be according to a valuation made by the officer appointed for that purpose. If the State can impose a tax on the franchise of a corporation in the nature of an excise or duty, it does not exclude the taxation by a valuation made by an Assessor.

IN.—CASES APPROVED.—The cases of Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; and San José Gas Co. v. January, id. 614, cited with approval.

POWER OF BOARD TO EQUALIZE ASSESSMENT OF FRANCHISE.—By the several provisions of the Political Code, the power to act on each and every assessment is conferred on the board, and to increase or lower it so as to make it conform to the true value in money of the property mentioned therein, and the Board has full power to act on the assessment of the franchise and increase or lower it as provided in Section 3873, Penal Code.

MODE OF EQUALIZING ASSESSMENT OF FRANCHISE APPROVED.—In this case the Board of Supervisors, in the exercise of its power of equalization, assessed the franchise of the Water Works by taking the aggregate of the market value of the shares of stock in the company on the seventh of March, 1881, and deducting therefrom the value of the real and personal property of the company, and held the difference to be the value of the franchise. The market value of the shares was shown to the Board by the testimony of witnesses.

Held: This mode of arriving at the value of the franchise, is within the power vested in the Board of Supervisors, acting as a Board of Equalization.

INTENT OF LEGISLATURE TO REQUIRE TAXATION OF FRANCHISES SHOWN.—On the same day on which the Legislature enacted § 3608 of the Political Code, declaring that shares of stock in corporations possess no intrinsic value over and above the actual value of the property of the corporation which they represent, and prohibiting the taxation of such shares of stock, it repealed § 3640 of the same Code which required the assessment to every person owning, or having the control thereof, of all shares of stock in corporations, and provided that in the case of stock in any corporation having its principal place of business in this State, the assessable value of each share should be ascertained by taking from the market value of its entire capital stock, the value of all property assessed to the corporation, and dividing the remainder by the entire number of shares into which the capital stock was divided.

Held: By this section which was repealed, the whole property of the corporation, including franchise and other assessed property, would have been taxed by taxing the shares to each owner of shares in the manner indicated by its provisions. But by declaring, in Section 3608, that shares of stock were not to be taxed because they possessed no intrinsic value over and above the value of the property of the corporation which they stand for and represent, and as taxing of the shares and property both, would be double taxation, and therefore the shares should not be assessed, but the property should, no doubt it was their intention to tax everything in the shape of property owned by the corporation; that everything entering into and giving value to the shares, should be taxed. It can not be doubted that the Legislature in acting on the subject of revenue and taxation during the session of 1881, did not intend to leave the system in relation to so important a matter in such a shape, that so large an amount of property as indicated by the difference between the market value of the shares of corporations and the value of the tangible property of such corporations, should escape taxation. To come to any other conclusion, would be to impute to that body a most culpable dereliction of duty.

GOOD-WILL NO ELEMENT OF VALUE OF STOCK.—Good-will does not enter into or form an element in the value of the shares of stock in a trading corporation.

JURISDICTION OF BOARD IN THIS CASE.—The Board of Supervisors in its capacity of a Board of Equalization, had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter in the matters involved in this cause.

APPEAL by plaintiff from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. ALLEN, J.

Application for writ of review. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision, a petition for rehearing was presented by the plaintiff. Similar petitions were also presented by the Nevada Bank of San Francisco, The Pacific Coast Steamship Company, and the Bank of California, as being parties interested in the questions involved though not parties to the action. All of the petitions were denied.

Fox & Kellogg, for Appellant.

The Board of Equalization had no jurisdiction to raise this assessment. Because the Board had never by rule prescribed any manner of giving notice of intention to increase the assessment, as provided by law. (Political Code, § 3673.) Because notice of such intention was not given as required by law. (Political Code, §§ 3673 and 3681; Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 325; People v. Reynolds, 28 id. 112.) There was no evidence before the Board of Equalization as to the value of the property described in the assessment upon which it acted, and in the absence of such evidence it had no power to increase the assessment. (People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 107.)

The company had no "property" liable to assessment, of the character of that upon which this increased valuation was placed. This increase of valuation was placed upon "franchise" or "franchises." Whether the company had any franchise or franchises which constituted property, or not, was a fact which must be determined from an examination of the statutes of the State, as every franchise is the creature of statute, and can be held or enjoyed only by virtue of legislative grant.

It is not pretended that the appellant does not possess one or more franchises, in the broad sense of that term, for in that broad sense, the term "franchise" embraces every privilege, the right to enjoy which depends upon permission of the sovereign, or the mode of exercising which is prescribed or regulated by law. In this broad sense the term is synonymous with the word "liberty," and signifies a royal privilege, or a privilege granted by the government. (2 Blackstone's Com. 37.)

It may be a privilege granted to one, to many, or to all; but to be a subject of taxation in this State, and therefore liable to assessment at any sum whatever, it must be a franchise or privilege, "capable of private ownership," and therefore not common to all. "All property in the State, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word 'property,' as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership," etc. (Const. Art. xiii, § 1.) Exactly the same definition of the term "property" is found in the Revenue Act. (See Political Code, § 3617, Sub. 1.)

In making up the assessment, the revenue officers seem to have taken it for granted that because franchises may be property, they are ex necessitate liable to assessment, and to have overlooked the provision of the Constitution and the statute, that they can only be property, and subject to taxation, when "capable of private ownership." According to their theory, the elective franchise, the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, the most valuable of all franchises, are liable to assessment and subject to taxation. But these, and a hundred other franchises, are not "capable of private ownership," and therefore not "property," and not being property, are not subject to taxation.

We submit that nothing but "property" is subject to assessment and taxation, in the form now under consideration, under the Constitution or laws of this State. Only those "franchises" can be classed as "property * * capable of private ownership," which are defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, as being "Special privileges conferred by government on individuals, which do not belong to the citizens of the country generally, or by common right." Wherever we find a franchise held to be property, we find it to be of the class thus clearly defined by the highest tribunal in the land. Of these are street railroads, turnpike roads, bridges, ferries, wharves, and the like.

But the appellant in this case possesses no such franchise. There is no right or privilege which it can name, or upon which it can place its hand and say, "This is mine," none that is or can be held by it in "private ownership." It owns no franchise; it simply enjoys the privileges conferred by law. Its privileges are these and these only: 1. The right of corporate existence. This is a privilege granted by the Legislature to all the people of the State, and any five of its inhabitants may enjoy that franchise at any time, when they see fit to incorporate for any purpose for which men may contract or associate themselves together. (Civil Code, § 286.) 2. The right to acquire property, when it is absolutely necessary, and can not otherwise be acquired for certain of its corporate uses, by condemnation. This is a right which can never be exercised without enormous cost, proportioned to the value of the thing acquired, and which is not, and can not be, held in private ownership. It is a right held in common by all corporations organized for the purpose of supplying cities and towns with water as well as many others, and there is no limit to the number of corporations which may organize and actually engage in the business of supplying the same city or town. (See Statute, 1858, p. 218; Code of Civil Procedure, § 1237.)

3. The right to lay and maintain pipes in the streets and to collect water rates. Like the two preceding, so of this. It is not a right which is or can be held "in private ownership." By the statute of 1858, above cited, and under which the appellant is organized, it is a right guaranteed to every corporation organized for the purpose of supplying water in cities and towns, with no limitation upon the number that may engage in the same business in the same city or town. By the Codes the same right is also guaranteed to any corporation organized for such purpose; but under them it could only be exercised when thereunto authorized by ordinance of the city. But by the same sections of the Code the city authorities were prohibited from granting any exclusive privilege of the kind. (See Civil Code, §§ 548, 549.)

But since the passage of both the Statute and the Code, the people in the majesty of their power, have taken away even the limitations of those laws, by which the right to exercise the privilege was limited to corporations, and now it is a right common to every person in the State whether incorporated or not.

By Sec. 19, Art. ii, of the Constitution, it is provided: "In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality, for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose, under and by authority of the laws of this State, shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, or other official in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gas light, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

Thus it will be seen that under the Constitution of the State it is impossible that there should be a franchise of this kind—that is "capable of private ownership." It is one which belongs to everybody, and whoever sees fit to use it need not even say to the municipal authorities, "by your leave." All they have to do is to be subject to general regulations for damages and indemnity for damages, and to supervision of the Street Superintendent, as to the mode and manner of using the street. It is true that Art. xiv. of the Constitution declares the right to collect water rates to be a franchise which can only be exercised by authority and in the manner prescribed by law. But that does not militate against the proposition that is a privilege common to all, and not "capable of private ownership." It is declared to be a franchise solely for the purpose of making it subject to regulation by law, and without giving it the character of property or private ownership.

These are all the franchises, if they can be called such, enjoyed by the appellant. They are all franchises which are enjoyed by every inhabitant of the State, which are not "capable of private ownership," and therefore not liable to assessment under the law.

The right to lay pipes in the streets is a privilege which can not be granted by the State, free from municipal regulation. The streets of the city are not subject to the control of the State. (People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15.)

A franchise must be by grant of the sovereign to the subject, or be held by that prescription which presumes a grant. It must be in relation to a subject over which the sovereign has control. If it be a matter over which the municipality has control, it ceases to be a franchise, and becomes only a license, for a municipal body has no power to confer a franchise. It lacks the element of sovereignty. (Davis v. The Mayor, 4 Kernan (14 N. Y.), 506.)

The Legislature of Illinois granted to the Chicago City Railway Company the right to lay and maintain tracks and run cars thereon in such of the streets of the City of Chicago as should be designated by the municipal authorities. This was held not to be a franchise, but a mere license—that it did not come within any definition of a franchise. (C. C. R. W. Co. v. The People, 73 Ill. 548.)

The right to distribute or sell water is certainly not a franchise. Water has always been distributed and sold in this city by divers methods, and the right of any man to do it has never been questioned. The defendant is not engaged in the collection of tolls for the use of its property, but its business is to procure, store up, and sell water. Its water is a commodity, an article of merchandise, and it has the same right to sell it as any other person engaged in trade or commerce. So held in regard to the identical business in which this defendant is engaged. (Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 595.) We therefore respectfully submit that there was, in the item upon which the Board acted, no property subject to assessment, or to increase of valuation.

F. G. Newlands, for Appellant.

Had the Board of Supervisors jurisdiction of the subject-matter; or, in other words, are the rights and privileges enjoyed by the Spring Valley Water Works under the Constitution and the general law of its incorporation and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, "franchises," within the meaning of Article xiii of the Constitution, and as such "property" subject to taxation, and, if so, has the law provided the mode of ascertaining their value?

The term "franchise," in its broad sense, means "exemption from constraint or oppression; liberty; freedom" (Webster). In this sense the right to vote is termed a "franchise;" so also the right of trial by jury, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press are termed "franchises." The declaration of the Constitution that the word "property" includes "franchises," certainly was not intended to apply to those general privileges and rights which society has guaranteed and secured to individuals. The "franchises" declared by the Constitution to be property, must be those special privileges, exclusive in their nature, conferred by the Government on individuals, and having the incidents and attributes of property; that is to say, they must be capable of private ownership, of assignment, and of being inherited. In this sense they are included in that division of property called "incorporeal hereditaments;" they are things without body, capable of being inherited, such as the right of "ferry," or the right of "fishery," or the right to maintain a "toll" road, conferred upon the grantee, his heirs or assigns. It is evidently in this sense, that the word is used in the Constitution, for in it the word "property" is declared to include "moneys, credits, * * * franchises, and all other matters and things real; personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership." The last words attach to and qualify all the taxable things referred to in the above quotation. Those franchises only which are "capable of private ownership" are to be assessed and taxed. If this is not so, then the Assessor must assess to each individual, and value the right to vote, the right of trial by jury, the rights of freedom of speech and of the press, and all other franchises and privileges which, in the struggle of the ages, have been secured to individuals by constitutional or legislative enactment. None of these are natural rights. It may be doubted whether man, considered as a member of society, has any natural rights; he has only those rights which society gives or permits him to enjoy; he has not the right to live, or to freely utter his sentiments, or to vote, or to be tried by his peers, save so far as society has conferred or allowed him to enjoy the right. He lives, moves, and acts with the consent or by sufferance of society. So that in this sense no man exercises or enjoys any rights or privileges which are not either the free gift of the sovereign power or the result of its unwillingness to restrain, whether that power be, as in Russia, a despotic Czar, or as in England, the Crown and Parliament, or as in America, a sovereign people acting through the Constitution which contains their fixed and permanent will, or through the Legislature which, as their representative, deals with the matter subjected to its discretion. Obviously the taxing power was not intended to be applied to such rights and privileges.

Assuming, then, that the word "franchises" as used in the Constitution, was not intended to be applied to those rights which are conferred by the Government upon individuals generally, and which are made by the Government of common rights and general enjoyment, but that it applies only to those rights and privileges exclusive in their nature, which are conferred by the Government upon individuals or corporations, which are capable of private ownership, which are subject to the dominion of the owners, which can be sold or given away or devised by them, and which come within the full meaning of the term "incorporeal hereditaments," the question arises as to whether or not the Spring Valley Water Works owns any "franchises" of the latter class. The Supreme Court of this State (San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 48 Cal. 531) say: "We are to ascertain the rights, privileges, powers, duties, and obligations of the Spring Valley Water Company by reference only to the general law under which it was incorporated," and also "the Legislature can neither pass a special Act granting powers or privileges to a particular corporation created under the general law which are not enjoyed by all other like corporations under the same law, nor pass a special Act limiting, or burdening with peculiar conditions, the rights or powers acquired by a particular corporation from the general law." That case overruled the case of California State Telegraph Company v. The Alta Telegraph Co., 22 Cal. 398, and in effect held that the Spring Valley Water Works could not become the grantee either directly or indirectly, either by direct grant or by the assignment to it of a grant already made, of any exclusive or special privileges conferred by the Government, and which could not be exercised without a grant from the Government. This Court will take judicial notice of the Constitution and of the general laws under which the petitioner was incorporated, and inasmuch as it has declared that Water Companies have not the capacity to acquire any rights or privileges from the Government save such as are contained in the Constitution and the general laws, no presumption will be indulged as to the ownership by the petitioner of any "franchises" or privileges conferred by the sovereign other than those contained therein.

The Constitution of 1863 declared (Art. iv., § 31): "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act except for municipal purposes; all general laws and special acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed." The general laws under which the petitioner was incorporated, are an Act passed April 14, 1853, for the formation of corporations for business and commercial purposes; and an Act passed April 22, 1858, entitled "An Act for the Incorporation of Water Companies." Under these Acts, the petitioner has the following rights and privileges:

1. The right to be a corporation—that is to say, the right as an artificial being, to act under an artificial name, and to exercise certain powers and duties of a natural person, among others, to sue and be sued, and to purchase, hold, sell, and convey real and personal property. Under the Act of 1853, any three or more persons could associate themselves together and form a water company, by signing and filing the proper certificate. This was a privilege made by the laws of common right and general enjoyment. All persons could exercise it. Under the Civil Code, § 286, "Private corporations may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves," and any five persons may associate themselves together and form such corporation. It appears, then, that the right to be a corporation, is simply a privilege conferred by the general law upon any number of persons, not less than three in the one case, or five in the other, whoever they may be, who may wish to associate themselves together, to exercise, as an associated body, under an artificial name, certain powers, and perform certain duties of a natural person. In other words, a corporation is a bundle of faculties. Could the faculty of a natural person to sue and be sued, or his faculty to acquire and possess property, be assessed as property? The right to the things sued for, which constitute choses in action or the property acquired and possessed, could be assessed both to natural and artificial beings, but not mere faculties or powers. The right to be a corporation is simply the right to exist at the will of the creator. Can the right to exist, either as a natural or artificial being, be valued as property?

2. Under the Act of 1858, water companies are granted the privilege of exercising the power of eminent domain; but they exercise this privilege simply as the agents of the State, for the purpose of serving a public use, to which their powers and property are delegated. This agency may be revoked at any time. It is a naked power—not a power coupled with an interest. Can the agency of the agent, whether natural or artificial, be assessed as property? Besides, this agency is not conferred on water companies alone, but upon every corporation or individual in charge of a public use. (C. C. P., §§ 1237 and 1263.) So that the right of exercising the right of eminent domain, for the purpose of supplying the city with water, has been made, by general laws, a matter of common right and universal enjoyment. This privilege of exercising the right of eminent domain is not property owned; the corporation exercising the privilege, can not assign it. "The State determines certain uses to be public, and then, since the State must act through agents, delegates the task of ascertaining what particular property is necessary to a use, and what is just compensation to a private proprietor. * * * The supplying of water to the inhabitants of a city is a public use. * * * But in the proceedings provided by law for the ascertainment of the property necessary for this use, and its value, the corporation takes no part, other than to initiate them. * * * A water company, having commenced such proceedings, can not sell and transfer its right to prosecute them, or to take private property to another water company, nor can the latter purchase such right." (Mahoney v. S. V. W. W., 52 Cal. 159.) All persons, both natural and artificial, who have in charge that use which has been determined by the sovereign power to be a public use, act only as the agents of the sovereign, and have no proprietary right in the privilege of exercising the power of eminent domain.

3. The only other right or privilege conferred by the general law of 1858, upon water companies, is the right of laying down pipes in the streets of the city, and supplying the inhabitants with water at rates fixed by law; but this right is not only common to all water companies, but is also conferred by Art. xi., § 19, and Art. xiv., of the New Constitution, on all individuals, so that this right which, if granted absolutely and exclusively to a single individual or a single corporation, and his or its assigns, might be regarded as property, has been by the fundamental law of the State made a matter of common right and general enjoyment. It is true that everybody does not exercise this right or privilege, just as everybody does not exercise the right to vote, but everybody has the right to exercise it, and it is even more unlimited and general than the right to vote, for the latter right is conferred only upon native-born inhabitants over twenty-one years of age and upon naturalized citizens, whilst the former right can be exercised by anybody, whether adult or minor, citizen or alien. This right or privilege has none of the incidents of ownership; no one can sell it, for everybody has it, and no person can gain by the accession of the right of another.

We have thus classified all the rights and privileges of water companies under the general law, and the Constitution of the State, and we find that they are all subject to alteration and entire revocation by the State; they are privileges enjoyed, not property owned. Webster defines property to be: "4. The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing; ownership; 6. An estate, whether in lands, goods, or money." Blackstone, book 1, page 138, speaks of property as an absolute right "which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land," and in another place, book 2, page 2, speaks of the right of property as "that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe." Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, in defining the word property, says: "It is the right to enjoy and to dispose of certain things in the most absolute manner, * * * so that property, considered as an exclusive right to things, contains not only a right to use those things, but a right to dispose of them, either by exchanging them for other things, or by giving them away to any other person, without any consideration, or even throwing them away."

Can it be said that any of the rights or privileges conferred on the petitioner by general laws, subject to alteration, amendment or repeal, come within the definition of the term "property"? This Court has already determined (People v. Hibernia Bank, 51 Cal. 243), that "credits," though admitted to be property within the above definitions, are not property in the sense in which the word "property" is used in Section 13, Article xi, of the old Constitution; but these rights and privileges are not "property" in any sense; the Constitution can not by a mere declaration make that "property" which has none of its attributes; it can not by a mere declaration make a liquid a solid, or substance spirit, or give a line breadth and thickness as well as length, or measure space with a yard stick—there are some things beyond the power of constitutional enactment. The constitutional provision will be entirely satisfied by confining the application of the term "franchises" to those grants made by the State already referred to which are "capable of private ownership."

This Court has already substantially determined that the privileges conferred by the general laws of the State are not property. In a recent case (S. V. W. W. v. Schottler et al.), the petitioner, claiming the right, under the Act of 1858, to an equal voice in the fixing of water rates, sued out a writ of mandate to compel the Board of Supervisors to fill a vacancy in the Board of Commissioners provided by that Act. The defense was that the new Constitution had changed the mode of fixing water rates and had vested the power in the Board of Supervisors, most of them consumers of water themselves, and all of them the political representatives of the domestic consumers and the agents of the city and county—the largest consumers of water. It was claimed on behalf of petitioner that the Act of 1858 was a contract, and that it had vested rights and property in the privileges thereby conferred; that among such was the right to have its rates fixed by a Board of Commissioners, two to be appointed by the Board of Supervisors and two by the company; that the new Constitution, if applicable to petitioner, was in contravention of the Federal Constitution in that it violated the obligation of a contract and deprived petitioner of its property (vested rights) without due process of law. The Supreme Court, in effect, determined that the Act of 1858 was not a contract and that the rights and privileges conferred by that Act were not "property." It follows, then, logically, that if these rights and privileges are not property within the meaning of the Federal Constitution, they can not be property within the meaning of the State Constitution. It can not be contended that the term "property," as found in the State Constitution, is used in a broader sense than in the Federal, for the term is used in the latter, according to all the adjudged cases, in the broadest sense of which it is capable.

Under the old Constitution, it was possible to grant a franchise, in the property sense of that term, to any natural person. Such grants were made, are now in existence, and may be taxed as property. But no such franchise could, under the old Constitution, be granted to a corporation; for the Supreme Court, in construing the provisions of the Constitution with reference to corporations, in San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., supra, in effect determined, not only that a corporation must be created under the general laws, but also that no special privilege or franchise can be granted to it after its creation, and that it can not acquire, even by assignment, any privilege, the nature of which is such that it can not be exercised without a grant from the Legislature.

Under the new Constitution it is impossible to grant a franchise, in the property sense of that term, to either natural or artificial persons, for it declares (Art. i., § 21): "No special privilege or immunities shall be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the Legislature. Nor shall any class of citizens be granted privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not be granted to all citizens." And again, (Art. iv., § 25): "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any exclusive right, privilege, or immunity—in all cases where a general law may be made applicable."

It is evident, therefore, that the day of "franchises" as "property" is over. The whole tendency of the civilized government is to do away with special or exclusive privileges, and wherever a right is extended by the Government to make it common to all. Equality of right, equality of privilege, and equality of burden, are now the crowning franchises of all persons, natural and artificial, in this State. The great difficulty in construing a word like "franchise," which has figured extensively in the evolution of government, is that the attributes of a by-gone age are likely to be given to it notwithstanding the modifications that may have taken place in its character and scope. As already stated the power of society over the individual is absolute. It is called the power of government, or the police power. Every privilege which the individual, either specially, or as a member of a class or in common with all other individuals, enjoys, may be regarded in one sense as a grant from the Government. The despot who rules with the consent or by the sufferance of society has absolute power over the vocation of life. He can grant to a certain individual the right to pursue a special trade exclusively, or he can throw open such trade or occupation to all. When such a grant is made to an individual, his heirs and assigns, it may be regarded as his property; and when such a grant is made to all individuals it is no less a franchise; it is a freedom, a liberty, but not "property." If we look back to the times of Elizabeth, James the First, and Charles the First, we will find many examples of special grants which partook of the nature of property. Hallam, in his Constitutional History of England, vol. i, chap. v, speaking of the reign of Elizabeth, says: "The crown either possessed or assumed the prerogative of regulating almost all matters of commerce at its discretion."

"Patents to deal exclusively in particular articles, generally of foreign growth, but reaching in some instances to such important necessities of life as salt, leather, and coal, had been lavishly granted to the courtiers with little direct advantage to the revenue. They sold them to companies of merchants, who of course enhanced the price to the utmost ability of the purchaser."

"In 1601 Parliament made a bolder and more successful attack on the administration than this reign had witnessed. The grievance of monopolies had gone on continually increasing; scarce any article was exempt from these oppressive patents. When the list of them was read over in the House a member exclaimed: 'Is not bread among the number?' The House seemed amazed: 'Nay,' said he, 'if no remedy is found for these, bread will be there before the next Parliament.'"

It was in those times that the East India Company was organized under letters patent from the crown, and vested with the exclusive right to trade in India. Monopolies were granted by letters patent, conferring the exclusive right to deal in necessities of life, such as coal, iron, soap, salt, leather, tobacco, beer, hops, linen, etc. (Bright's English Hist., vol. ii. page 629.) Rights of ferry, rights of wharfage, rights of fishing, rights of chase and of toll-roads, etc., were also granted. All these grants, as a rule, were made by letters patent, running to an individual, his heirs or assigns, and exclusive in their nature. They were protected by the courts as property, and it was held by the courts that no grant could be made by the sovereign which would interfere with or impair the exercise of the previous grant. They were therefore termed incorporeal hereditaments, and Kent, in speaking of such franchises, says (Kent's Com., vol. 3, page 458): "Another class of incorporeal hereditaments are franchises, being certain privileges conferred by grant from government, and vested in individuals. In England they are very numerous and are understood to be royal privileges in the hands of a subject. They contain an implied covenant on the part of the Government not to invade the rights vested. * * * The Government can not resume them at pleasure or do any act to impair the grant without a breach of contract. * * * An estate in such a franchise and an estate in law rest upon the same principle, being equally grants of a right or privilege for an adequate consideration. If the creation of a franchise be not declared to be exclusive, yet it is necessarily implied in the grant, as in the case of the grant of the ferry, bridge, or turnpike, or railroad, that the Government will not, either directly or indirectly, interfere with it so as to destroy or materially impair its value. Every such interference, whether it be by the creation of a rival franchise or otherwise, would be in violation or in fraud of the grant."

Such was the nature of franchises in England and also in this country at the time Chancellor Kent wrote. In the celebrated case of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton, 519, it was decided that the charter granted by the British Crown to Dartmouth College was a contract, and that an Act of the Legislature of New Hampshire altering the charter was an act impairing the obligation of a contract, and was unconstitutional and void. Justice Washington said (page 657):

"To this grant or this franchise the parties are the king and the person for whose benefit it is created or trustees for them. The assent of both is necessary. The subjects of the grant are not only privileges and immunities, but property. * * * Certain obligations are created binding both on the grantor and the grantee. On the part of the former, it amounts to an extinguishment of the king's prerogative to bestow the same identical franchise on another corporate body, because it would prejudice his prior grant. It implies, therefore, a contract not to reassert the right to grant the franchise to another, or to impair it."

Justice Story says (p. 700): "In respect to corporate franchises they are, properly speaking, legal estates vested in the corporation itself as soon as it is in esse. They are not mere naked powers granted to the corporation, but powers coupled with an interest."

Mr. Webster, in his memorable argument in that case, says: "Hume gives the reason: It is that such franchises were regarded in a most emphatic sense as private property. If it could be made to appear that the trustees and the president and professors held their offices and franchises during the pleasure of the Legislature, and that the property holden belonged to the State, then indeed the Legislature have done no more than they had a right to do. But this is not so. The charter is a charter of privileges and immunities, and these are holden by the trustees expressly against the State for ever."

The decision of this case attracted great attention. Its effect was feared; it placed the creature beyond the power of the creator, and as a result of it the various States adopted constitutional amendments providing for the formation of corporations under general laws, which should be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal. The Courts themselves in a measure shrank back from the doctrine of that case, and in a subsequent case, argued in the Supreme Court of the United States, entitled Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge et al. (11 Peters, 420), they modified the doctrine which had previously existed as to the exclusiveness of franchises, and declared "that a franchise conferred by the government was not exclusive unless so expressed in the grant." This remained the settled doctrine of the American Courts since that decision. It will be observed, therefore, that the tendency of the people, acting through constitutional conventions and representative Legislatures, and of the Courts, has been to modify the doctrine of the Dartmouth College Case, and to make powers conferred by the government upon persons, natural or artificial, mere privileges enjoyed, not property owned. This tendency has reached its highest development in our State, where the Legislature is not permitted to grant any special privilege to any person, natural or artificial, and where all privileges conferred by the sovereign power are made of common right and general enjoyment.

But while the tendency of the constitutional and legislative enactment has been to take away from all the rights and privileges conferred upon corporations the attributes and incidents of property, and to subject them entirely to the control of the sovereign will to be enjoyed only at the pleasure of the sovereign, yet the Courts, in considering these general privileges under the term "franchises" as subject to the taxing power, have sometimes lost sight of the change which has taken place in the character of such franchises, and they refer to the Dartmouth College Case as authority upon the proposition that corporate franchises are property, and as such subject to taxation. Thus, in Society for Savings v. Coite (6 Wall. 594), Justice Clifford says: "Corporate franchises are legal estates vested in the corporation itself as soon as it is in esse. They are not mere naked powers granted to the corporation, but powers coupled with an interest, which vest in the corporation upon the possession of its franchises." And he refers as his authority for this proposition to the Dartmouth College Case without inquiry as to whether or not the corporation under consideration had a charter resembling that of Dartmouth College, partaking of the nature of a contract, and as such property. And yet, while Justice Clifford in this case and in the two following cases in 6 Wallace, speaks of franchises as valuable, and as partaking of the nature of property, he expressly decides that the taxes in question, if regarded as taxes on property, would be unconstitutional and void, and upholds these taxes as taxes upon franchises and not upon property. He says (page 607):

"Nothing can be more certain in legal decision than that the privileges and franchises of a private corporation, and all trades and avocations by which the citizens acquire a livelihood, may be taxed by a State for the support of the State government."

And in Provident Institution v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 626, he says: "Regarded merely as a question of power, it is undoubtedly true * * * that the Legislature might as well exact a fee or tribute from brokers, factors, or commission merchants for the privilege of transacting their business." And again, page 630: "Considered as a tax on property, no part of the tax could be supported under the Constitution of the State. And there never was a moment when such a tax, if viewed as a property tax, could be upheld since the State was organized under a written Constitution." And again, page 631: "Franchise taxes are levied directly by an Act of the Legislature, and the corporations are required to pay the amount into the State Treasury. They differ from property taxes as levied for State and municipal purposes in the basis presented for computing the amount, in the manner of assessment, and in the mode of collection. And they are in lieu of all other taxation, State or municipal. Comparative valuation in assessing property taxes is the basis of computation in ascertaining the amount to be contributed by an individual, but the amount of a franchise tax depends upon the business transacted by the corporation, and the extent to which they have exercised the privileges granted in their charter."

It will be observed, therefore, that the taxes referred to in these cases were in the nature of excise or license taxes and were imposed upon the privilege of a corporation to do business, just as they might be, and often are, imposed upon the privilege of an individual to engage in business, or in the practice of a profession.

Examination also has developed the fact which would warrant Mr. Justice Clifford in referring to the Dartmouth College Case, for a construction of the nature of the franchises in question, that the Hamilton Company and the Provident Institution, referred to in 6 Wall., were both incorporated under charters containing no reserved power in the State.

(Laws of Mass., 1824, c. 44, p. 227; also Special Laws of Mass., 1816, vol. 5, p. 172.) No general statute was passed in Massachusetts reserving the power to amend or repeal the charter of corporations until 1830. (Rev. Stat. Mass., 1836, c. 44, § 23, p. 366.)

We undertake to say that in no case has it been determined that the privileges conferred upon corporations by general laws subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal, have been determined to be property, where the attention of the Court has been called to the distinction between the charter or franchise of such corporation, and the charter or franchise under consideration in the Dartmouth College Case; but in many such cases without noting the distinction, franchises have been referred to as property upon the authority of the Dartmouth College Case.

A review of the cases in which a franchise tax has been sustained, will demonstrate that the tax was not upon the franchise as property, but upon the person of the corporation, measured by its net earnings or income, or surplus profits, or by the extent to which it exercised its franchise, the rate of the tax being fixed by the statute as well as the mode of measuring it, and the tax being in all cases regarded not as a tax on property, but as an excise or license tax, upon the vocation or privilege of doing business, and similar to the taxes which are levied upon different trades, occupations, and professions, such as those of auctioneers, peddlers, merchants, and lawyers. (See 18 Wall. 206; 6 Id. 594, 633, 656; 13 Id. 206; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514; Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. 150; Wilmington R. R. Co. v. Reed, 13 Wall. 264; Burroughs on Tax, § 85, p. 169; Constitution of Ill., art. ix., § 1.)

The only case which has been called to our attention in which a tax has been imposed upon the franchise of a corporation as property, separate and apart from the property in connection with which it is exercised, is the case of Exchange Bank of Columbus v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 7, in which the Court declared the tax invalid, in the following language: "It is proper here to remark, that it is said to have been determined by high authority, that the franchise of an incorporated bank, is the subject-matter of contract, and property of a clear and distinct character. If the corporate franchise of a bank be, in fact, property or effects of any description whatever, it is made a subject matter of taxation by the imperative language of the Constitution above recited, and should be placed on the list of assessments for that purpose. But what is the fact? Does a corporate franchise, in sober truth and reality, possess the essential qualities of property? It is said that the corporate franchise of a bank, conferring a peculiar legal capacity, and the high function of making and circulating paper money, is valuable—indeed, a thing of great value. But value is not the distinguishing attribute of property. The right of suffrage is esteemed valuable; a public office, with its emoluments, is valuable; a license to keep a tavern, as formerly granted in this State, or a license to carry on any special business which is prohibited without a special grant of authority from the Government, may be valuable; and a right to either of these things may be asserted and maintained in a Court of justice, yet neither of them possesses the essential qualities which constitute property. Our right to the free use and enjoyment of things which are in common, such as air, light, water, etc., is valuable; and our right to the free use of the public highways, and to many of the privileges and advantages derived from the Government, may be valuable, and may be maintained by legal process. Yet none of these things come within the denomination of property. Those things which constitute the subject-matter of private property are such as the owner may exercise exclusive dominion over, in the use, enjoyment, and disposal of them, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. (1 Wend. Blackstone, 138.) It is a fundamental principle that property considered as an exclusive right to things contains not only a right to use those things, but a right to dispose of them, either by exchanging them for other things, or by giving them away to any other person, without any valuable consideration in return, or even of throwing them away, which is usually called relinquishing them." (Rutherford's Institutes, 20 Puffendorff, c. 9, b. 7.)

"It is said that capability of alienation, or disposal, either by sale, devise, or abandonment, is an essential incident to property." (2 Kent's Com. 317.) "A corporate franchise, therefore, being a mere privilege, or grant of authority by the Government, is not property of any description, and consequently not subject to taxation under the above provision of the Constitution."

In this connection it may be added that no objection whatever could be urged against a rule of assessment which would take the franchise as an element of the value of the property in connection with which it is used. The value of all property must be considered in association with the uses to which it is put and its adaptability to them. Intrinsically there may be no difference between the value of agricultural land and a lot of equal size in the business center of a large city; but the latter, as a matter of fact, has a greater commercial value, because of the valuable uses to which it is or may be put. So, also, the mains, pipes, and reservoirs of the Spring Valley Water Works have a value above that of mere iron or land, in connection with the uses to which they are put, the privileges granted by the Government, which are exercised, the skill and energy shown in the conduct of the business. The "potentiality" of the corporation may enter as an element into the determination of the value of its property; but certainly the mere privilege of transacting business in a certain way has no money value apart from the property with which it is associated and in connection with which it is exercised. No rule, therefore, can be adopted which regards the "franchise" as a distinct entity, as a unit. That rule only can be made applicable which values the franchise in connection with and as a part of the property with which its exercise is united.

But assuming that the general rights and privileges enjoyed by water companies under the Constitution and general laws are franchises within the meaning of the Constitution, and as such are taxable property, the next question which arises is as to whether the law has prescribed a mode for ascertaining their value; for the Constitution not only provides that "all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value," but that such value is "to be ascertained as provided by law." The only rule laid down in the Political Code for the assessment of property is that contained in section 3637, to wit:

"All taxable property must be assessed at its full cash value," which latter term is defined (§ 3617, subd. 5) as follows: "The terms value and cash value mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor." In other words, the rights and privileges conferred upon the petitioner by the general laws must be assessed at the amount at which they would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. This rule is no rule at all as applied to this particular class of property if they be such, for they would not be taken in payment of a just debt by the petitioner; the petitioner could not assign or transfer them; the creditor could not take them, for, as already shown, he could not gain anything by their acquisition beyond that which he already has.

In this case the Assessor valued the franchise of the petitioner at five thousand dollars; the Board of Equalization raised the assessment to five million dollars; the proceedings show that the rule adopted by the Board in making this assessment was one which has no countenance whatever from the statute. The rule applied was one which it was declared had the approval of the Supreme Court, in the case of San José Gas Co. v. January, viz., by ascertaining, first, the market value of the property of the corporation; and secondly, the assessed value of the property thereof; and deducting the latter from the former, the difference was declared to be the value of the franchise. But was this a correct or just rule, assuming that the Board of Equalization had the power to make a rule for themselves? Obviously not, the difference between the value of the tangible property and the aggregate value of the stock of the corporation is composed of various elements, among which may be enumerated the skill, ability, and enterprise with which the business is conducted, the fortunate conditions and circumstances surrounding it, the custom which has been gained by the steady pursuit of the business for a number of years and by a course of judicious and honorable dealing with the public. It would be as wrong to say that this difference represents the value of the franchise, as it would be to say that it represents the value of the skill, or ability, or enterprise employed in the business, or of the fortunate circumstances under which the business is conducted. True, it might be said that the business of the company could not be conducted at all without the franchise; but so also it might be said that it could not be conducted without iron pipes, or labor, or skill, or energy, or fortunate circumstances. Each element of the business is as valuable as any other, and it is the union of all the elements which makes the business profitable and which gives to the shares of stock their market value. So that this rule of assessment not only included the value of the franchise, that is the mere privilege under an artificial name, of exercising the power of a natural person, but also included the valuation of luck, chance, hope, skill, ability, energy, enterprise, and good-will.

The rule applied does not operate equally and uniformly upon all franchises, for in the case of a franchise enjoyed by an individual, there would be no stock from the aggregate market value of which could be deducted the value of the tangible property in order to ascertain the value of the franchise, nor is it an equal or uniform rule in any sense, for it applies only to corporations, whereas the business of private individuals and firms should be subjected to the same mode of assessment. A mercantile firm may have a stock of goods on hand worth one hundred thousand dollars, and yet its business, the good will, so called, with the advantages which years of skillful and honorable attention to business united with fortunate circumstances may have given, may be worth five times as much as the stock. And yet the Assessor assesses only the tangible property and lets the good-will go free. The law provides that "private corporations may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves" (C. C., § 286). Such a mercantile firm could, if it chose, form itself into a mercantile corporation. With a stock of goods on hand never exceeding one hundred thousand dollars it might earn, with the skill and ability of its members through the large custom acquired, a liberal rate of interest on five hundred thousand dollars, and the stock would sell in the market for that sum. In such cases the Assessor, pursuing the rule contended for here, would determine the value of the franchise to be four hundred thousand dollars; whereas, as a matter of fact, the right to be a corporation would be utterly valueless to a firm, and the difference between the market value of the stock and the value of the tangible property would simply be the good-will of the business; this would exist, whether the concern was incorporated or not; and yet the difference is assessed only to corporations and not to individuals.

A more glaring instance of the absurdity of the rule applied, is that of a newspaper whose value is almost entirely made up of skill, ability, enterprise, and good-will. Take the case of the two leading newspapers of this city, the Chronicle and Call, owned by private proprietors. Each is valued at about three hundred thousand dollars, and probably yields its proprietors a liberal interest upon that amount. Probably the only property connected with either of these papers which the Assessor would assess are the printing presses and fixtures, worth say, thirty thousand dollars; but if either paper should be incorporated into a joint stock company, with a capital stock of three hundred thousand dollars, its stock would probably sell for that amount, as the value of the stock in the market is largely determined by the rate of interest paid as dividends upon it. The Assessor then, in that case, would assess the franchise, that is, the privilege of conducting the same business in the name of an artificial being, at the difference between the value of the printing press and fixtures, and the market value of the stock, namely: two hundred and seventy thousand dollars. So the mere change in the conduct of the business of such a newspaper, from the hands of a natural person to those of an artificial person, would result in an assessment upon the latter ten times greater than upon the former, and yet this artificial person is a purely business corporation; it does not have the power of eminent domain, or exercise the royal prerogative of collecting tolls; the only franchise it possesses is, the right to be a corporation.

The Civil Code (§ 993) declares: "The good-will of a business is property transferable like any other." It certainly has more of the attributes of property than the general privileges enjoyed by a corporation under general laws, for whilst it is inseparably connected with the business to which it is attached, and perhaps with the name under which and the locality at which it is conducted, yet it can be sold or inherited in association with them. If then all property is to be taxed, and the general privileges of corporations are property and must be taxed, the "good-will" of every individual and firm doing business in San Francisco must also be taxed. But has the statute laid down any rule whatever for measuring the value of the good will of a business? It simply says that all property shall be taxed at its full cash value, i. e., the amount at which it would be taken by a creditor in payment of a solvent debt. But no person would buy, and no creditor would take the good-will of an establishment disassociated from the place of business and from the stock. If, then, legislative action is required in order to prescribe the mode of assessing the value of the good-will, it is also required for assessing the value of the general privileges of corporations. In both cases it is equally impossible to determine "their full cash value," for this term means the value that would be paid in cash for a transfer of the property. As already shown, the rights and privileges constituting the franchise can not be sold, and if sold would add nothing to the wealth of the buyer. As to the good-will, it can not be sold, and it has no value except in connection with the stock, the place of business, and the name of the individual or firm conducting it.

In the case of Dewitt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, the Court declared the mere right to collect wharfage and dockage for a certain term of years, was neither real estate nor personal property, but a franchise or incorporeal hereditament, an uncertain profit issuing out of the realty, and also that the statute did not prescribe the mode for assessing its value, and until it did so, no assessment of it could be made. It may be said that this case, whilst it demonstrates that the Legislature must proscribe some rule for assessing franchises, yet declares them to be property. An examination of the case, however, will disclose that the rights and privileges under consideration were exclusive in their nature, and ran to the grantees and their assigns. As such they came within the meaning of the term "franchise" in its property sense, as hereinbefore declared. Whilst, then, the assessment of these rights and privileges, if they be property, must be left to the judgment of the Assessor, yet the rule by which the assessment is to be made, can not be left to his discretion or caprice. It must be clearly defined by the statute. It can not be left to him to determine whether he will adopt the rule that is prescribed by statute in Massachusetts, or Pennsylvania, or Delaware, or Illinois, in each of which States a different rule prevails. Nor can he adopt his own rule; for if this were the case, we should have as many different rules for determining the value of franchises as there are Assessors and Boards of Equalization in the State. The very rule applied in this case can not be applied to all corporations, for it presupposes that the capital stock of a corporation has a market value, whereas we all know that the shares of stock of many mining corporations owning property of great value, are not on the market at all, and it is impossible to ascertain their real value by any market quotations. In the case of the valuation of the good-will of a firm or individual doing business, there would be no shares of stock whose aggregate market value would make an element in the calculation.

Where a defendant appears for the purpose of taking advantage of an irregular summons, by a motion to dismiss, it does not amount to a waiver of his rights so as to cure the defect; nor does he waive his rights by answering and moving to dismiss, and motion overruled. (Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339.) A notice given by an attorney on behalf of a defendant, to plaintiff's attorney, that defendant will move before a Court Commissioner, that an attachment issued in the case be dissolved, does not constitute an appearance in the action. (Glidden v. Packard, 28 id. 649.) A person has a right to appear for the special purpose of moving to dismiss a defective summons. If the Court denies the motion, a general appearance afterwards and an answer does not waive the right or cure the error. (Lyman v. Milton, 44 id. 631; Lander v. Fleming, 47 id. 615.)

THORNTON, J.:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, denying the application of the Spring Valley Water Works for a writ of review, and confirming the action of the Board of Equalization of the city and county above named. The writ was sued out to review the action of the Board of Equalization in raising the assessment of the franchise of the Water Works above named from five thousand dollars to five million dollars, and to have it vacated and set aside as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the Board.

It is contended, on behalf of the appellant, that no notice, as required by law, was given to the Water Works, inasmuch as it was not given in accordance with a rule prescribed in advance by the Board. This Court has recently decided that these rules are no part of the record and proceedings to be brought up on certiorari. (Garretson v. Supervisors, 9 Pac. C. L. J. 685.) This point will not, therefore, be further considered.

The next point relates to the service of notice. The transcript shows that notices to appear and show cause before the Board of Supervisors, at their chambers in the City Hall, on Friday, June 24, at ten o'clock A. M., why the assessment of the Spring Valley Water Works should not be raised to fourteen million dollars, addressed to the President and Secretary of the Spring Valley Water Works, were served on June twenty-third and twenty-fourth on these officers, by leaving them (the notices) "at the office of the Spring Valley Water Works, at its principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco." It also appears from the record that a notice addressed "to the Spring Valley Water Works Company, Charles Webb Howard, President, and William Norris, Secretary," was served on the twenty-fourth of June, 1881. This notice bore date the day just named, was entitled "In the matter of the equalization of the assessment of the Spring Valley Water Works Company," and the tenor of it was to inform and notify the Water Works Company that the petition to have the assessment on its franchise raised, then on file with the Board of Equalization, would be taken up and acted on by the Board at its chambers at the New City Hall, on Saturday, June 25, 1881, at ten o'clock A. M., and it was thereby cited to appear and then and there show cause why the petition referred to should not be granted. This notice issued by an order of the Board made on the twenty-fourth of June, 1881, and was served on the same day by leaving it at the office of the company, as stated with regard to the notice first mentioned.

On the twenty-fourth of June, 1881, the Board took up the application to increase the valuation of the franchise of the Spring Valley Water Works. Charles N. Fox, Esq., attorney, then appeared and protested on behalf of the Spring Valley Water Works against a consideration of the application made in reference to said Water Works at that time, for want of jurisdiction on the part of the Board, inasmuch as the Board had adopted no rule prescribing the form and manner of notice, and therefore any further action by the Board would be in violation of law; and that sufficient time was not allowed the Spring Valley Water Works as contemplated by law to prepare and present its case. He (Fox) stated that a notice had been served upon the Secretary of the company on the afternoon of the preceding day, at four o'clock, just at the time of the closing of the office, to appear before the Board this morning. Afterwards, on the same day, Mr. Fox reiterated his objections to the Board's proceeding, and stated that the President of the company was out of town when the notice was served on the Secretary, and the notice to the president to appear was not received by him until this morning—meaning the morning of the twenty-fourth.

The Board determined the question of jurisdiction adversely to the contention of Mr. Fox. He (Fox) then requested that the hearing of the case be postponed until the next day (Saturday) or the Monday following, so as to give the company an opportunity for preparation and consultation. A like request for postponement on behalf of the San Francisco Gas Light Company was also made (the cases of these two companies were heard together), and on motion further action in the cases of the Spring Valley Water Works and the San Francisco Gas Light Company was postponed until the forenoon of the next day, Saturday, twenty-fifth of June, at ten o'clock. On the next day (twenty-fifth of June) at the request of R. P. Clement, Esq., who appeared on behalf of the San Francisco Gas Light Company (the case of the company last named being heard with that of the Spring Valley Water Works), and requested a further postponement of the cases of both companies until two o'clock on that day, for the purpose of allowing the respective counsel to have a consultation with the officers of the companies as to these cases. The cases of the above mentioned companies were afterwards on same day taken up for hearing, when the attorneys were called on to make an admission as to the value of the stock of the companies mentioned. Thereupon Mr. Fox stated that on yesterday he agreed, if ever the case reached that point, that he would admit that the market value of the stock (referring to the Spring Valley Water Works stock) on the seventh day of March, 1881, was par, reserving the right to object to its relevancy, but that on reflection he declined to appear for the water company further than to make the point made at the preceding meeting to the jurisdiction of the Board for want of notice to the company, and to repeat that no notice had been yet given the company. After this the Board proceeded to act upon the case of the Spring Valley Water Works, and raised the assessment as above stated.

It thus appears that after the Board had passed on the question of jurisdiction, Mr. Fox, who represented the Water Works, asked for a postponement of the case of the Water Works, which was granted, and that subsequently another postponement was granted. After this he declined further to appear, announcing his determination to rest on the question of jurisdiction.

It also appears that a notice addressed to the company was served on it on the twenty-fourth of June, to appear on the next day and show cause why the assessment of its franchise should not be raised, and that on request, two postponements were granted the company.

It is urged that the company was entitled to ten days' notice that the Board would act, by virtue of the provisions of Section 3681 of the Political Code. But that section has no application to such a case as this, as a careful perusal of it will show.

Mr. Fox appeared for the company on the notices served, and by such appearance we hold that all objections of mere form to the notice are waived. As to the reasonableness of the time given by the notice to the corporation to show cause, that is in a great measure left to the discretion of the Board of Supervisors. We can not, under the circumstances, hold it unreasonable. The Board has but a limited period under the law, to act on the assessment book, and the range of inquiry is within narrow limits. In determining the point as to the time allowed, we think it proper to take into consideration the fact that postponements were granted to the corporation whenever asked, up to the time that Mr. Fox withdrew from the case and declined to act further for the company. This withdrawal and declination took place under circumstances which indicate that every reasonable request for time would have been granted by the Board. Even after the withdrawal of Mr. Fox, distinguished gentlemen (F. G. Newlands and R. P. Clement, Esquires), learned in the law, were by the Board heard at length as taxpayers in regard to the matter. It was claimed by them "that there was no franchise enjoyed by the Water and Gas Companies." It is a fair inference from this, that these gentlemen were heard in support of the pretensions of these companies. We refer to this last action by the Board as a clear indication that every reasonable request for the time would have been allowed.

In our opinion (as intimated in Patten v. Green, 13 Cal. 330), such tribunals as the Boards of Supervisors ought not to be held to any great strictness of procedure in the matters above discussed herein; and if, under a rule or an order of such Boards, a party has notice of the intended action of a Board of Supervisors sitting as a Board of Equalization in regard to the assessment of his property, in time to have a full and fair hearing during the sessions of the Board, we shall hold such notice to be sufficient, unless it appears affirmatively that a full and fair hearing was denied him by the action of the Board. Of course, the rule as to time here laid down, is not intended to apply to a case where the law requires a notice of a definite number of days to be given, and no such notice has been given. We think the contentions of the appellant as to notice are untenable.

But it is said that there is a lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, that the Spring Valley Water Works has no property liable to assessment of the character of that upon which the increased valuation was placed by the Board of Equalization.

It appears from the petition, that the Spring Valley Water Works was a corporation prior to the seventh day of March, 1881, organized and existing under the laws of this State, having its principal place of business and doing business in the city and county of San Francisco. All corporations organized under the laws of this State, are, by the general law, vested with certain powers by express grant. This has been so since the passage of the first Act, in 1850, in relation to corporations. (See Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of 1850, in Hittell's Gen. L., 114, 115, as to corporations created prior to the Codes; as to those since, see Civil Code, §§ 354, 355.) They are invested with further powers by the particular Act under which they are incorporated, or by the title of the Code under which they are formed.

It appears from the statement of one of the counsel for petitioner, that the Spring Valley Water Works is a corporation formed and doing business under an Act passed April 14, 1853, for the formation of corporations for business and commercial purposes, and an Act passed April 22, 1853, entitled "An Act for the incorporation of water companies."

Under the laws of the State this corporation has power to have succession by its corporate name for a period of time (which must not exceed fifty years), to sue or be sued in any Court, to make and use a common seal and alter the same at pleasure, to hold, purchase, and convey such real and personal estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require, to appoint such subordinate officers and agents as the business may require, to make by-laws, not inconsistent with any existing law, for the management of its property, the regulation of its affairs, and the transfer of its stock, as well as all power necessary to the exercise of the expressly granted powers. (See sections of Act of 1850 above cited, and § 4 of Act of 1853 above referred to; Hittell's Gen. Laws, pp.

147, 148.) It has also the power under the Act of 1858 (see Stata. 1858, p. 213), to purchase or to appropriate and take possession of, and to use and hold, all such lands and waters as may be required for the purposes of the company, upon making compensation therefor. This last power enables the corporation to purchase the land and waters required for its business against the will of the owner, by availing itself of the provisions of the laws for the condemnation of land; in other words, to acquire such lands by the exercise of the power of eminent domain. It has the right also under the Act of 1858, subject to the reasonable direction of the Board of Supervisors, to use so much of the streets, ways, and alleys, of the City of San Francisco, as may be necessary for laying pipes for conducting water into the city, or any part of it, and also the right to furnish water to the inhabitants of the City and County of San Francisco, and, as this Court has recently determined, to the city also. The water so furnished is to be paid for at rates to be fixed each year in a mode established by law. A further power or right inhering in this company by the laws of the State, was the power or right to divide its capital stock into a number of shares, which are personal estate, each share representing a minute fractional part of such stock, and each share capable of ownership, of being sold and bought and transferred by a simple process of passing by will, or to one's heirs after his death through the medium of an administration, and each share securing to the owner a right to participate in the profits and property of the company.

The Spring Valley Water Works, on and prior to the seventh day of March, 1881, existed and had the right given by law to exist, with the powers and rights above set forth. It should be added here that the before mentioned powers or privileges were supplemented by a further grant, which inured to the advantage of the petitioner, which will be found in the third section of the Act of 1858, by which all the privileges, immunities, and franchises that might be thereafter granted to any individual or corporation relating to the introduction of fresh water in the City and County of San Francisco, or into any city or town in this State, for the use of the inhabitants thereof, were also granted to all companies incorporated before or after the passage of that Act. This last grant is a very important and valuable privilege, and, in fact, has been very valuable to the Spring Valley Water Works.

Blackstone says, in relation to franchises: "Franchise and liberty are used as synonymous terms; and their definition is a royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. Being therefore derived from the crown, they must arise from the king's grant; or in some cases may be held by prescription, which as has been frequently said, presupposes a grant. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite;" and adds, "that they may be vested in either natural persons or bodies politic; in one man or in many." And again on this subject he says: "To be a county palatine is a franchise, vested in a number of persons. It is likewise a franchise for a number of persons to be incorporated and subsist as a body politic, with a power to maintain perpetual succession, and do other corporate acts; each individual member of such corporation is also said to have a franchise or freedom." (2 Bl. Com. 37.)

Kent defines franchises as "privileges conferred by grant from government, and vested in individuals." (3 Kent's Com. 458.) He also says: "Corporations or bodies politic are the most usual franchises known in our law." (Id. 459.)

In Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 507, Perley, C. J., speaking for the Court remarks: "A corporation is itself a franchise belonging to the members of the corporation; and a corporation being itself a franchise, may hold other franchises as rights and franchises of the corporation." And further: "A corporation, being itself a franchise, consists and is made up of its rights and franchises."

In City of Bridgeport v. N. Y. & N. H. R. R. Co., 36 Conn. 266, Butler, J., speaking for the Court, uses this language in regard to a railroad corporation: "The term 'franchise' has several significations, and there is some confusion in its use. The better opinion deduced from the authorities, seems to be that it consists of the entire privileges embraced in and constituting the grant." (See Title "Franchise" in Abbott's Law Dict., and cases there cited.)

It is true that the privileges so granted by the Government do not pertain to the citizens of the State by common right. But what is the "common right" here referred to? Is it not a right which pertains to citizens by the common law, the investiture of which is not to be looked for in any special law, whether established by a Constitution or an Act of the Legislature? Coke says: "De commun droit — of common right — this is by the common law, because the common law is the best and most common birthright that the subject hath for the safeguard and defense not only of his goods, lands, and revenues, but of his wife and children. * * * This common law of England is sometimes called right, sometimes common right, and sometimes communis justitia." (Coke's Inst. 142a.) The definition of franchises as special privileges conferred by Government upon individuals, and which do not belong to the citizens of the country generally of common right, had its origin in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 575. A very learned and accurate writer, Mr. Emory Washburn, in his work on Real Property (2 vol. 267), adopts this definition and cites as authority the case above referred to from 13 Peters. The same definition is quoted by Angell & Ames in their work on Corporations, from the case referred to. (See Ang. & Ames on Corp., § 4.)

In the case in 13 Peters it was contended that under the laws and Constitution of Alabama the right of banking was a franchise. The Court refused to so hold, on the ground that the right of banking, at common law, belonged to every citizen. (See also Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 170, opinion of Shankland, J.) The discussion on the point in the opinion shows clearly that "common right" is used with the signification of common law.

We are of opinion that the common right refers to the right of citizens generally at common law. Such rights of citizens, though frequently spoken of as franchises, are not the franchises here meant; and it may be conceded that where such rights are granted to corporations, they are not franchises. But independent of the right to exist as a corporation, and to exercise powers in its corporate capacity, there are privileges granted to the Water Works, which do not, by common law, belong to citizens generally; such as the right to lay down pipes in the streets, ways, and alleys of a city, and to collect rates for water furnished, which was held to be a franchise in San Francisco v. Spring Valley Water Works, 48 Cal. 493, and in San José Gas Co. v. January, 57 id. 616. Conceding for the argument that the Constitution, by Section 19 of Article xi., grants this right to every person, it does not follow that it is not a franchise. They are vested by a grant of the sovereign power, and not by the common law; and the generality of the grant does not deprive them of the character of franchises.

The right to collect rates for use of water supplied to the City and County of San Francisco, or the inhabitants thereof, which the appellant has possessed at least ever since the Act of 1858 went into effect, is expressly declared to be a franchise by the Constitution of the State in the second section of Article xiv. thereof. As has been said above, the very existence of a corporation as such is a franchise, and it exercises its franchise in every act which it performs as a corporation. In The Bank of Augusta v. Earle, above cited, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Taney, C. J., in relation to the making of contracts by corporations, which, by common right, individuals could make said: "In making such contracts, a corporation, no doubt, exercises its corporate franchise. But it must do this whenever it acts as a corporation, for its existence is a franchise."

A corporation, whose existence is a franchise, may possess powers and privileges, which, in themselves, are not franchises (such as the right to bank, discussed in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, above cited, or the right to buy and sell property, real and personal), but it usually owns, along with such privileges, some that are franchises; but whether the powers be entirely of the kind which are franchises or not, its existence and right to employ its corporate powers is a franchise. This we think abundantly established by the cases above cited.

We have no doubt that it was the intention of those who framed and ratified the Constitution to place such franchises in the category of property to be taxed. The word "franchises," as used in the first Section of Article xiii., is used generally without any qualifying words, and is intended to embrace all franchises of the character above referred to, whether vested in individuals or bodies politic. A franchise conferred on an individual to lay down pipes in the streets of a city and to collect rates for water furnished a city or its inhabitants is to be taxed in the same way as when vested in corporations. The law in this respect is the same in regard to all persons, whether natural or artificial.

It is contended that the clause "and all other matters and things real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership," in Section 1 of Article xiii. qualifies the word "franchises," which precedes it. We do not think so. The structure of the sentence forbids any such construction. What is said before the employment of these words is complete of itself, and needs nothing to show what was signified. The words used show clearly that they were intended to add something to what preceded them, to refer to kinds of property not previously mentioned, not to qualify anything. They were doubtless inserted out of abundant caution to show that all kinds of property, whether specifically enumerated or not, were intended to be included in the property to be taxed, though not embraced in the specific classes previously mentioned. They constituted a declaration that in enumerating the property to be taxed it was not intended to confine the enumeration to "moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises," but to include all other kinds of property, and that by no construction of the word property, as used in the section, were any kinds of property to be left out.

But it is immaterial whether these words qualified "franchises" or not, for the reason that the franchises so referred to are capable of private ownership. To hold that a private corporation does not own its franchise right, power, and privileges would be both novel and untenable. Admitting that under the law of the State there may be legislation which might impair their value, it does not follow that it is not owned as property, with all the rights which attach thereto. All these rights exist until the legislative authority has acted so as to impair them or take them away; and until such legislation is enacted the rights of property remain unimpaired. There has been no legislation yet of the character as regards the appellant that has been called to our attention, or that we have been able to discover.

This franchise of a corporation is sometimes classed as real estate — of that kind styled incorporeal hereditaments. (Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford and New Haven R. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40; S. C., Id. 462; Price v. Price's Heirs, 6 Dana, 107; 1 Blackstone's Com. 20–22, 37, 38.) In the case cited from 17 Conn. 40, this was said of a bridge corporation. The shares of stock of the Water Works are by statute made personal estate. (See Act of 1853.) But whether real or personal estate, they are property. Such franchises, as long as they exist, are protected as property by the guarantee universal in the States of the Union, which forbids their being taken except for public purposes and on compensation being made. (1 Cooley's Con. Lim., 4th ed., 655, and cases cited in note 4.) During their existence they are as fully protected by law as any other species of property. On this subject see Wilmington R. Co. v. Reid, 13 Wall. 268; 3 Kent's Com. 458; Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 633; People v. Selfridge, 52 Cal. 331; T. & T. R. Co. v. Campbell, 44 id. 89; O. R. R. Co. v. O. B. & F. V. R. R. Co., 45 id. 365. (See cases just above cited from 17 Conn., and Norwich Gas Light Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co., 25 Conn. 36.)

The franchise of a corporation is and can be well defined to be the right of the corporation to exist and exercise the powers and privileges vested in it by its charter. (Burr. on Tax., § 83.) The franchise is the faculty of the corporation. As said by Redfield in his work on Railways: "The faculty of a corporation is its organic life; its corporate existence by which it is enabled to carry on business; that which it derives from its charter of incorporation, its corporate franchise." (2 Redf. on Railways, 3d ed., 452.) In this State, the charter is the statute or statutes granting and defining the powers of the corporation, under which it is constituted and exists, together with the instruments required to be executed by the provisions of such statute or statutes. These are sometimes called the constating instruments. (Field on Corp., § 34, n. 3.) Such franchises are legal estates, not mere naked powers, and are powers coupled with an interest, which vest in the corporation by virtue of its charter or constating instruments. (Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. 606; Provident Institution v. Massachusetts, id. 622; Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, id.

638; Porter v. R. R. I. and St. L. R. R. Co., 76 Ill. 561.) That the State has full power to tax them, see same cases, and State R. R. Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 603. In the case from 76 Illinois, above cited, it is said: "It is clear upon authority that the franchise of a corporation is property, and as such it may be a proper object of taxation." (P. 573.) In Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 547, Chase, C. J., used this language: "Franchises are property, often very valuable and productive property, and seem to be as properly objects of taxation as any other property." Daniel J., delivering the opinion of the Court in West River Bridge Co. v. Dix et al., 6 How. 529, said: "We are aware of nothing peculiar to a franchise which can class it higher, or render it more sacred than other property. A franchise is property, and nothing more." (See also Wilmingtong R. R. Co. v. Reid, 13 Wall. 264, and Monroe Savings Bank v. The City of Rochester, 37 N. Y. 367.) In this last case Fullerton, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said, in regard to a statute declaring the privileges and franchises granted by the Legislature to savings banks or institutions for savings, personal property, and liable to taxation as such: "In declaring the privileges and franchises of a bank to be personal property, the Legislature has adopted no novel principle of taxation. The powers and privileges which constitute the franchise of a corporation are in a just sense property, and quite distinct and separate from the property, which, by the use of such franchise, the corporation may acquire. They are so regarded by the law, and so regarded by common acceptation."

That such franchises can be taxed according to the valuation arrived at through an assessment is recognized in The Case of the Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 282, and in the case of The State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, Id. 296. In the case of the State Railroad Tax Cases, above cited from 92 U. S. Reports, a tax on the assessed value of franchise and capital stock by the State of Illinois was sustained, approving the decision to that effect in Porter v. R. R. I. & St. L. R. R. Co., above cited from 76 Illinois. (See also Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 133, and Judge Redfield's comment on this case in 2 Redf. on Railways, 453.) As to the extent of the power of the State to tax, see Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet.

562, and Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 639. In the case in 4 Peters, Marshall, C. J., said: "All powers * * * over which the sovereign power of a state extends are subjects of taxation. The sovereignty of a State extends to every thing which exists by its authority, or is introduced by its permission." (4 Pet. 563.) The same doctrine was declared in Osborne v. Bank of the U. S., 9 Wheat. 738. From the foregoing cases, it would seem that there can be no doubt of the power of a State to tax the franchise at its assessed value. There may be more difficulty in arriving at its value than that of a parcel of land or personal chattels, but still its value may be estimated. When it is condemned for public use, the compensation to be paid can be fixed. As is justly said in Porter v. R. R. I. & St. L. R. R. Co., 76 Ill. 578: "We have never known it to be asserted that the value of a franchise is so indefinite and uncertain that it can not be made the measure of a recovery when it is wrongfully invaded; or that when it is taken and condemned for public use, it can not be ascertained what compensation shall be made to its owner. It is recognized in those respects as being capable of a definite valuation. * * * If its value may be ascertained for those purposes, it may as readily be ascertained for the purposes of taxation." As to value of franchises, and that they possess a value beyond that belonging to the tangible property of the corporation, see cases just above cited. (Commonwealth v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen, 298, and Commonwealth v. Cary Improvement Co., 98 Mass. 23.)

In this State, the Constitution having declared that franchises are property, and that all property in the State not exempt from taxation shall be assessed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law (Const., Art. xiii., § 1), it would seem to follow that the tax must be according to the valuation made by the officer appointed for that purpose. If the State can impose a tax on the franchise of a corporation in the nature of an excise or duty, it does not exclude the taxation by a valuation made by an Assessor.

That such a franchise as that held by the appellant was taxable in this State, we think has been held by this Court in two cases: Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; and San José Gas Company v. January, id. 614. In Burke v. Badlam, an application was made to this Court for a writ of mandate to compel the Assessor of the City and County of San Francisco to assess to certain holders of certificates of stock in various corporations the respective shares held by them in such corporations, respectively, etc. The corporations mentioned in the petition for the writ were the Nevada Bank of San Francisco, the San Francisco Gas Light Company, the Golden City Chemical Works, the Selby Smelting and Lead Company, and the Virginia and Gold Hill Water Company. This proceeding was with reference to the assessment of 1881-82.

In deciding the case, the Court properly assumed, as it had a right to do, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the Assessor would assess in due time, to the various corporations, all of their property of every character, as required by the law.

It was claimed by the petitioner, according to the report of the case, that the Assessor must assess to the respective corporations all of their property of every kind, including their franchise, and to the individual stockholders thereof, the respective shares of the capital stock held by them. "If this would, in effect," said the Court, per Ross, J., "be assessing the same property twice for the same tax, it can not be done." (57 Cal. 600.) The Court then proceeds to declare that under the Constitution double taxation was neither required nor permitted, but was forbidden, and then passes to the consideration of the question whether an assessment as contended for (stated above) would be, in effect, assessing the same property twice for the same tax.

In discussing this question, the Court, after referring fully to the first section of Article xiii. of the Constitution, said: "Now, what is the stock of a corporation but its property, consisting of its franchise and such other property as the corporation may own? Of what else does its stock consist? If this is taken away, what remains? Obviously, nothing. When, therefore, all of the property of the corporation is assessed — its franchise, and all its other property of every character — then all of the stock of the corporation is assessed, and the mandate of the Constitution is complied with." Further on in the opinion, this is said: "To assess all of the corporate property of the corporation, and also to assess to each of the stockholders the number of shares held by him; would, it is manifest, be assessing the same property twice, once in the aggregate to the corporation, the trustee of all the stockholders, and again separately to the individual stockholders, in proportion to the number of shares held by each. As well might it be contended that the property of a partnership should be assessed to the firm, and, in addition, that the interest of each partner in the firm property should be assessed to him individually. If I have an interest in partnership property, my interest therein is property. It is the right I have to share in the profits and property of the firm, in proportion to the interest I own. But my property rights are confined to the property held by the firm, just as the property rights of the stockholder in the corporation are confined to the property held by the corporation. In the case of the partnership, take away all the property of the firm, and I have no longer any property as a partner. In the case of the corporation, take away all its property, which, it must be remembered, includes its franchise, and the stockholder has no longer any property. (57 Cal. 601-2.)

The conclusion is reached, that when the law is complied with by assessing all the property of the corporation, which property includes the franchise of the corporation, to assess the shares would be double taxation; because it would be, in effect, to assess the same property twice for the same tax, which the Constitution forbids. It is held in the judgment pronounced, that the franchise of a corporation of the character of those named in the petition, is the property of the corporation, and that, as property, it is taxable.

In San José Gas Company v. January, 57 Cal. 614, this Court held, that the tax of a franchise was legal. The franchise in that case pertained to a corporation for manufacturing and selling gas to the city and inhabitants of San José. The particular franchise to which the attention of the Court seems to have been directed in that case, was, that of using the streets, and laying pipes therein, for supplying a city with gas. The Court said this was a franchise, and by Section 1 of Article xiii. of the Constitution, franchises are declared to be property for purposes of taxation. It was argued for appellant that such a franchise, as the one mentioned, had no value. It was said by the Court, per MYRICK, J., in reply to this contention: "The method of assessment, and by whom, was to be and was provided by law. Therefore, it does not rest with the plaintiff, nor with the Courts, to determine that its franchise had no value. In a pecuniary sense, the value of franchises may be as various as the objects for which they exist, and the methods by which they are employed, and may change with every moment of time; but that franchises are property, and are to be taxed in some method in proportion to value, is a part of the paramount law of this State."

At the time that the action to which this case relates was taken by the Board of Equalization, and at the time at which the matters in controversy in Burke v. Badlam originated, the Legislature had acted in regard to the assessments of property, and enacted as follows:

"Shares of stock in corporations possess no intrinsic value over and above the actual value of the property of the corporation which they stand for and represent, and the assessment and taxation of such shares and also of the corporate property would be double taxation. Therefore all property belonging to corporations shall be assessed and taxed, but no assessment shall be made of shares of stock; nor shall any holder thereof be taxed therefor." (Pol. Code, § 3608.) (It may be remarked here that the constitutional validity of this section was affirmed in Burke v. Badlam. See 57 Cal. 602.)

"All property in this State not exempt" (stating the exemptions allowed by the Constitution, etc.) "is subject to taxation as in this Code provided." * * * (Pol. Code, § 3607.) In Section 3617 Political Code, which is a definition of term^s employed in relation to revenue and taxation, it is provided that "the term 'property' includes moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership." It is further provided in the same section, that "the terms 'value' and 'full cash value' mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor;" and that "the term 'personal property' includes everything which is the subject of ownership not included within the meaning of the term real estate." In the Political Code the word person includes a corporation, as well as a natural person. (§ 17.) Each person (which includes corporations) must furnish a statement of property, real and personal. Each person must insert in the statement of his property "all property belonging to, or claimed by, or in the possession, or under the control or management of any corporation of which such person is President, Secretary, Cashier, or Managing Agent." (Pol. Code, § 3639, Subs. 1, 2, 3.) As property includes franchise, the latter must be inserted in the statement.

The Assessor must prepare an assessment book, with appropriate headings, etc., in which must be listed all property within the county. In this assessment book must be specified in a separate column, under its appropriate head, all personal property, showing the number, kind, amount, and quality, and also the cash value of all personal property, exclusive of money. (Pol. Code, § 3650, Subs. 4 and 10.)

In subdivision 15 of the same section it is provided that "each franchise must be entered on the assessment roll, without combining the same with other property, or the valuation thereof."

The Assessor must complete the assessment book on or before the first Monday in July in each year (Pol. Code, § 3652), and as soon as completed he must deliver this book, with the map book (see § 3653) and statements, to the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, who must immediately give notice thereof and of the time the Board will meet to equalize assessments, * * * and in the mean time the book must remain in his office for the inspection of all persons interested. (§ 3654.) The section in relation to the power of the Board to equalize, so far as material herein, has been already quoted. (§ 3673.)

The power to act on each and every assessment is conferred on the Board, and to increase or lower it so as to make it conform to the true value in money of the property mentioned therein.

The above citations from the Political Code show that the Board has full power to act on the assessment of the franchise and increase or lower it as provided in Section 3673.

It appears from the record in this case that the Board of Supervisors, in the exercise of its power of equalization, assessed the franchise of the Water Works by taking the aggregate of the market value of the shares of stock in the company on the seventh of March, 1881, and deducting therefrom the value of the real and personal property of the company, and held the difference to be the value of the franchise. The market value of the shares was shown to the Board by the testimony of witnesses. Such a mode of arriving at the value of the franchise appears to have been adopted by the Assessor in San José Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614, and this mode was held to be within the powers vested in the Assessor. It was also impliedly approved as a correct mode in Burke v. Badlam, above cited. (See Commonwealth v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen, 306.)

If such power is vested in the Assessor, it was also vested in the Board of Supervisors in exercising their powers under the Constitution and statute of this State. (See Pol. Code, § 3679, as to what the Board may use in its function of equalization.)

In addition to what has been said above as to the action of the Legislature, it should be stated that on the same day on which it passed Section 3608 of the Political Code above quoted, it repealed Section 3640 of the same Code, which was as follows: "Each person, firm, or corporation, owning or having in his or its possession any of the shares of the capital stock of any corporation, association, or joint stock company, shall be assessed therefor. If the corporation, association, or joint stock company has its principal place of business in this State, the assessable value of each share of its stock shall be ascertained by taking from the market value of its entire capital stock the value of all property assessed to it, and dividing the remainder by the entire number of shares into which its capital stock is divided. The owner or holder of capital stock in corporations, associations, and joint stock companies whose principal place of business is not within the State, must be individually assessed for such stock. Shareholders, in the statement required by Section 3629 of this Code, shall specify the number of shares of stock held by them, and the name of the corporation. The owner of shares of stock, to be entitled to the deduction provided for in this section, must produce to the Assessor a certificate of the assessment of the property of the corporation, association, or joint stock company."

By this section, which was repealed as above, it will be seen that the whole property of the corporation including franchise and other assessed property, would have been taxed. This was by the operation of the section to have been brought about by taxing the shares to each owner of shares in the manner indicated by its provisions. But by declaring, as was done in Section 3608, that shares of stock were not to be taxed because they possessed no intrinsic value over and above the value of the property of the corporation which they stand for and represent, and as taxing of the shares and property both, would be double taxation, and therefore the shares should not be assessed, but the property should, no doubt it was their intention to tax everything in the shape of property owned by the corporation; that everything entering into and giving value to the shares should be taxed. It can not be doubted that the Legislature in acting on the subject of revenue and taxation during the Session of 1881, did not intend to leave the system in relation to so important a matter in such a shape, that so large an amount of property as indicated by the difference between the market value of the shares of corporations and the value of the tangible property of such corporations, should escape taxation. To come to any other conclusion, would be to impute to that body a most culpable dereliction of duty.

There is a further point which we think it proper to notice. It is contended that good-will enters into and forms an element in the value of the shares of stock. No case has been produced to us, nor have we been able to find any holding or even intimating that this is so. We find no such element of value in the least hinted at, by any one who has written on the subject, nor has any such been called to our attention. We can not recognize any such element as giving value to shares in a trading corporation. It would be strange to predicate good-will as pertaining to or extending to an abstraction, to an "artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law."

Our conclusion is that the Board of Supervisors in its capacity of a Board of Equalization, had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter in the matters involved in this cause, and the judgment of the Court below is affirmed.

TAXATION OF FRANCHISE OF CORPORATION — ASSESSMENT — POWER OF COUNTY BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — RULES OF BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — NOTICE TO TAXPAYER — CONSTITUTION — APPEARANCE IS WAIVER OF NOTICE — REVENUE — WRIT OF REVIEW — FRANCHISE — CORPORATION — SAN FRANCISCO. — Upon the authority of Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler et al., ante, 69, judgment affirmed.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. ALLEN, J.

Application for a writ of review. The facts in this case are in all material respects similar to the case of Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler et al., ante, 69. The proceedings before the Board of Equalization, in both cases, were heard together. After the decision a petition for a rehearing was presented and denied.

THE PEOPLE v. T. J. HOIN.

HOMICIDE—INSANITY—DEFINITION.—On the trial the Court instructed the jury: "Insanity, as used in this sense, means such a diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the act with which he is charged." Held, The instruction is correct.

Id.—Id.—IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE.—The Court refused to instruct the jury, on motion of defendant, as follows: "The mere intellectual knowledge of right and wrong is not enough to defeat a defense of insanity, unless with such knowledge the defendant also has the volitional power to choose the one instead of the other. No thoroughness of knowledge by the defendant that the act of killing the deceased then and there was wrong and forbidden would defeat his defense of insanity, if it were also legally proved that while he possessed such knowledge he did not possess the power to do or not to do the killing under the guidance of such knowledge."

Held: An irresistible impulse to commit an act which one knows is wrong or unlawful, if it ever exists, does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense. The instruction was therefore properly refused. Whatever may be the abstract truth, the law never recognizes an impulse as uncontrollable which yet leaves the reasoning powers, including the capacity to appreciate the nature and quality of the particular act, unaffected by mental disease.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in the Supreme Court of the City and County of San Francisco. FERRAL, J.

C. B. Darwin, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

McKINSTY, J.:

The Court below charged the jury: "As a defense to this prosecution the defendant has interposed the plea of insanity. * * * 'Insanity,' as used in this sense, means such a diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the act with which he is charged."

The charge as given is substantially the law as laid down by Tindal, C. J., in the answers of the English Judges to the questions propounded to them by the House of Lords, after the acquittal of McNaughton: "The jury ought to be told * * * that to establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of committing the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. The mode of putting the latter part of the question to the jury on these occasions has generally been, whether the accused, at the time of doing the act, knew the difference between right and wrong, which mode, though rarely if ever leading to any mistake with the jury, is not, as we conceive, so accurate when put generally and in the abstract, as when put with reference to the party's knowledge of right and wrong in respect to the very act with which he is charged."

Counsel for defendant asked the Court below to charge: "The mere intellectual knowledge of right and wrong is not enough to defeat a defense of insanity, unless with such knowledge the defendant also has the volitional power to choose the one instead of the other. No thoroughness of knowledge by the defendant that the act of killing the deceased then and there was wrong and forbidden, would defeat his defense of insanity, if it were also legally proved that, while he possessed such knowledge, he did not possess the power to do or not to do the killing under the guidance of such knowledge."

It is evident from the case as presented, that the instructions requested refer to an entire absence of power of choice which, it is assumed, may exist with a capacity to distinguish between right and wrong as applied to the particular act. There is no evidence tending to prove the existence of such physical disease as, of itself, and separate from its effect upon the mind, would deprive one of the control of his action, as in the case of the "convulsive fit" spoken of by Sir James Fitz Stephens. (Digest of Criminal Law, note 1, p. 361.) Such irresistible impulse to commit an act which he knows is wrong or unlawful (if it ever exists), does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense.

How can such impulse be known to exist? Rolfe, B., in summing up in Reg. v. Stokes, 3 C. and K. 185, said: "It is true learned speculators, in their writings, have laid it down that men, with a consciousness that they were doing wrong, were irresistibly impelled to commit some unlawful act. But who enabled them to dive into the human heart and see the real motive that prompted the commission of such deeds?" And the learned Baron charged the jury, "Every man is held responsible for his acts by the law of this country, if he can discern right from wrong." And in Reg. v. Haynes, 1 F. and F. p. 666, Branwell, B., said: "It has been urged for the prisoner that you should acquit him on the ground that, it being impossible to assign any reason for the perpetration of the offense, he must have been acting under what is called a powerful and irresistible influence, or homicidal tendency. But I must remark as to that, the circumstance of an act being apparently motiveless, is not a ground from which you can safely infer the existence of such an influence. Motives exist unknown and innumerable which might prompt the act. A morbid and restless (but irresistible) thirst for blood would itself be a motive urging to such a deed for its own relief. But if an influence be so powerful as to be irresistible, so much the more reason is there why we should not withdraw any of the safeguards tending to counteract it. There are three powerful restraints existing, all tending to the assistance of the person who is suffering under such an influence—the restraint of religion, the restraint of conscience, the restraint of law. But if the influence itself be held to be a legal excuse, rendering the crime dispunishable, you at once withdraw a most powerful restraint—that forbidding and punishing its perpetration." We must, therefore, return to the simple question you have to determine—did the prisoner know the nature of the act he was doing; and did he know he was doing what was wrong? The Reporter's head-note to this case contains the statement: "The circumstance of the prisoner having acted under an irresistible influence to the commission of homicide no defense, if, at the time he committed the act, he knew he was doing what was wrong."

In Reg. v. Barton, 3 Cox C. C. 275, Baron Parke told the jury "that there was but one question for their consideration, viz., whether, at the time the prisoner inflicted the wounds which caused the death of his wife, he was in a state of mind to be made responsible to the law for her murder. That would depend upon the question whether he, at the time, knew the nature and character of the deed he was committing, and, if so, whether he knew he was doing wrong in so acting. This mode of dealing with the defense of insanity had not, he was aware, the concurrence of medical men; but he must, nevertheless, express his decided concurrence with Mr. Baron Rolfe's views of such cases, that learned judge having expressed his opinion to be that the excuse of an irresistible impulse co-existing with the full possession of reasoning powers might be urged in justification of every crime known to the law, for every man might be said, and truly, not to commit any crime — except under the influence of some irresistible impulse. Something more than this was necessary to justify an acquittal on the ground of insanity, and it would therefore be for the jury to say whether, taking into consideration all that the surgeon had said, which was entitled to great weight, the impulse under which the prisoner had committed this deed was one which altogether deprived him of the knowledge that he was doing wrong."

It will be seen that the English Courts have refused to recognize the co-existence of an impulse absolutely irresistible with capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with reference to the act. It can not be said to be irresistible because not resisted. Whatever may be the abstract truth, the law has never recognized an impulse as uncontrollable which yet leaves the reasoning powers — including the capacity to appreciate the nature and quality of the particular act — unaffected by mental disease. No different rule has been adopted by American Courts.

The COURT:

Plaintiff sued defendant as the Sheriff of San Diego county, for the possession of certain sheep or the value thereof, and defendant justified under a seizure made by him in an action brought against the plaintiff and others by one Joseph Lambeye. There is but one point made on the appeal, and that is that the complaint filed in the case of Lambeye v. Lawrence et al. did not contain a sufficient description of the property. If the point were well taken it would not follow therefrom that the plaintiff has any cause of action against the defendant. The Court had jurisdiction. The process was regular on its face, and justified the defendant in seizing the property.

E. D. HAM v. THE SANTA ROSA BANK ET AL.

DECLARATION OF HOMESTEAD.—A declaration of homestead was filed, in which the value of the homestead premises was estimated at eight thousand dollars.

Held: The declaration was not invalid because the estimate of value was in excess of the value of the homestead interest exempted by law from forced sale.

Id.—SELECTION OF HOMESTEAD.—In the selection of a homestead there is no statutory limitations as to quantity or value. The law simply requires that the premises selected for that purpose shall be described, and that the value of the premises shall be estimated.

Id.—NO CONFLICT BETWEEN SECTIONS 1260 AND 1263, CIVIL CODE.—There is no conflict between §§ 1260 and 1263 of the Civil Code; the word "value" in the one refers to the actual value, or the value in the opinion of persons other than the declarant, whilst the words "estimate of value" in the other refer to an estimate of value in the opinion of the declarant.

Id.—CONSTRUCTION OF CODE.—If there is any seeming conflict between §§ 1260 and 1263 of the Civil Code, the two sections must be construed according to the canon prescribed by § 4482 of the Political Code for the construction of all the Codes.

EXCESS IN VALUE DOES NOT INVALIDATE SELECTION OF HOMESTEAD.—Exemption from forced sale is not an attribute, but only an incident of the homestead; the homestead may exceed the value limit of the exemption; but the excess in value does not invalidate the selection if it is otherwise valid under the provisions of §§ 1262 and 1263, Civil Code.

Id.—HOMESTEAD, WHAT IS.—In its inception then or thereafter, the substance of a homestead is a parcel of land on which the family reside. It is constituted by the attributes of residence and selection according to law. When these things exist so as to express its essence, the homestead becomes an estate in the premises selected, exempted by law from forced sale.

APPEAL by the defendant, the Santa Rosa Bank, from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Sonoma.
TEMPLE, J.

Action to foreclose a mortgage, made by one of the defendants, C. F. Jouilliard. Defendants Jouilliard and wife filed a cross-complaint claiming a homestead in the premises, and alleged they had filed a declaration in which they estimated the homestead premises to be of the value of eight thousand dollars. Defendant bank, a creditor of defendant Jouilliard, having a judgment lien which attached subsequent to the filing of said declaration of homestead, demurred to the cross-complaint of Joulliard and wife on the grounds that it did not state facts sufficient, etc. The Court overruled the demurrer, and rendered judgment for defendants Joulliard and against defendant bank, which ruling is assigned as error.

Rutledge & McConnell, and Henley & Hardin, for Appellant.

The naked question is presented in this appeal, whether a declaration of homestead is of any avail, which states the value of the property selected to be eight thousand dollars? Appellant claims that such declaration is void and makes the following points in support of such proposition.

Section 1260 of the Civil Code is as follows: "Homesteads may be selected and claimed * * * of not exceeding five thousand dollars." In this case the declaration states the actual cost value of the property to be eight thousand dollars.

We claim that the declaration itself shows the property to be of such a character in value that it can not be selected as a homestead, and if any person having property greater in value than the five thousand dollar limit, the Code imposes upon such person the duty, before any portion of it can be impressed with a homestead character, of segregating and measuring it off, and describing it in the declaration. This was the view taken by the Supreme Court of Michigan. (Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 501; Helpenstein v. Cave, 3 Iowa, 287; Thomp. on Homest. 112.)

The provisions of the Code in reference to the manner of selecting a homestead have been held by this Court to be mandatory. (Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 616.)

The section of the Code above quoted says homesteads may be selected and claimed, evidently contemplating the imposition upon the claimant of some act in the way of selection over and above the mere act of filing the declaration. Section 1263 requires the declaration to contain a description of the premises. This section must be construed with Section 1260. Now what premises must be described in the declaration? Why, the homestead premises, of course, which must not exceed five thousand dollars, but the premises described here are declared to be worth eight thousand dollars, and no five thousand dollars premises are described at all. Now, the object of requiring with such particularity the declaration to state the actual cash value, who is living on the land, a description of the premises, etc., undoubtedly is to enable all parties interested to see from the declaration what property is claimed. That requirement of the statute is not met by this declaration. An eight thousand dollar tract is described; and we are left entirely in the dark as to what portion of it is claimed as a homestead.

It can not be that the Legislature intended the effect which must be the result if the position contended for by respondent is the law. The premises described in the declaration constitutes the homestead, no matter what its extent or value, and if filed by the wife or husband, even against the consent of the other, on community property, of the value of millions, on the death of either the whole vests in the survivor. The heirs of one is absolutely cut off "without a shilling" without the consent perhaps of the owner and transferred to a stranger to his blood. The Legislature could never have intended such a result. The Legislature must have intended to compel the claimant to select and limit him to property not exceeding five thousand dollars in value. (See § 1265; Estate of Wixom, 35 Cal. 323; Matter of William H. Orr, 29 id. 103.) The Court will note that the Code is amended so as now to make the premises described in the homestead to vest absolutely in the survivor. (C. C. P., §§ 1265, 1474.)

In the opinion of Justice Rhodes, in Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 180, the homestead "at its inception is limited to five thousand dollars." And the machinery of the Code for the excess over that amount is supposed to apply to an enhanced or increased value subsequent to that time.

But it will be also noticed that the Code of Civil Procedure has been changed in another respect since that time. There is now "one homestead as against creditors, and a different one when the survivor asserts his or her claim as against the heirs of the deceased." During the life of the spouses the creditors under the provisions of the Civil Code can subject to the payment of debts this enhanced or increased value. But after death, and in appraising the value, the Code of Civil Procedure changes the rule and directs the inquiry to the value at the time of filing the declaration. (§ 1476, C. C. P.)

Whether subsequent Legislatures intended to change the law in accordance with the opinion of Judge Sanderson, in Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 226 and 227, or not, it is very evident it has radically changed the wording of the statute. Section 327, C. C., whilst adopting a part of the language of Section 1 of the Act of 1860, qualifies it by inserting the words "selected as in this title provided," and the word "homestead" is no longer used in the "popular sense," it is only a "homestead" now when selected as "in this title provided." The learned judge is undoubtedly referring to the Act of 1851, and quotes the first section thereof at page 227 of the opinion. (Compare the Act of 1851, page 296.) And is construing that law as applicable to the case then before the Court. (See statement of facts as found by the District Court, 33 Cal. 220, 221.) This is the only case referred to that gives countenance to the views of respondent. But can not be authority on the law as it stands now.

George A. Johnson, for Respondents.

I claim that there is no law in this State requiring a description of the homestead in the homestead declaration. It is "a description of the premises." (C. C., § 1263.) I claim there is no law in this State requiring an estimate of the actual cash value of the homestead; it is of "their" (the premises') "actual cash value." (§ 1263.)

There is no law that the declaration shall contain a statement that the person making it is residing on the homestead; but the statement required is that he is residing on the premises, "and claims them as a homestead." That there is a distinction between "the premises" and "the homestead," and that such was the legislative intent, seems to be apparent from Section 1263. All the other sections of the Civil Code are in accord with this view.

I call the Court's attention to Section 1241, C. C.: "The homestead is subject to execution or forced sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained" on certain debts which were liens on the premises, not on the homestead. What is meant by selecting and claiming a homestead, Section 1260 says: "Homesteads may be selected and claimed: "1. Of not exceeding five thousand dollars in value, by any head of a family." Then it may be selected and claimed by any head of a family. But there must be a dwelling-house in which the claimant resides. Section 1237: "The homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this title provided."

Any head of a family, then, may have a homestead in a dwelling-house and the land on which it is situate, if he selects it as provided. What section is it that provides as to the manner of this selection and claim? Most unquestionably, Section 1263. Does this declaration contain a statement that Jouilliard is the head of a family? It does. Does it contain a statement that Jouilliard is residing on the premises and claims them as a homestead? It does. Does it contain a description of the premises? It does. Does it contain an estimate of the actual cash value of the premises? It does.

It is not apparent that anything more can be done. This is the declaration that the law says shall be recorded in the Recorder's office of the county. (§ 1264.) This is the declaration, from and after the filing of which for record "the premises therein described constitute a homestead." (§ 1265.) All that Section 1260 determines is, who may have a homestead, giving the debtor the right to select one of several tracts, and to what value; a head of a family, five thousand dollars in value; any other person, one thousand dollars. It doesn't purport to contain the essentials of a declaration which is to be recorded, and from the filing of which for record the premises therein described are to constitute a homestead, as provided for, in express terms, by Sections 1263, 1264, and 1265, C. C.

The misapprehension consists in this, in supposing that our law requires any description of the homestead whatever, or any statement of the value of the homestead; whereas it is only a description of the premises which it requires, and a statement of their value. To state the value of the homestead would be a matter of supererogation, because the law fixes it at not exceeding five thousand dollars. (§ 1260.) There is no provision for recording any homestead claim under Section 1260, but there is for recording the homestead claim provided for by Section 1263, and from the filing of which for record the premises described do absolutely constitute a homestead, without any further conditions or limitations.

Section 1246, Civil Code, is certainly broad enough to cover every case, where "the value of the homestead exceeds the amount of the homestead exemption." If it had been the intention of the Legislature that this section should include only those cases where the value of the premises at the inception of the homestead did not exceed five thousand dollars, would they not have so enacted in clear and unambiguous language? Are we not to infer, therefore, from their using general words, without any conditions or limitations, that they intended to embrace all homesteads, without reference to their value at their inception, or to any class of homestead claimants? (McDonald v. Badger, 23 Cal. 397.)

"But a person can not thus inclose more than one lot in the homestead declaration, where the value of such lot, with the dwelling thereon, equals or exceeds five thousand dollars. And if it is attempted, the homestead claim will be held void as to all separate lots included therein, over and above the one thus occupied as a residence."

In Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220, the Court says: "The Act" (the Homestead Act) "is founded upon the idea that it is good for the general welfare that every family should have a home," etc. "It is for the protection and maintenance of the wife and children against the neglect and improvidence of the husband and father." (Cook v. McChristian, 4 id. 26.)

In Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 181, the Court says: "The value of the lands is not stated in the declaration" (that is of homestead), "and had such been the case, the declaration would not have been evidence of their value; but if the value then exceeded five thousand dollars, the statutory homestead could not embrace the whole number of blocks and parts of blocks mentioned." (Estate of George McCauley, 50 id. 545.) "No homestead had been selected during the life-time of the testator. The mortgages on the property exceeded ten thousand dollars. The court made an order for the sale of the land subject to the liens of the mortgages, and for setting apart a homestead to the widow out of the proceeds." The appraisers in this case appraised the premises at fourteen thousand three hundred and ninety-six dollars and sixty-three cents. The above order was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

The Constitution of the State says: "The Legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." (Art. xvii., § 1, Const. 1879, and Art. xi., § 15, Const. 1849.) In Gregg v. Bostwick, supra, the Court says: "If the homestead, when ascertained, exceeds the quantity named, where limitation is by quantity, it must be reduced by cutting off the excess; or, if it exceeds the value named, where limitation is by value, it must be divided, if that can be done; if not, it must be sold and the proceeds divided." Again: "Hence, neither quantity nor value can be taken into account as tests as to what the homestead is in fact in a given case, for they, in no just sense, enter into the definition of a homestead until after the homestead has been ascertained by other tests, and then they operate only as limitations."

How, then, can the statement of value in a declaration of homestead at eight thousand dollars operate as a test before there has been any judicial ascertainment as to what constitutes the statutory homestead, or the value of the premises?

In a number of the States there are constitutional provisions on the subject of homesteads, as in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Michigan, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, where the value is not to exceed a specified amount; and in Texas a certain amount, under the Constitution of 1869, at the inception of the homestead.

The case of Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 500, was decided under a constitutional provision, and as the Legislature had provided no means whereby a homestead in property not susceptible of division and worth more than the constitutional limit could be made available, as, for instance, by sale, and giving a certain portion of the proceeds to the homestead claimant, the Court held there was no homestead. But in California, the Legislature has provided the means, and the machinery for this purpose is ample, as enacted in Sections 1246 to 1258, C. C.

Smyth on Homesteads and Exemptions says this case of Beecher v. Baldy "presents an interpretation of the statute in relation to homesteads at variance with most of the cases which have come under our observation." (Note under Section 67.) He further says: "A person who is in debt and living on land which he claims as a homestead, but which is worth more than the statutory limit, is liable to have the overplus sold on execution. If the land can be divided in conformity with the statute, a certain portion, worth the amount in value allowed the debtor under the particular statute, may be set off, which he can hold exempt. But if, in the course of time, the portion so allotted to him has so increased in value as to be worth more than the statutory limit, the homestead may be divided a second time, and the overplus again sold for the satisfaction of creditors; and this course may be pursued as often as the homestead increases in value and remains divisible; but if indivisible, the whole may be sold by the creditor upon the payment to the homestead claimant of the amount exempt by law." (§ 91.)

A declarant of a homestead is between Scylla and Charybdis. If in his declaration he states that the value of the premises in which he claims a homestead is eight thousand dollars, he may tell the truth; but he thereby loses his homestead. If, on the other hand, he states the value to be five thousand dollars, he falsifies the facts, and runs the risk of losing his homestead on account of having underestimated the value of the premises in his declaration, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors.

Or, we will take another hypothesis: if he states the value to be five thousand dollars, he falsifies the facts; but he gains thereby a castle for himself and family, a shelter for his wife and children against his own pecuniary improvidence.

The difficulties increase. Suppose he estimates the premises at eight thousand dollars, when in fact they are worth only five thousand dollars, he loses his homestead, and yet the law protects five thousand dollars "in value." He has made a wrong estimate. Suppose he estimates them at eight thousand dollars, when in fact they are worth eight thousand dollars, he loses his homestead. He has made a wrong estimate in law.

The question then suggests itself, what is the use of any estimate at all, if all homesteads are made to lie in a Procrustean bed, and the value of the premises can not exceed five thousand dollars?

If Section 1263 of the Civil Code had provided for an estimate of the actual cash value of the premises, not exceeding five thousand dollars, it would probably have operated by way of limitation, and a declaration of homestead which stated the value at eight thousand dollars might be invalid. But there are no such words of limitation or prohibition.

I claim further, that as Section 1263 has been decided to be mandatory, and that an estimate of the actual cash value of the premises must be in some certain amount, that as Section 1264 has been decided to be mandatory also, and the declaration must be recorded, that Section 1265 is also mandatory, being in close chronological sequence, being also "in pari materia," and because it is there stated, in clear and unequivocal language, that from and after the time the declaration prescribed in the preceding sections is filed for record, "the premises therein described constitute a homestead." The legislative will thus made manifest should be obeyed.

The constitutional provision is equally clear. "The Legislature shall protect by law, from forced sale, a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." Not the homestead, but a certain portion of the homestead. Why are these words, "a certain portion," used? Because the homestead in fact may not correspond with the statutory homestead. Hence the language of Sanderson in Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 228: "If what is actually used as a homestead is of greater value than five thousand dollars, the excess is not homestead under the statute, though so in fact." This distinction should invariably be drawn between a homestead in fact and the statutory homestead, and with this discrimination the provisions of the Code are without complication, and the constitutional provision is easily understood.

But it may be claimed that, although this provision of the Constitution is made mandatory by the express words of the Constitution itself, that is to say, the Constitution of 1879, there is no legislative machinery to work out this beneficial result to all heads of families. That does not matter, if such was the case. (Van Hook v. Whitlock, 2 Edw. Ch. 304.)

Where a remedial statute does not point out the manner in which it shall be enforced, an action lies in favor of a party aggrieved by implication. What is more remedial than the homestead law? It protects the family against misfortune and improvidence. At common law, the creditor could not take the debtor's lands under his execution. It was by statute only that he gained this right. I cite, also, Goldman v. Clark, 1 Nev. 607, where Beatty, Judge, says: "If the Constitution and law has given her certain rights, the failure of the Legislature to prescribe the particular manner in which she shall proceed to enforce them, can not deprive her of those rights."

I may also cite, on this proposition, the case of Helfenstein and Gore v. Cave, 3 Iowa, 287, cited by appellant's counsel, for they have been most unhappy in their citations, where the Court says: "Where an end is distinctly pointed out by statute, but the mode is not presented, the Court will find a method." The other case cited by them, Beecher v. Baldy, supra, is not in accordance with the weight of authority, and its correctness has been challenged.

The Court:

As head of a family, the defendant, Jouilliard, filed a declaration of homestead in which he estimated the value of the homestead premises at eight thousand dollars; and the contention here is, that this estimate of value, being in excess of the value of the homestead premises exempted by law from forced sale, renders his declaration ineffectual to vest in the family a homestead right.

A homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides and the land on which the same is situated, selected as provided by law. (§ 1237, C. C.; Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220; Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176.) It is selected according to law whenever the claimant executes and acknowledges, as a grant of real estate is required by law to be acknowledged, and files for record a declaration containing a statement showing, (1) that the person making it is the head of a family, (2) that he is residing on the premises and claims them as a homestead, (3) a description of the premises, and (4) an estimate of their cash value. From and after the filing for record of such a "declaration" the premises described in it became the homestead of the claimant, and the record of the declaration operates as notice of the selection to all the world. (Tit. 5, Chap. 2, C. C.)

In the selection of a homestead there is no statutory limitation as to quantity or value. The law simply requires that the premises selected for that purpose shall be described, and that the value of the premises shall be estimated. It is just to infer that this requirement was of a true estimate, not a false one. It was not required to be under oath; therefore by making a false statement of the value, a homestead claimant does not incur the pains and penalty of perjury. So far as legal penalties are concerned, he is left free to insert a false estimate in his declaration; but, if he prefers to state what is true on the subject, the truth of his statement should not be used against him to destroy a right, if it be founded upon a compliance with the requirements of law.

Now the estimate of the claimant in the declaration under consideration, together with the description of the premises, and the statement that he was the head of a family, and was residing on the premises which he claimed as his homestead, constituted the essential elements of the declaration required by the homestead law to indicate his selection. The declaration itself was made strictly according to the formalities prescribed. In every particular the provisions of Sections 1262, 1263, Chapter 2, of the Homestead Law, were complied with. Having been strictly complied with, how can it be held that a declaration made according to the forms of law, is void under the law. Certainly there are no words in the sections referred to which make the legal acts of a homestead claimant issue in such a result. If there were, the provisions of those sections would be involved in absurdity — a thing which the Legislature could not have intended.

It is claimed, however, that such a result arises out of Section 1260, Chapter I. of the law by which it is declared that "Homesteads may be selected and claimed: 1, of not exceeding five thousand dollars in value by any head of a family." If this is to be regarded as such implication, it would prove too much. It would prove that the right could not attach under the statute, if the place declared on was of more than five thousand dollars in value, whatever might be stated as the estimate of value of the parcel described in the declaration. Certainly the statute meant nothing of this kind. Again, such implication can not exist, for the reason that the word "value" is used in Section 1260, and the language in Section 1263 is "estimate of value." The right of exemption is made to depend on the actual value, not on the declarant's estimate of value; on an actual existing reality, not on the fallible or mistaken opinion of the declarant of what that real value may be. In Section 1260, the law speaks of something certain; in Section 1263, of something existing in the mind of a person, of which certainty can not assuredly be predicated; for nothing is more uncertain or more variable than an estimate of value.

The Section (1260) ought not to be held to change the meaning of Section 1263, if the provisions of the two sections can be harmonized. These provisions can be brought into harmony so as to exclude any prohibitory effect in the latter section over the former by the fact that they refer to different things, one to value in the opinion of other persons, and the other to an estimate of value in the opinion of the declarant. If one portion of a statute is held to affect and change another, there must be a conflict in the controlling clause over that which it controls. And if there is no conflict here, no alteration can be allowed in one by the other. If there is a conflict and one changes the other section, why not as well hold that Section 1263 changes the meaning of Section 1260? If it is so held, the prohibition by implication ceases to exist. Besides, the question is pertinent here, who made Section 1260 the master of 1263? Who invested the former with dominion over the latter? They emanate from a common source of power, and that common source has not invested the former section with any such control. But this common parent has furnished the means of controlling this strife, for where there is a conflict between the two sections the difficulty must be solved by the canon prescribed in the Political Code, for the construction of all Codes.

By Section 4482 of that Code it is provided: "If the provisions of any chapter conflict with or contravene the provisions of another chapter of the same title, the provisions of each chapter must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such chapter." The broad language here used, "all matters and questions arising out of," etc., can not fail to strike the attention on a mere perusal of the section. And by Section 4484 of the same Code a like rule of construction is given for determining conflicting provisions found in different sections of the same chapter or article of the Codes; that is to say, the provisions of the section last in numerical order must prevail, unless such construction be inconsistent with the general meaning of such chapter or article.

Proceeding from these canons of construction, we arrive at the conclusion that there is no inconsistency or incongruity between the sections of the homestead law which we have been considering. For Section 1260 has its place in Chapter I., Title v. of Part iv., Division Second, of the Civil Code, and Sections 1262 and 1263 have places in Chapter II. of the same title. Both chapters have relation to the same general subject-matter, namely, the homestead. But the first chapter contains general provisions which relate to the persons entitled to select homesteads, the property from which homesteads may be carved, the exemption of portions of homesteads from forced sale, the mode and manner in which they may be alienated, incumbered, or abandoned, and the remedies by which they may be subjected to the claims of execution creditors. On the other hand, the second chapter relates to the mode of the selection of the homestead, the form of the declaration by which its selection shall be made, its recordation, and the tenure by which the homestead, when selected, shall be held. The two sections of this chapter, therefore, relate wholly to the selection of the homestead. But Section 1260 of the first chapter relates to the selection and something more—it declares that the head of a family shall be entitled to select and claim a homestead not exceeding in value five thousand dollars. By this language a different meaning is expressed, and a different subject referred to, from the meaning expressed and the subject referred to in the two sections of the second chapter. And assuming that a conflict exists between the sections or the chapters in which they are contained, each chapter must, according to the rules of construction in hand, be read by itself. So read and applied to the declaration of homestead before us, the declaration, appearing to have been made and filed in strict conformity with the provisions of Chapter II, assured to the declarant a homestead right to the premises described in his declaration. But his right in the premises was limited and defined by Section 1260 of Chapter I. Of these premises he could only claim and hold as against his creditors to the extent of five thousand dollars in value. Beyond that value, the premises were subject to the claims of execution creditors; the provision of Section 1260 was therefore subservient to the higher object of the entire title, namely the protection by law of the homestead; and there is no inconsistency between the two chapters.

It can not be denied that the entire legislation comprehended by the two chapters referred to was had for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution expressed in Section 15, Article xi. of the Constitution of 1849, and Section I, Article xvii. of the Constitution of 1879, whereby the Legislature was commanded to "protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." Exemption of a portion of the homestead premises from forced sale was therefore the special subject-matter and object of Section 1260, Chapter I of the homestead law. The entire property in such premises belonged to the owner; the title to it was vested in him; no legislation could divest him of it, and the premises were subject to the claims of his creditors, except so much of them as were exempted by law. But this exemption is not an attribute of the homestead—it is only an incident. In fact, the homestead premises may exceed the value limit of the exemption; but the excess in value does not invalidate the selection, if it is otherwise valid under the provisions of Sections 1262, 1263, supra. The excess, though used in fact as homestead, is always subject to the claims of the creditors of the owner, and the law has provided ample remedies for the enforcement of such claims. (§§ 1245–1259, Chapter I, supra.)

In its inception, then, or thereafter, the substance of a homestead is a parcel of land on which the family reside. It is constituted by the attributes of residence and selection according to law. When these things exist so as to express its essence, the homestead becomes an estate in the premises selected exempted by law from forced sale. The premises may be of greater or less value than the interest in them exempted by law. If less it may increase; but increase in value over the exemption only works diminution in quantity of the homestead. The excess in value, though it may be homestead, in fact, is not the interest in the premises which is exempted from execution. It is, as part of the homestead, subject to the jus disponendi of the owner and the claims of his creditors. And where the excess is shown by the estimation of value at the time of the selection, or by the increase of value after selection, there is no evasion of statutory requirements. In either case the rights of creditors are secured, and the rights of no one are interfered with.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. MANUEL SALORSE.

EMBEZZLEMENT — LARCENY — DEFINITION — BAILMENT. — The defendant was charged and convicted of embezzlement of a horse, hired to him by another. Upon appeal it was claimed that the conviction was erroneous, because the offense committed, if any, was larceny, not embezzlement.

Held: When the act of taking co-exists with a felonious intent to deprive the owner of his property, the offense is complete. Hence, if at the time of receiving the horse from its owner the defendant had the fraudulent intent to take it and convert it to his own use and to deprive the owner of it, and did in fact obtain the possession for that purpose, he would have been guilty of larceny, because a fraudulent receipt of the property of another amounts, in law, to a taking without his consent; but in this case there was no charge against the defendant, and no proof that the original taking was felonious; and the offense, therefore, constituted embezzlement, and not larceny.

Id. — ID. — MISDEMEANOR — FELONY — VALUE OF PROPERTY. — Under Section 514, Penal Code, the embezzlement of a horse or other of the animals specified in Section 487, Subdivision 3, of that Code, is felony, without regard to the value of the property.

ID.— ID.— VENUE — IRRELEVANT INSTRUCTION.—The defendant asked the Court to instruct the jury, that if the defendant, at the time of receiving the horse from its owner in the County of San Benito, intended to feloniously steal, convert, or appropriate it, they should acquit; and also the following instruction: "If you believe, from the evidence, that the horse was given into the hands of the defendant by the complaining witness in the County of San Benito, and that it was afterwards taken by defendant into the counties of Merced, Fresno, or any other county than the County of San Benito, and by him in such county lost or converted to his own use, you can not convict;" and the Court refused to grant the first instruction, and qualified the second instruction by adding: "Unless you also find that defendant, at the time of receiving the horse, intended to feloniously appropriate it to his own use."

Held: The first of these instructions was properly refused, because there was no evidence tending to show an appropriation by the defendant at the time of receiving the horse.

The second instruction as originally presented was not correct, because the fact that the horse might have been taken by defendant and feloniously converted to his own use in any one of the counties specified in the instruction, within five hundred yards of the county of San Benito, was ignored.

In modifying it, the Court, by its words of qualification, must have referred either to the appropriation of the horse within the five hundred yards belt between the County of San Benito and any of the outside counties, or to the original taking in the County of San Benito. If to the former, the instruction as qualified was not erroneous. If to the latter, it was, like the preceding instruction which the Court refused to give, inapplicable to the evidence in the case; and for that reason, even if erroneous, not calculated to mislead the jury.

ID. — ID. — ID. — DEPOSITION BEFORE COMMITTING MAGISTRATE — OBJECTION.—The District Attorney having offered to prove statements of the defendant when testifying as a witness in his own behalf, at his preliminary examination before the examining magistrate, the defendant objected on the ground that the deposition had been reduced to writing and that it was the best evidence; and thereupon the deposition was produced and read in evidence without objection.

Held: An objection to the admission of evidence can not be made in this Court for the first time. It is a general principle running through all the cases, that a party must object at the time the act is done or ruling made by the Court. If he does not, he will not be heard afterwards to complain.

ID. — IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS — IMMATERIAL ERROR.—A question was asked the defendant, for the purpose of impeachment, as to a declaration previously made by him; but neither time, nor place, nor person present was indicated by the question.

Held: The objection to the question was properly sustained, and, even if the ruling was erroneous, it was error without injury, because the witness did subsequently answer a like question without objection.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of San Benito County.

D. W. Burchard and H. W. Scott, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.:

This case arises out of an information against the defendant for embezzlement. Conviction followed the trial of the defendant, and on this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, it is contended on his behalf, that the conviction is erroneous, because the offense committed, if any, was larceny, not embezzlement.

The evidence went to prove that the defendant in March, 1879, in the county of San Benito, hired a horse from its owner for a term of two months, and he agreed that he would use it exclusively in San Benito County, and redeliver it to the owner at the end of the term, and then pay for its hire. Under this contract the horse was delivered to the defendant, who used it for about a month in San Benito County, but afterwards—some time in April, 1879—he took the horse out of the county, without the consent of the owner, into the counties of Merced, Stanislaus, and San Joaquin, where he tried to dispose of it by sale or raffle, and he never returned the horse to its owner nor settled for its hire, but converted the same to his own use.

1. The proofs did not make out a case of larceny. Larceny is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, or driving away the personal property of another. (P. C., § 484.) When the act of taking co-exists with a felonious intent to deprive the owner of his property, the offense is complete; hence, if at the time of receiving the horse from its owner the defendant had conceived the fraudulent intent to take it and convert it to his own use and to deprive the owner of it, and did, in fact, obtain the possession for that purpose, he would have been guilty of larceny, because the fraudulent receipt of the property of another, amounts in law to a taking without his consent. But here there was no charge against the defendant and no proof that the original taking was felonious. The horse was intrusted to the defendant by the owner for a lawful purpose. There was nothing in the evidence which tended to prove that the defendant received it otherwise than for that purpose; therefore the delivery was such as to divest the owner of the possession of his horse and to vest it in the defendant, for the time expressed in their contract, to be restored at the end of that time to the owner in San Benito County. In taking the horse for that purpose, the defendant became bailee of it for the owner, and continued to hold it as such until he absconded from the county, taking the horse with him. That act, being in violation of his duty as bailee and connected with the fraudulent intent to appropriate the horse, and to deprive the owner of it, as the jury found by their verdict, constituted embezzlement and not larceny.

2. But it is also urged that if embezzlement, the conviction is erroneous, because the property stolen did not exceed fifty dollars in value; and as embezzlement is punishable as larceny, the offense was a misdemeanor, and the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. If the offense was a misdemeanor it was barred, because the information was filed more than a year after its commission. (Pen. C., § 801.) But it was not a misdemeanor, unless the value of the property stolen constituted an element in the offense. As to the fact of value there is no conflict in the evidence. The horse did not exceed in value fifty dollars, and, in ordinary cases, this would amount to petit larceny, and would be a misdemeanor. In such cases it is true, as a general rule, that the value of property stolen must be alleged and proved; but there are exceptions to the rule in favor of a particular species of property designated by the Legislature. Thus, grand larceny is defined to be "larceny committed of a horse, mare, gelding, cow, steer, bull, calf, mule, jack, jenny, goat, sheep, or hog." (Pen. C., § 487, subd. 3.) Any one of those enumerated animals is made by the law the subject of larceny or embezzlement without reference to its value. The law makes no distinction between grand and petit larceny as in the theft of other species of property. It fixes a definite punishment for the stealing of a horse, whether its value be five hundred dollars or only five dollars. The value of the horse was therefore not an ingredient of the offense of stealing the horse, and it was not necessary to aver or prove its value; therefore, the instruction which the defendant requested to be given to the jury, to the effect that if the value of the horse did not exceed fifty dollars, and if the embezzlement of the horse took place more than a year prior to the filing of the complaint before the committing magistrate, they must acquit, was properly refused. (People v. Leehey, 4 Pac. C. L. J. 75.)

3. It is next assigned as error that the Court refused to give an instruction to the jury at the request of the defendant, to the effect that if the defendant, at the time of receiving the horse from its owner in the County of San Benito, intended to feloniously steal, convert, or appropriate it, they should acquit: and gave the following instruction, namely: "If you believe, from the evidence, that the horse was given into the hands of the defendant by the complaining witness, in the County of San Benito, and that it was afterwards taken by defendant into the counties of Merced, Fresno, or any other county than the county of San Benito, and by him in such county lost or converted to his own use, you can not convict, unless you also find that defendant, at the time of receiving the horse, intended to feloniously appropriate it to his own use."

The first of these instructions was properly refused, because, as has been already stated, there was no evidence tending to show an appropriation by the defendant at the time of receiving the horse. The second of the instructions, as appears by the record, is marked, "given with the words of qualification contained in the last part of the instruction."

As it was originally presented, the instruction was not correct, because the point of law comprehended in it was not stated fairly and concisely. The fact that the horse might have been taken by defendant, and feloniously converted to his own use in any of the counties specified in the instruction, within five hundred yards of the County of San Benito, was ignored. A fraudulent appropriation of the horse in any of those counties, within the five-hundred-yard belt of the county in which the horse had been rightfully received, would have made the defendant guilty, and he was not entitled to acquittal. So that, instead of modifying the instruction, the Court should have refused it. But in modifying it, the Court, by its words of qualification, must have referred either to the appropriation of the horse within the five-hundred-yard belt between the County of San Benito and any of the outside counties specified in the original instruction as presented (because the Court had previously fully instructed the jury upon that point), or to the original taking in the County of San Benito. If to the former, the instruction, as qualified, was not erroneous; if to the latter, it was, like the preceding instruction, which the Court refused to give, inapplicable to the evidence in the case, and, for that reason, was not calculated to mislead the jury; and if erroneous, the error was not prejudicial, for it appears, by the record, that the law of the case as it was submitted to the jury on the evidence, was fairly presented by the Court. By the unchallenged instructions contained in the record, the jury were correctly charged as to what constituted embezzlement, and also, as to the necessity of finding that the offense, if committed at all, was within the jurisdiction of San Benito County. Two of these instructions given by the Court of its own motion, two given at the request of the defendant, and one at the request of the prosecution, especially directed the jury that if they found that the offense was not committed in the County of San Benito, or within five hundred yards of the boundary line thereof, they must acquit. As an entirety these instructions correctly laid down the law of the case, and the verdict returned by the jury was according to the evidence. That being the case, this Court will not set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, even if it should find in the record an erroneous instruction, which was not calculated to mislead the jury, and where the jury were bound to find as they did. (Moffitt v. Cressler, 8 Iowa, 122; State v. Donovan, 10 Nev. 36; Carrington v. P. M. S. S. Co., 1 Cal. 476.)

4. For the purpose of proving the appropriation of the horse by the defendant and his movements in the several counties through which he went with it, the District Attorney offered to prove some statements which the defendant had made when testifying as a witness in his own behalf at his preliminary trial before the committing magistrate. To oral evidence of such statements counsel for defendant objected that they had been reduced to writing in the form of a deposition, and that the deposition was the best evidence. The deposition was then produced and read as evidence, without objection. Yet the admission of the deposition is now assigned as error. An objection to the admission of evidence can not be made for the first time in an appellate Court. It is a general principle running through all cases that a party must object at the time an act is done, or a ruling made by the Court. If he does not, he will not be heard afterwards to complain. (King v. Haney, 46 Cal. 560; People v. Long, 43 id. 444; Livermore v. Stine, 43 id. 274.)

5. The question asked by defendant of the complaining witness was evidently for the purpose of impeachment. But neither time nor place, nor person present, was indicated by the question (C. C. P., § 2054); the objection made to the question was therefore properly sustained. But if the ruling was erroneous it was error without injury, because witness did subsequently answer a like question, without objection.

Judgment and orders appealed from affirmed.

JOHN F. LANG v. MARGARETTE SPECHT ET AL.

SERVICE OF TRANSCRIPT PRINTED UNDER DIRECTION OF CLERK — RULES OF SUPREME COURT. — Under Rule 10 of this Court it has been the uniform practice, where the written transcript has been transmitted to the Clerk within the forty days fixed by Rule 2, or any extension of such period, to require only the service upon respondent mentioned in Rule 10; that is, service of copy of the transcript after the same has been printed under the direction of the Clerk. The rules do not require, in such case, service of the transcript before it is printed.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS WHEN DEFENDANT ABSENT FROM STATE, ON NOTE EXECUTED OUT OF THIS STATE. — The defendant S. pleaded the Statute of Limitations.

Held: As the note was executed in the State of Nevada, and there is no pretense that the defendant openly visited California more than two years before the commencement of the action, the Court below properly found against the defendant as to the bar of the statute.

CAL. REPS. LXII — 10.

FINDING — PLEADING — FINDINGS MUST COVER ISSUES. — The action is on a promissory note against the defendant S., who alone was served, as joint maker with one K., brought by the plaintiff as indorsee of the indorsees of the payees in the note. The complaint contains no statement of facts which would suggest that, as between themselves, K. was only surety for S., and that as such surety he had taken up the note, and assigned his right of action against S. The answer of S. avers payment of the note by K. The Court below found "that the payment made by K. & Co., was for the benefit of the defendant," "and that the payment was made by the firm of K. & Co., in liquidation of the debt, and that having paid the same as surety, his assignee is entitled to recover against his co-obligor, S., and that the assignment to the plaintiff was made in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, and that he is entitled to judgment for one thousand two hundred and fifty-three dollars."

Held: 1. If these findings could be read in connection with the evidence in the case, they would be strongly suggestive of payment.

2. But since they can not be so read, and they can not possibly be construed as determining that K. did not pay the note, the Court, therefore, failed to find on the issue of payment.

3. But if they could be construed as finding that K., as surety, paid the note for the benefit of S., and that he transferred to the plaintiff his right to recover of S., the findings would be entirely unsupported by, and outside of, the pleadings in the case.

APPEAL by defendant Specht from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. HUNT, J.

Action on promissory note. The action was commenced August 5, 1879, by the plaintiff, as indorsee of one John L. Koster, who was the indorsee of Lonkey & Smith, the payees of the note, against the defendant, Margarette Specht, upon a note executed by her and one A. M. Kruttschnitt, jointly, November 26, 1875, payable ninety days after date, for six hundred and ten dollars and forty-seven cents, with interest at the rate of two per cent. per month from date until paid. Although named in the complaint as one of the defendants, no judgment was asked in the prayer of the complaint against the defendant Kruttschnitt. Judgment was given April 21, 1880, by the Court against the defendants, after trial, as to defendant S., for the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and costs. The defendant S., after moving for a new trial, took this appeal on the thirteenth day of September, 1880. On the last day for filing the transcript on appeal with the Clerk of the Supreme Court, the appellant filed a written transcript, as provided in Rule 10 of this Court, with the Clerk, to have the same printed, served, and filed as therein required. The service of the transcript as printed, was made upon the attorney for the respondent on the twenty-third day of December following. The respondent moved in this Court, upon affidavits and notice, to dismiss the appeal for failure to serve, and file the transcript in time. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision in department, a petition for rehearing in bank was presented and denied.

F. J. Castlehun and T. C. Van Ness, for Appellant.

As to the first defense, the evidence shows that the note was made in the State of Nevada, on the twenty-sixth day of November, 1875, and that it became due on February 24, 1876. The action was brought August 5, 1879, more than two years after the making of the note. The Civil Code (§ 339, subd. 1) provides that an action upon an instrument in writing executed out of this State is barred in two years. Respondent claims that Mrs. Specht was absent from the State for at least two years (a fact not denied), and that therefore Section 351 of the Civil Code applies.

Appellant, however, contends that the last-named section does not apply, because the note in suit was made out of this State, between non-residents thereof. If it be held as applying to non-residents, the result will be that they will enjoy greater privileges than residents themselves enjoy. To illustrate: The payee of a note made in Nevada (supposing Nevada's law of limitations to be identical with our own) can hold a note made in Nevada for three years, eleven months, and twenty-five days, and can then bring the note to California, where, according to respondent's theory, the note will not be barred until the maker has been in California for two years. The presumption is that the Legislature never contemplated conferring greater privileges on non-residents than on residents. In support of this proposition we refer to the following decisions: Beardsley v. Southmayd, 3 Green (N. J.) Law, 171; Taberrer v. Brentnall, 3 Harr. (N. J.) 262; Wood v. Leslie, 6 Vroom (N. J.), 472; Hyman v. Bayne, 83 Ill. 256; Hale v. Lawrence, 1 Zab. (N. J.) 714.

The Court found that Kruttschnitt signed the note as indorser or surety for appellant. This finding is outside of the issues, as the pleadings show. It has been repeatedly held that a finding outside of the issues does not warrant a judgment. (Devoe v. Devoe, 51 Cal. 543; Morenhout v. Barron, 42 id. 603; Green v. Chandler, 54 id. 626.) The pleadings admit that Kruttschnitt and Mrs. Specht signed and were makers of the note. A finding which negatives the existence of a fact admitted by the pleadings is a finding against the evidence, and the judgment rendered thereon is erroneous. (Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468; Hill v. Den, 54 id. 20; Tracy v. Craig, 55 id. 91; Silvey v. Neary, reported in vol. 8, p. 677, P. C. L. J.)

In Murdock et al. v. Clarke, 59 Cal. 683, this Court used the following language: "It was said in the case of Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 332, that a plaintiff's case can not be better as proved, than it is as stated. It is a cardinal rule in equity, as in all pleading, that the allegata and probata must agree, and that averments material to the case, omitted from the pleading, can not be supplied by the evidence, or, as said in Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cowen, 711; S. C., 13 Am. Dec. 568, 'in a Court of Chancery, every material allegation should be put in issue by the pleadings.' Thus in Bank of U. S. v. Schultz, 3 Ohio, 62, it was held that 'a party can not travel out of the matter alleged in his bill to make a ground of relief; and accordingly the court, even upon an agreed state of facts, refused to find upon facts not put in issue by the bill.' And in a more recent case Morenhout v. Barron, 42 Cal. 605, the Court says: 'The complaint does not aver the agreement reserving the right to rescind, which is found by the Court. A finding is useless and idle, unless the facts found are within the issues; and a judgment based upon such facts can not be sustained.'"

If the Court finds contrary to the facts admitted by the answer, the findings must be disregarded. (McDonald v. M. V. Homestead Association, 51 Cal. 210; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 id. 278; Bradbury v. Cronise, 46 id. 287; Marks v. Sayward, 50 id. 57; Devoe v. Devoe, 51 id. 543.) If a finding is inconsistent with the judgment, it is fatal, without an exception.

(Lucas v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 591; Burnett v. Stearns, 33 id. 468; Solomon v. Reese, 34 id. 28.)

In the case at bar, there is a finding that Kruttschnitt signed as surety, and yet the judgment is against both the obligors. A finding "that all the material facts set forth in this complaint are true," will not support a judgment. (Ladd v. Tully, 51 Cal. 277.) If findings do not respond to the issues, the judgment will be reversed. (Roeding v. Perasso, 7 P. C. L. J. 153.) Where findings are contradictory upon a material point the judgment can not be sustained. (Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94.)

John C. Burch, for Respondent.

1. It is admitted that appellant made said note, so that the burden of proof of all matters of defense devolves upon the defendant. (Lindsiey v. Europ. Pet. Co., 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 176; 10 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 107; 41 How. Pr. 56; Hereth v. Smith, 33 Ind. 514.) Appellant, being on her way to Europe, made the note at Virginia City, Nevada, and left for Germany the next day, and remained away until just before suit was brought, August, 1879. It also appears that her place of residence is and was San Francisco. There is nothing in the first point.

2. In Bosquett v. Crane, 51 Cal. 505, this Court held that the findings may be amended on remittitur. In Le Clert v. Oullahan et al., 52 id. 253, where the findings were silent on a material issue, the case was remanded for further findings. But here the new matter set out in the answer is wholly immaterial and constitutes no defense. In McCourtney v. Fortune, 57 id. 616, Justice McKee, speaking for the Court, held, * * * "If there be no finding on a material issue, the judgment can not be sustained." (Phipps v. Harlan, 53 id. 87.) "But a judgment will not be reversed on that ground, where the want of a finding on a particular issue is not prejudicial to the appellant." (C. C. P., § 475.) No substantial right being affected (Johnson v. Perry, 53 Cal. 354), the judgment should be affirmed.

We submit that the appeal in this case appears to have been taken for delay. It is without merit, and damage should be imposed. (C. C. P., § 957.)

The Court:

Under rule ten of this Court it has been the uniform practice, where the written transcript has been transmitted to the Clerk within the forty days fixed by rule two, or any extension of such period, to require only the service upon respondent mentioned in rule ten, that is, service of copy of the transcript after the same has been printed under the direction of the Clerk. The rules do not require, in such case, service of the transcript before it is printed.

The note sued on was executed in the State of Nevada, and there is no pretense that defendant Specht openly visited California more than two years before the commencement of the action. The Court below properly found against defendant upon the plea of the Statute of Limitations.

The complaint alleges the execution of the promissory note by defendants Specht and Kruttschnitt as joint makers. It contains no statement of facts which would suggest that, as between themselves, Kruttschnitt was surety only for Specht, and that as such surety had taken up the note and assigned his right of action against his principal. The complaint alleges that the payees indorsed to plaintiff's indorsers. The answer of Specht avers payment of the note by Kruttschnitt. The Court found that Kruttschnitt signed the note as surety for Specht.

There is no finding upon the issue of payment, nor any finding relating to the matter of payment, except the following: "I further find that the payment made by Kruttschnitt & Co., was for the benefit of the defendant" (the only defendant served was Specht), "and that the payment was made by the firm of Kruttschnitt & Co., in liquidation of the debt, and that having paid the same as surety, his assignee is entitled to recover against his co-obligor, Margarette Specht, and that the assignment to John F. Lang, the plaintiff, was made in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and that he is entitled to judgment for one thousand two hundred and fifty-three dollars."

From the amount of the judgment it would appear that it was intended to allow for the amount paid to the payees or holders of the note by some party or parties with legal interest thereon. But, as we have seen, the action is brought on the note. If we read the finding in connection with the evidence to which it seems to refer, payment is found. But this can not properly be done. Separated from the reference to "the payment made by Kruttschnitt & Co."—a payment not previously mentioned in the findings—and the proposition of law insterted into the finding, that Kruttschnitt & Co., "having paid the same in liquidation of the debt, his assignee is entitled to recover," there is certainly no direct finding that the note was not paid by Kruttschnitt, who was joint maker as to the payees. In brief, the findings, so far as they go, are strongly suggestive of a payment of the note by Kruttschnitt; they can not possibly be construed as determining that Kruttschnitt did not pay the note. The Court, therefore, failed to find upon the issue of payment.

The findings—if they could be construed to be that Kruttschnitt, as surety, paid the note for the benefit of defendant Specht, and that he thereupon transferred his right to recover of defendant Specht to plaintiff—would be utterly unsupported by the averments of the complaint and entirely outside of the pleadings.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

C. ROSENKRANZ v. PHILIP WAGNER ET AL.

UNDER MECHANIC'S LIEN LAW, SUB-CONTRACTOR'S LIEN IS SUBORDINATE TO CONTRACT OF THE ORIGINAL CONTRACTOR—COMPLAINT INSUFFICIENT.—Action of foreclosure of mechanic's lien by plaintiff as sub-contractor under one W., the original contractor, against the defendants, Wagner and wife, owners of the premises. The complaint failed to state that anything was due from the defendants Wagner and wife to the original contractor when plaintiff's lien was filed or that defendants were notified or had any knowledge of the claim of plaintiff prior to the payment in full of the amount due to the original contractor under his contract. Held: The complaint contains no statements of a cause of action.

Id. — FINDING OUTSIDE OF ISSUE.—The Court below found as a fact that the defendants, Wagner and wife, were notified orally and in writing that the plaintiff had performed work, etc., for which he claimed sixty dollars and eighteen cents before defendants made the second payment of five hundred dollars to the contractor. Held: This finding is entirely without the issues made by the pleadings.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. LATIMER, J.

Action of foreclosure of mechanic's lien. In the complaint it was alleged, "that the defendant Philip Wagner is, and at all the times herein mentioned was, the owner of the land and premises situate," etc. (Here follows the description of the premises.)

"That prior to the twentieth day of November, 1877, said defendant, Wagner, had employed defendant, Walsh, as an original contractor, to improve, alter, and repair a certain building or dwelling-house on said lands, for him, defendant, Wagner. That defendant, Walsh, went on under said employment, and took charge of and improved, altered, and repaired said building on said land for said defendant. That under the direction, and with the knowledge of said defendant Wagner, defendant Walsh employed plaintiff on said building as a tinsmith, and to furnish the materials for all the tinwork thereon, namely, tin and galvanized iron, and promised to pay said plaintiff in gold coin upon the termination of his said labor, and for his said materials furnished, what the same might be reasonably worth. That, in consideration of said promise, said plaintiff went on and performed the labor and furnished the materials, consisting of tin and galvanized iron, required in the performance of all said tin work, between the twentieth day of November and the eleventh day of December, 1877, and all said materials were actually used in the said improvement, alteration, and repair of said structure. That the amount of said labor and materials furnished were reasonably worth the sum of sixty dollars and eighteen cents; that no part of said sum has ever been paid to said plaintiff, and that there remains due said plaintiff the sum of sixty dollars and eighteen cents gold coin therefor. That on, to wit, the fifteenth day of January, 1878, said building was completed, and within thirty days thereafter, to wit, on the seventeenth day of January, 1878, said plaintiff filed for record with the County Recorder of said city and county, a claim in writing, containing a true statement of his demand for said work and materials, after deducting all just credits and offsets, and showing that said sum of sixty dollars and eighteen cents in gold coin was justly due to him, said plaintiff, for his said labor and materials furnished, and also setting forth in said claim the name of the owner of said premises, to wit, Philip Wagner, and also the name of the person by whom he, said plaintiff, was so employed, to wit, George Walsh; with a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his said contract, and also a description of the property to be charged with his lien, sufficient for identification, which claim was verified by the oath of said plaintiff and was thereupon recorded in said Recorder's office.

"Plaintiff further avers that the whole of said land is necessary for the convenient use and occupation of said building. That he, plaintiff, paid two dollars and seventy-five cents for the said recording and verification of said claim; that one hundred dollars is a reasonable attorney's fee for plaintiff's attorney in this action, and that ninety days have not elapsed since the filing and recording of said claim. That said defendants, Mary Wagner, I. Wells, Bass, Doe, Roe, White, and Black, have each some claim against or lien upon said premises. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment," etc.

The defendants, Philip and Mary Wagner, after denying specifically the allegations of the complaint in their answer, alleged substantially as follows: That the property belonged to Mary Wagner, the wife of Philip; that the original contractor was one Ivory Wells and not G. Walsh; that plaintiff contracted with Wells to do the tin work, etc., on the house for a fixed compensation; that he failed to comply with his contract and abandoned it; that Wells' agreement with the defendants was to furnish labor and materials and make the improvements upon the premises for one thousand five hundred dollars, payable in three equal installments, as the work progressed and upon the production of the certificate of an architect showing due performance; that after the second payment to Wells he also abandoned the contract, and they, the defendants, as authorized by the agreement, after three days' notice to Wells, hired other parties and completed the improvements at a cost to them of four hundred and thirty-two dollars and twenty-three cents, leaving a balance of the original contract price in their hands of sixty-seven dollars and seventy-seven cents, which amount they had offered to pay to the plaintiff and the other claimants of liens, but as they refused to take it the defendants offered to pay the sum into Court.

The eleventh finding is as follows: That after the work had progressed so far as to entitle said Wells to said certificate of the architect entitling him to demand the said second payment of five hundred dollars, to wit, on the twenty-seventh day of December, 1877, said plaintiff notified orally and in writing said defendants, Wagner and Wagner, that he had performed the work, etc., for which he claimed said sixty dollars and eighteen cents, and had not been paid by said Wells, and requested payment therefor; that thereupon both of said Wagners told him he should be paid, and advised him to file a mechanic's lien therefor.

J. C. Bates, for Appellant.

T. F. Bachelder, for Respondent.

The COURT:

The Court below found as a fact, defendants were notified orally and in writing, that plaintiff had performed work, etc., for which he claimed sixty dollars and eighteen cents, before defendants made the payment of five hundred dollars to the contractor.

The finding is entirely without the issues made by the pleadings. The complaint fails to allege that anything was due from defendants to the original contractor when plaintiff's lien was filed, or that defendants were notified or had any knowledge of the claim of plaintiff, prior to the payment in full of the amount due to the original contractor under his contract. The complaint contains no statement of a cause of action. (Renton v. Conley, 49 Cal. 187; Wells v. Cahn, 51 id. 428; Dingley v. Greene, 54 id. 333.)

Judgment affirmed.

[No. 7,324. — Department One.]

PATRICK HANLY v. JAMES KELLY ET AL.

ELECTION — ESTOPPEL — TRUST — EQUITY. — The amended complaint showed in substance, that in 1873 plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant, James Kelly, which judgment established a trust in favor of the plaintiff as to certain money deposited in 1865 by plaintiff with defendant, James Kelly, repayable on demand; that demand was made in 1872, and defendant refused to pay, etc.; that the money was invested as part payment in the purchase by Kelly of a lot of land in his own name, and upon which a declaration of homestead was subsequently made by him. And the prayer of the amended complaint was, that it be adjudged that K. held such portion of the lot in trust for plaintiff as the trust money bears to the whole purchase price of the lot, etc. The allegation with reference to the investment of the trust moneys by Kelly in the lot of land, is: That whilst said trust money has been so as aforesaid in the hands of the said James Kelly, he, the said James Kelly, has invested the same and its proceeds, etc.

Held: For aught that appears, the investment was made with full knowledge on the part of the plaintiff before the action was brought to recover the amount deposited, with interest, which resulted in the judgment in the action at law, and since facts are alleged showing that the plaintiff had complete information respecting the amount and condition of the trust fund, he must be held to have elected his remedy at law, and estopped from pursuing in equity the fund into the homestead.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a judgment in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. HUNT, J.

Action to declare and enforce a trust as against the defendants James Kelly and Mary Kelly, his wife. The third amended complaint of the plaintiff sets forth: That on the nineteenth day of March, 1873, at said City and County of San Francisco, in an action in the Nineteenth District Court, the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant, James Kelly, which judgment conclusively established that on or about September, 1865, at said City and County of San Francisco, the plaintiff, through his wife, deposited with said defendant, James Kelly, through the wife of the latter, six hundred dollars, in lawful money of the United States, being money of said plaintiff, which money the said defendant James Kelly personally received, to be held and safely kept by him in trust for said plaintiff until the same should be thereafter demanded of him by said plaintiff, and upon such demand to be returned and paid over to said plaintiff; that such demand was made by said plaintiff upon said defendant James Kelly, on the twenty-first day of May, 1872; that said defendant James Kelly had never returned or paid over to said plaintiff said sum of money or any part thereof, and that there was then due from said defendant James Kelly to said plaintiff, on account of said trust money and interest thereon, the sum of six hundred and thirty-four dollars and eighty-two cents, together with the sum of seventy-nine dollars and seventy-five cents for said plaintiff's costs and disbursements in that action. That no part of said trust money, nor of any interest thereon, nor of the above-mentioned costs and disbursements has ever been paid by the said James Kelly to plaintiff. That, whilst said trust money has been so as afore-said in the hands of the said James Kelly, he, the said James Kelly, has invested the same and its proceeds (with two hundred and seventy-five dollars money of the said James Kelly), in the purchase of a certain lot of land (here follows a description of the land); and that said James Kelly has taken the deed of conveyance of said lot in the sole name of himself, the said James Kelly, which deed has been duly recorded in the Recorder's office, and is now of record therein; and that since the execution and recording of said deed, he, the said James Kelly, has executed and acknowledged before a Notary Public, so as to entitle the same to be recorded, and has since caused to be recorded in the same Recorder's office, an instrument of writing, purporting to be a "declaration of homestead." That by the placing of said "declaration of homestead," by the said James Kelly, on file in said Recorder's office, the said defendant Mary Kelly, who was then and is now the wife of James Kelly, has become and claims to be interested in said lot of land is a necessary party to this action, but has no interest whatever in said lot, otherwise than under and by virtue of said "declaration of homestead." That the said James Kelly holds and is in the possession and enjoyment of the said lot of land and improvements thereon. That there is now due from said James Kelly to this plaintiff the whole amount of said trust money, with interest thereon, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, from the date of said demand, to wit, from said twenty-first day of May, 1872, to the present time, together with said sum of seventy-nine dollars and seventy-five cents, the above-mentioned costs and disbursements. Wherefore, said plaintiff prays that the said James Kelly be, by this honorable Court, adjudged, decreed, and declared to have been from the time of his purchase of said lot of land, and to be now a trustee of such proportion of the title thereof, for the use and benefit of this plaintiff, as said trust money and the interest accrued thereon, bears to the whole purchase money of said lot; and that it be adjudged, decreed, and declared that this plaintiff has an interest in said lot and a lien thereon, to the extent and for the repayment to this plaintiff of the amount of said trust money and all interest now due or which shall hereafter become due thereon, together with said plaintiff's costs and disbursements aforesaid, and of this action; that said "declaration of homestead" be adjudged and declared of no force or effect as against this plaintiff and his interest in and lien upon said lot of land, for and on account of said trust money, interest thereon, and costs aforesaid; and that by the order, direction, and decree of this honorable Court, said lot of land, with the improvements thereon, be sold by the Sheriff of said city and county, and the amount of said trust money, together with all interest which shall then be due thereon, at the rate aforesaid; and said plaintiff's costs and disbursements aforesaid, be thereupon paid by said Sheriff to this plaintiff out of the proceeds of such sale, and that said plaintiff have such further and other remedy and relief in the premises as shall be consistent with law and equity.

To this amended complaint the defendants separately demurred; the defendant James Kelly assigning the following grounds: That said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this, that it does not appear that this Court acquired jurisdiction to render said judgment, as set forth in subdivision 3 of said complaint, or otherwise, against this defendant; and that as to said trust, the same was merged in said judgment. That said complaint is indefinite and uncertain, because it is uncertain which is the cause of action relied upon, the loan of said money on trust and the refusal to pay the same on demand, or the judgment recovered thereon; also, it is uncertain when said moneys were invested in said homestead lot, whether before or after said judgment; also, it is uncertain when he obtained the deed therefor to himself, or when the same was acknowledged or recorded, whether before or since the commencement of this suit; or when said declaration of homestead was made, before or since said judgment, or before or since the commencement of this suit; also, it is uncertain when Mary Kelly became interested therein, before or since the commencement of this suit, or rendition of said judgment.

The defendant Mary Kelly assigned the following grounds of demurrer: That said complaint does not state a cause of action, as against this defendant. That said complaint is indefinite and uncertain, in the respects set forth in the second subdivision of James Kelly's demurrer, herewith served and filed. That said cause of action against this defendant is barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of Section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State; also by the provisions of Section 343 of same Code; also by the provisions of Section 336 of same Code; also by the provisions of subdivision 1 of Section 339 of same Code.

The demurrers were sustained, and plaintiff failing to amend, judgment was given in favor of the defendants.

G. Heinlen and N. Soderberg, for Appellant.

We think it apparent that the statute of limitations did not run in favor of the trustee until demand. Citation of authorities is needless. This case is on principle like that of Shinn v. McPherson, 58 Cal. 596.

The present action is based upon the facts, which we aver were conclusively proved and established by the judgment mentioned in the complaint, and upon the additional facts contained in the present complaint. If, upon the trial, plaintiff proves all of those facts, he will, we think, clearly be entitled to the relief which he asks. (2 Story's Eq., §§ 1215, 1216 a, 1216 c, 1217, 1219, 1258, 1260, 1265.)

Plaintiff has the right to use the judgment mentioned in the complaint, as not only proving but as estopping the defendants from denying the facts upon which it was based. The same was done and approved by the Supreme Court, in the case of San Francisco v. Spring Valley Water Works, 39 Cal. 481, 482. (People v. Supervisors of S. F., 27 id. 674, 676, 679.)

E. A. Lawrence, for Respondent.

The Statute of Limitations runs on a certificate of deposit in two years, and also on a note payable on demand. Brummagim v. Tallant, 29 Cal. 503; Morrison v. Mullin, 34 Pa. St. 12; Estate of Galvin, 51 Cal. 215; Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 112.) If the judgment is the cause of action stated (Anderson v. Mayers, 50 Cal. 525), it is not alleged that summons was served, or that Kelly appeared, and shows no jurisdiction was acquired to render the judgment. Plaintiff has lost his right to bring this suit by laches. He has acquiesced in the purchase by Kelly. (2 Perry on Trusts, 850, 865, 869, 870.)

The Court:

The demurrer to the third amended complaint was properly sustained. The allegation with reference to the investment of the trust moneys, by defendant James Kelly, in the lot of land described, is: "That whilst said trust money has been so as aforesaid in the hands of the said James Kelly, he, the said James Kelly, has invested the same," etc. For aught that appears, the investment was made with full knowledge on the part of plaintiff before the action was brought to recover the amount deposited, with interest, which resulted in the judgment at law, and facts are alleged showing that plaintiff had complete information with respect to the amount and condition of the trust fund.

Under such circumstances, plaintiff must be held to have elected his remedy at law, and to be estopped from pursuing in equity the fund into the homestead. (See 2 Story's Eq. Juris. 1097; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 497; S. C., 5 Am. Dec. 291; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 141.)

Judgment affirmed.

BELCHER CONSOLIDATED GOLD MINING COMPANY v. AUGUSTINE DEFERRARI ET AL.

EJECTMENT — DAMAGES — FINDINGS — ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT. — The complaint being in ejectment, with an averment of damages, the Court below failed to find expressly upon the issue created by the denial of that averment; but no judgment was rendered for damages.

Held: The defendant can not complain of omission which did them no injury. The judgment will bar any further action to recover the same damages.

LOCATION OF MINING CLAIMS — ESTOPPEL BY DEED — JUDICIAL NOTICE. — The lower Court found that, on a certain day, the plaintiff became the purchaser by "deed from the defendants and others," of the mining claims described in the complaint, and entered into possession thereof.

Held: In the absence of proof of subsequently acquired title from a paramount source, the defendants are estopped from denying that they and their co-grantors were the owners of and entitled to the possession of the mining claims at the execution of the deed.

Id. — Id. — Id. — As the appellate Court takes notice of the character of the property, and its original ownership in the United States, defendants are estopped from denying that they and their co-grantees (or those from whom they derived) had located the mines in accordance with the laws of the United States, the only way in which the title could be acquired.

WORK ON MINING CLAIMS — FORFEITURE. — The lower Court found that in the year 1880 plaintiff expended in labor on the two claims one hundred dollars, and in January, 1881, resumed work upon the claims and expended in labor twenty-four dollars before the entry and location of defendants in August, 1881.

Held: Under Section 2324, Revised Statutes of the United States, allowing resumption of work, "after failure and before location," plaintiff's rights were not forfeited when defendants entered.

Id. — Id. — It is unnecessary to decide that an attempt to assert a continuous right may be based upon a pretense of work, so plainly a sham that it will be disregarded, as here the work done was actual and valuable.

Id. — Id. — Forfeitures and denunciations are not to be favored by basing them upon language which does not plainly and unmistakably provide for them.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff, in the Superior Court of Tuolumne County.

Street & Street, for Appellants.

The Court failed to find on all the material issues of the case, in omitting to find on the issue of damages. The judgment, as it now stands, could not be pleaded in bar to a further suit by plaintiff against defendants to recover the damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the acts of defendants. (Glascok v. Ashman, 52 Cal. 420; Morenhaut v. Wilson, id. 263; Watson v. Carnell, id. 91; Phipps v. Harlan, 53 id. 87; Baggs v. Smith, id. 88; Shaw v. Wandesforde, id. 300; Taylor v. Reynolds, id. 686; Paulson v. Numan, 54 id. 123; Byrnes v. Claffey, id. 155; Du Prat v. James, 10 P. C. L. J. 102.)

The first requisite for holding the possession of mining lands belonging to the Government of the United States is a location, which shall comply with the requirements of Section 2324 of the United States Revised Statutes. The court below has not found that the plaintiff, or its grantor, made any location, valid or otherwise, of the mining claims in controversy. As far as the finding shows, the deed from the defendants and others, is the only title to the right of possession which plaintiff has to these mining claims. Defendants are not estopped from denying the title of plaintiff to the portion of those mines conveyed to it by its other grantors. The defendants aver in their answer, "that the said mining claims, prior to August 1, 1881, were a part of the public domain and belonged to the United States Government, and were open to location by citizens of the United States." There is no finding whatever upon this affirmative matter set up in the answer, which, constituting a valid defense, should have been found on. (Swift v. Canavan, 52 Cal. 417.) Upon these facts as found, appellants are entitled to judgment. (Hilliard on New Trials, 104, § 12.)

Plaintiff did not make such a resumption of labor in the month of January, 1881, upon these mining claims, as would relieve them from the forfeiture of the year 1880. If the expenditure of twenty-four dollars in labor for the month of January, and no further labor done, during the first six months of the year, after the forfeiture of 1880, is a sufficient resumption, and saves a complete forfeiture of these mining claims, then they may be held from year to year, with the expenditure of only twenty-four dollars upon them, or even less. Appellants hold, that a resumption of labor, in good faith, upon a mining claim, should be by an expenditure, for labor and improvements, sufficient to make up the balance of the deficiency for the former year, and also begin the assessment work for the incoming year.

Edwin A. Rodgers, for Respondent.

A finding on the issue for damages is not material nor necessary to sustain a judgment for the recovery of the claims. The defendants can not complain because there is no finding on the question of damages. They are not hurt.

The plaintiff had a right to waive that branch of its case. Admitting that the claims were subject to relocation on the first of January, 1881, by reason of the non-performance of the amount of work on said claims in 1880; required by law to hold said claims, still plaintiff, by resuming work on said claims in January, 1881, and before defendants attempted relocation thereof, made said claims not subject to relocation by defendants. (Gom v. Russell, 3 Montana, 358; 1 Miller, U. S. S. Court, 104; U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2324.)

McKINSTAY, J.:

The complaint is in the ordinary form of ejectment, with an averment of damages caused by the excavation and removal of gold-bearing quartz by defendants during their adverse holding.

1. The Court below failed to find expressly upon the issue created by the denial of the averment as to damages. It is urged by appellants that this failure necessitates a reversal of the judgment. But no judgment was rendered for damages, and defendants (the appellants) can not complain of an omission which did them no injury. The judgment herein will constitute a bar to any further action to recover the same damages.

2. It is said there is no finding that plaintiff or his grantors located the mine as required by Section 2324 of the United States Revised Statutes. The Court found that plaintiff, on the ninth day of April, 1878, became the purchaser "by deed from the defendants and others" of the mining claims described in the complaint, entered into possession thereof, etc. In the absence of proof of subsequently acquired title from a paramount source, the defendants are estopped from denying that they and their co-grantors were the owners of and entitled to the possession of the mining claims when the deed to the plaintiff was executed. As we take notice of the character of the property and its original ownership in the United States, the defendants were estopped from denying that they and their co-grantors (or those from whom they derived) had located the mines in accordance with the laws of the United States—the only way in which the title could be acquired.

3. The Court found that in the year 1880 plaintiff expended in labor on the two claims one hundred dollars; that in January, 1881, plaintiff resumed work upon the claims, and expended in labor twenty-four dollars. Defendants entered and located in August, 1881. As the plaintiff had resumed work upon the claims “after failure and before location,” his rights were not forfeited when defendants entered. (R. S. U. S., § 2324.)

It is urged that the resumption of work was not such as is required by the Act of Congress; that if so, one may fail to perform the work required by the Act during any year, and yet keep alive his right indefinitely by doing any work during the January following. In other words, that, by such construction, while the Act requires one hundred dollars' worth of work each year, a party may keep his claim good by doing one dollar's worth each year, provided he shall succeed in doing it before a relocation can be accomplished. It is not necessary to decide that an attempt to assert a continuous right may be based upon a pretense of work, so plainly a sham as that it will be disregarded. But here the work done was actual and valuable. The letter of the statute upholds the view, as to resumption of work, taken by the Court below, and forfeitures and denunciations are not to be favored by basing them upon language which does not plainly and unmistakably provide for them.

Judgment affirmed.

HORACE WILSON v. SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAIL- ROAD COMPANY.

VERDICT — EVIDENCE — NEGLIGENCE. — The verdict of a jury against the defendant in an action for negligence, is conclusive on appeal to the Supreme Court on the question of negligence, and also upon all the allegations in the complaint material to recovery in the action, if there was any evidence to warrant the verdict.

NEGLECT — EVIDENCE — PRIMA FACIE CASE — WAREHOUSEMAN — BURDEN OF PROOF. — A prima facie case of negligence is made out against a warehouseman who refuses to deliver property stored with him, upon proof of demand and refusal. Such evidence alone is sufficient to show a conversion by him. But if it appear that the property, when demanded, was consumed by fire, the burden of proof is then on the ballor to show that the fire was the result of the negligence of the warehouseman.

EVIDENCE — POSITIVE — CIRCUMSTANTIAL. — Negligence may be shown not only by direct and positive evidence, but by any circumstances which tend to prove it, or from which it may be reasonably inferred.

EVIDENCE — NONSUIT — NEGLIGENCE. — On a trial before a jury in an action for negligence, a nonsuit should not be ordered by the court unless there is no evidence at all, or a mere scintilla of evidence wholly insufficient for the consideration of the jury, or unless the facts are agreed upon or admitted, and in the judgment of the Court are insufficient to constitute a cause of action.

EVIDENCE — NONSUIT. — In this case the evidence discussed, and held: That the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied by the Court below.

EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY. — In an action against a warehouseman for negligence, to recover damages for loss by fire of goods stored with him, evidence which tends to show the condition of the building at the time of the fire, and all the facts and circumstances connected with the fire, are admissible.

ERROR WITHOUT INJURY. — Though the Court below may have erred in denying a motion to strike out part of a pleading as irrelevant, immaterial, and redundant, still, if the facts alleged be proved in the case without objection, or if they be inseparably connected with the evidence, Held: Error without injury.

INSTRUCTION — VERDICT. — When the instructions, taken as a whole, fairly submit the case to the jury, the verdict will not be disturbed for mere inaccuracies or errors from which no possible injury could have resulted.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE — NEW TRIAL. — The motion for a new trial was properly denied because the newly discovered evidence was cumulative.

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES. — In this case it is not shown that the damages found are excessive, or that they were given under the influence of passion or prejudice.

APPEAL from a judgment against the defendant in the Superior Court of the County of San Benito, and from an order denying a motion for new trial. BREEN, J.

Action against the defendant as warehouseman for negligence. On the thirty-first day of October, 1875, the plaintiff owned and stored with the defendant, in its warehouse at Hollister, in the County of San Benito, sixty-four bales of wool, weighing in the aggregate twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-five pounds. On January 5, 1876, the warehouse was consumed by fire and all the wool was burned, except three bales saved uninjured, and about three hundred and seventy pounds in a damaged condition.

There was evidence showing or tending to show that the wool at the time it was burnt was worth thirteen cents a pound, and that the three hundred and seventy pounds after the fire were worth three or four cents a pound. The action was tried before a jury, in April, 1880, and the verdict was for the plaintiff in the sum of three thousand five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and seventy-one cents. As a part of the cause of action the complaint alleged that the defendant was a railroad corporation, duly incorporated, and at the several dates mentioned in the complaint owned and operated a railroad in the County of San Benito, which road ran through the town of Hollister. A motion was made by the defendant in the Court below to strike out all of these allegations, on the ground that they were irrelevant, immaterial, and redundant. The motion was denied, and the defendant presented and filed its bill of exceptions.

On the trial the Court below, on its own motion, after giving the instructions asked by defendant, gave with other instructions the following: "In this case the principal question you will have to determine is this: Was the defendant or its servants guilty of culpable negligence in respect to the burning of the wool? This question you will have to determine from the proofs and circumstances of this case, measured, as they must be, by rules of law, as you have laid down to you.

"As an abstract principle it is somewhat difficult to locate exactly the point where due care ends and culpable negligence begins; but the line must be drawn somewhere.

"In some cases the law exacts the utmost diligence and care, while in others the rigor of the rule is relaxed, as, for instance, if a warehouseman received for safe keeping or storage a valuable package, known to contain diamonds, he would not be permitted to excuse himself for their loss by showing that he had exercised the same degree of care or diligence in protecting them from loss, as he and ordinarily prudent and careful warehousemen were in the habit of bestowing on less valuable and heavier articles of merchandise, such as are generally committed to the care of warehousemen; so the locality and other surrounding circumstances are frequently important factors to be considered by a jury in actions of this kind. By way of illustration I will say that, at the present time, the law would exact from a warehouseman doing business in a populous city like San Francisco, a greater degree of care and circumspection than from one doing business in a rural town like Hollister; because, judging from the public acts and utterances of certain individuals, it would be reasonable to infer that there is a more disturbed and feverish social condition there than here, and, consequently, the danger to property from riotous acts would be more imminent in the city than in the country; and the person of ordinary care and prudence would be expected to govern himself accordingly, and increase his precautions against loss that might occur from the condition just referred to.

“Precaution should be taken just in proportion to the imminence of probability of harm. There always being of course a fixed and reasonable limit, beyond which none is expected to go with his efforts, and what or where that limit is in this case is a question that you alone have authority to answer. It is a question of fact to be determined from what has been conceded and proved in this case, and in determining this question you may consider any facts and surrounding circumstances of the character just mentioned, and similar ones bearing on the question of negligence, and give to them such weight as in your judgment they may be entitled to.

“The general rule that should apply in cases of this character is: that the same care should be taken as a man of ordinary prudence and caution would manifest in looking to his own interest. But to exonerate the defendant it will not be sufficient for it to show that the same degree of care with respect to the property in question was exercised as was wont to be bestowed on its own property, unless it appears that that degree was up to the ordinary standard of care and caution. The standard to which you will refer is, how did the management of the defendant correspond with that of other persons of ordinary care and caution engaged in the same business in this and other communities similarly situated and circumstanced?

"The testimony in this case does not positively disclose the origin of the fire, but it is insisted by the plaintiff that, whatever it may have been, its origin and destructive progress are attributable to defendant's negligence in these respects: 1. In not keeping a watchman on the premises; 2. In leaving the lower part of the building exposed, so that vagrants or vicious persons could get under it; 3. In not having a proper water supply or connection with the water-works of Hollister; 4. In leaving a lighted lamp on the premises, from which, it is claimed, the fire originated. These are all questions of fact, that you are to determine from the evidence. But even if you find that the defendant did, or omitted to do, all the acts that plaintiff complains of, it does not necessarily follow that the defendant was culpably negligent in his conduct. The question would again recur, were those acts or omissions of that negligent character that in law are called culpable? If, then, you find the defendant did, or omitted to do, as he is charged by the plaintiff, and that the acts or omissions were negligent in the sense in which the term is used in this connection, and that in consequence of these acts and omissions the fire originated and progressed until the property in question was destroyed, the defendant is liable to plaintiff for the value of the property lost or damaged.

"You are the sole and exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses who have testified before you, and of the weight that is to be given to any testimony offered here."

All the other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

McKisick & Rankin, for Appellant.

Ordinary care is all that is required of a depository for the preservation of the thing deposited. (C. C., § 1859; Wharton on Negligence, § 573.) If the thing deposited is lost by fire, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the fire occurred through the negligence of the defendant. If the depositor demands the thing deposited, and it can not be found, the defendant must exculpate himself. (Jackson v. Sacramento V. R. R. Co., 23 Cal. 269; see also 46 N. Y. 271; 6 Wend. 271; 7 Allen, 98; 1 Gray, 263.)

The negligence of the warehouseman must be the cause of the injury. (Wharton, §§ 576-597; Roberts v. Gurney, 120 Mass. 33; 15 Wall. 537; Shearman & R. on Neg., §§ 8-9.) Proximate cause is a cause from which a man of ordinary experience and sagacity could foresee that the result might probably ensue. (Shearman & R. on Neg., § 10; Ill. C. R. R. Co. v. Benton, 69 Ill. 174; Smith v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81; Scott v. National Bank, 72 Penn. St. 471.) If there be no evidence of negligence, or a mere scintilla of evidence, the Court should grant a nonsuit. (Cotton v. Wood, 8 O. B. (N. S.) 568; Brooks v. Somerville, 106 Mass. 271; Denny v. Williams, 5 Allen, 1; McCaig v. Erie R. R. Co., 8 Hun, 599; 104 Mass. 71; Toomey v. L. etc. R. R. Co., 3 C. B. (N. S.) 146-150; Cornman v. E. C. R. Co., 4 H. & N. 781; L. R., 3 App. Cas. 1155; 99 Mass. 612; Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurl. & Colt. 403; Shearman & R. on Neg., § 11; 49 Cal. 257.)

Here there is no evidence tending to show that the defendant or its servants were negligent, or that its or their negligence was the approximate cause of the injury complained of. We have seen that in a case of this kind, the law will not presume negligence. We have also seen that the law emphatically condemns "surmise and imagination," when the verdict can rest upon nothing else. If, then, presumption, surmise, imagination, be excluded, the plaintiff's case rests alone, upon the facts, that there was a fire, and consequent loss, and the case has not, for the plaintiff, advanced beyond the point where it was when the complaint and answer were read to the Court and jury. We have also seen that "the burden of proof in an action upon negligence, always rests upon the party charging it." * * * And that, "It is not enough for him to prove that he has suffered loss by some event which happened upon the defendant's premises, or even by the act or omission of the defendant. He must also prove that the defendant in such act or omission violated a duty resting upon him. (S. & R. on Neg., § 12.)

As to the latter theory: That is without the shadow of a foundation to rest upon; it is purely imagination, and is met and overthrown by the "familiar principle, that negligence being a wrong, will not be presumed, but must be proved by the party charging it and seeking a recovery thereon." And if a presumption is to be indulged in, the presumption is that the servant was negligent while engaged about his own affairs, as it was not shown that he had any duty to perform for his employer, at or near the time the fire occurred. Harlan v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 65 Mo. 22; First Nat. Bank v. Ocean Bank, 60 N. Y. 278; Doggett v. Richmond etc. R. R. Co., 78 N. C. 305; Hoag v. Lake Shore R. R. Co., 85 Pa. St. 293; Gilman v. Noyes, 57 N. H. 627.)

An application of the foregoing plain, incontrovertible rules of law to the facts of this case, would have sustained the defendant's motion for a nonsuit. For the purpose of testing the correctness of the ruling of his honor, the superior judge, we will admit, for that purpose only, that all of the testimony offered by the plaintiff was competent. The testimony goes no further than to show a case of accidental fire, its real origin being wholly unknown.

The averment that defendant owned and operated a railroad was not necessary or proper, and, whether intentional or not, tended to irritate and excite the prejudices of the jury against the defendant. Immaterial matter in a complaint is irrelevant, and the defendant has the right to have it removed. (Code C. P., § 453; Larco v. Oasaneuava, 80 Cal. 565; Willson v. Cleveland, id. 200; Green v. Palmer, 15 id. 414; Coryell v. Cain, 16 id. 571.)

The charge of the Court, excepted to by the defendant and assigned as error, was manifestly erroneous and improper in this, that after having correctly instructed the jury upon the question of negligence, at the request of the defendant, the entire effect of those instructions was destroyed by introducing into the case hypothetical and contradictory statements, and in allowing the jury to determine the whole case without proper and legal limitations and qualifications applicable to the case on trial; and under the circumstances of this case was too broad, and without proper qualification, and was error. (People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 482.) Although the Court did not literally instruct the jury to "take into consideration all of the case and do equal justice between the parties," an instruction condemned by this Court, in a case of negligence, in Kelly v. Cunningham, 1 Cal. 367, the Court did say: "You may consider any facts and surrounding circumstances of the character just mentioned and similar ones bearing on the question of negligence, and give to them such weight as in your judgment they may be entitled to."

This, after he had instructed them that they were not to give any weight to certain particular facts unless they found that other facts existed. This was not only contradictory, but tended directly to confuse the jury, and was error. (Bank of Stockton v. Bliven, 53 Cal. 708; In the Matter of Estate of Cunningham, 52 id. 465; McCreery v. Everding, 44 id. 246; People v. Anderson, id. 65.) The instruction directly contravenes another principle of the law of negligence, for it authorized the jury, not only to consider all the facts, but to give to them such weight as in their judgment they might be entitled to, no matter how remote the cause of the fire may have been from any negligent act of the defendant. "The law is well settled that in actions for negligence, the damages to be recovered are only those of which the negligent act is the proximate cause," says this Court in Chidester v. Con. P. Ditch Co., 53 Cal. 56, where the judgment was reversed for error in the instruction, and also because there were contradictory instructions.

Among other objectionable things, the Court said to the jury: "By way of illustration I will say, that at the present time, the law would exact from a warehouseman doing business in a populous city like San Francisco, a greater degree of care and circumspection than from one doing business in a rural town like Hollister, because, judging from the public acts and utterances of certain individuals, it would be reasonable to infer that there is a more disturbed and feverish social condition there than here, and consequently the danger to property from riotous acts would be more imminent than in the country."

We submit that this was under the circumstances highly improper.

Undoubtedly the general rule is, that a new trial will not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered cumulative evidence, but that the rule has its exceptions, like all other general rules, is quite as well settled. (Tuttle v. Cooper, 5 Pick. 414; 3 Gra. & Wat. on New Trials, 1063-1064, 1081, 1344.) "A new trial will not be refused solely because the newly discovered evidence is cumulative, if it will make a doubtful case clear." (3 Gra. & Wat. on New Trials, 1063 and 1064; applied in Hoyt v. Saunders, 4 Cal. 345.) The affidavits offered fall within the rule, they will make a doubtful case clear. It is evident that the jury gave the plaintiff his anticipated or speculative profits, and the verdict should be set aside on that ground. (Muldrow v. Morris, 2 Cal. 74; Moody v. McDonald, 4 id. 297.)

Laine & Lieb, for Respondent.

McKee, J.:

The appeal in this case comes from a judgment and order denying the motion of appellant for a new trial in an action to recover damages for the destruction of certain property of the respondent, by a fire caused, as alleged, by the negligence of the appellant and its employees in conducting and managing its warehouse in which the property had been stored.

The case was tried by the Court with a jury, and a verdict was rendered against the appellant. If there was any evidence to warrant the verdict we can not review it on appeal. It is conclusive upon us, not only on the question of negligence, but upon all the allegations in the complaint material to recovery in the action. (Algier v. Steamer Marie, 14 Cal. 167; Brown v. Brown, 41 id. 88; Trenor v. C. P. R. R. Co., 50 id. 222.) It is, however, contended that there was no evidence to sustain the verdict, and that the Court below erred in denying a motion for a nonsuit.

It was proved on the trial that the respondent had stored in the appellant's warehouse sixty-four bales of wool of a certain value per pound, which, on demand and tender of the storage due upon it, the appellant refused to deliver to the respondent, assigning, as a reason, that the warehouse and all it contained, except about three bales of wool, which were returned to him, had been consumed by fire.

A prima facie case of negligence is made out against a warehouseman, who refuses to deliver property stored with him, upon proof of demand and refusal. Upon such proof alone the burden is on him to account for the property; otherwise he shall be deemed to have converted it to his own use. But if it appears that the property, when demanded, was consumed by fire, the burden of proof is then on the bailor to show that the fire was the result of the negligence of the warehouseman. (Harris v. Packwood, 3 Taunt. 264; Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. 26; Broune v. Johnson, 29 Tex. 43; Lamb v. Camden and Amboy R. R. Co., 46 N. Y. 271; Jackson v. Sac. Val. R. R. Co., 23 Cal. 269.)

The negligence of the appellant, as the proximate cause of the loss of the property by fire, thus became the essential fact to recovery; and the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff in the action. It was incumbent on him to prove that the defendant had, by some act of omission, violated some duty, by reason of which the fire originated; or that some negligence or want of care, such as a prudent man would take under similar circumstances of his own property, caused or permitted, or contributed to cause or permit, the fire by which the property was destroyed.

Direct and positive evidence of negligence as a fact is not required. Any circumstances which tend to prove it, or from which it may be reasonably inferred, are sufficient. And when such evidence has been given on the trial of an action, it is not for the Court to usurp the disposition of the fact by ordering a nonsuit. Such an order should not be made, unless there is no evidence at all, or a mere scintilla of evidence wholly insufficient for the consideration of the jury, or unless the facts are agreed upon, or admitted, and (in the judgment of the Court, are insufficient to constitute a cause of action. Upon facts admitted, or proved and found, it is the duty of the Court to say what the law applicable to them is. But where negligence, as the essential fact in the case, is disputed, and the evidence of it is conflicting, or consists of circumstances from which inferences may be drawn for or against it, it is the province of the jury to determine, under instructions by the Court, whether the evidence establishes it as the proximate cause of the injury complained of.

Applying these principles to the record before us, we find there was no error in sending the case to the jury. For the evidence upon which the plaintiff rested went to show that the building, up to the time of the fire, had been used by the defendant as a warehouse and railroad depot, and was in charge of two employees of the defendant, one of whom was its local agent, and the other its warehouse-keeper. In the warehouse, cut off from the northern end of the building, there was adjoining the office and sitting-room of the railroad depot, a bed-room in which the keeper slept every night. The room was about fourteen feet square; its walls were constructed of upright redwood boards, about fourteen feet high, which were lined with cloth and paper. It was occupied with the bed and furniture of the keeper, and on the walls hung his clothes and files of newspapers. On a shelf against one of the partition walls in the warehouse were kept several lamps trimmed and ready for use. On the evening of the fire, the local agent had left the warehouse in charge of the keeper, whose duty it was to "shut up the doors of the warehouse and fasten it up for the night." Having performed that duty, the keeper himself went to supper, and after supper returned to the warehouse. When he returned he went into the office, lit one of the lamps, took it into his bedroom, and set it down on a little stand at the head of his bed, between the window and bed, and about three feet from the window. He remained while he changed his clothes, and dressed himself for the purpose of going out to visit some friends. Having finished his toilet, he locked up and left the warehouse.

What he did with the lighted lamp before leaving is thus stated by himself: "After I had partially changed my clothing, I returned to the office and remained there perhaps half an hour or three quarters of an hour; * * * I think I extinguished my lamp and went away. * * * No lamp was burning when I left the depot. When I came out of the office into the sitting-room I turned down the lamp, blew it out, and set it on a little shelf within the office, to the left of the office door. * * * I looked at it, saw it was out, and left it." About an hour or so after he had gone the warehouse was afire.

The first person to observe the fire was the proprietor of a hotel, situate about three hundred feet from the warehouse. Seated in the front office of the hotel, looking through the glass window of the door of the office, his attention was arrested by a sudden flash of light, which momentarily lighted up the warehouse and then went out, leaving the warehouse enveloped in smoke. Remarking to some one near him that the warehouse was afire, he ran out and gave the alarm. Those whom the fire alarm drew first to the burning building, discovered, as they ran to it, the fire dropping from about the center of the warehouse, very near to the locality of the bedroom and office; and on reaching the spot, they kicked in the bedroom and office windows, and saw the office filled with smoke and the bedroom afire — the flames running up the partition walls and over the bed.

There is no doubt that the warehouse-keeper had the right to light the lamp, and use it in the bedroom and office before leaving the warehouse; and it was reasonable to infer that a careful use of the lamp would not have set fire to the warehouse. But it would also be a reasonable inference that a negligent use of the lamp might have occasioned the fire; and the question arose whether, under all the circumstances, in connection with the use of the lamp, the warehouse-keeper was careless in using the lamp while in the bedroom and office, or in the extinguishment of it before he left the warehouse. If he was careless in its use or extinguishment, and that carelessness caused the lamp to explode or otherwise ignite any inflammable matter near to it which fired the building, the fire would be attributable to the negligence of the defendant.

Now, it was an indisputable fact that the warehouse was fired from some cause; it was also indisputable, that the fire occurred while the warehouse, in which the keeper had been using a lighted lamp, was under the lock and key of the defendant, and soon after the warehouse had been closed by the keeper for the night; and (as the evidence tended to show) the fire originated at, or "very near" the bedroom and office in the warehouse in which the lamp had been used. It is manifest that these facts and circumstances point, somewhat at least, in the direction of the lamp as the cause of the fire. And even if inferences to be drawn from them as to the origin of the fire were uncertain and controvertible, yet as differences of opinion upon the subject might reasonably exist in the minds of intelligent men, the facts and circumstances were for the consideration of the jury and not for the Court. It was for the jury to determine from them, in connection with the other circumstances in the case, whether the warehouse-keeper used due care in respect to the lamp, its use and extinguishment; and whether the fire originated in his carelessness or from accidental causes, such as spontaneous combustion of the wool in the warehouse. Defendant's counsel attributed the fire to that cause. But there seems to be nothing in the evidence in the record to sustain his theory. And, however that may be, there was in the evidence of the case sufficient to warrant the Court in submitting it to the consideration of the jury.

There was, therefore, no error in denying the motion for a nonsuit, nor did the Court err in overruling objections which were made at the trial to the admission of evidence which tended to show the condition of the building at the time of the fire, and all the facts and circumstances connected with the fire. These were properly allowed to go to the jury for their consideration upon the issue submitted to them.

The Court may have erred in denying the defendant's motion to strike out the averment in the complaint, that "the defendant was the owner of and operated a railroad in the county," etc., but it was error without injury; for the fact that the defendant was in possession of the building and used it as a warehouse and depot in connection with its railroad, was proved in the case without objection; and it was inseparably connected with the evidence as to the use of the warehouse. We can not, therefore, perceive how the averment of the fact in the complaint tended to "irritate and excite the prejudices of the jury against the defendant." There is nothing in the record suggestive even of the existence of such prejudices; and nothing to overcome the presumption that the verdict was a fair expression of judicial opinion warranted by the evidence, submitted to the jury for their consideration.

Some parts of the charge of the Court may be subject to verbal criticisms, but we see nothing in it inharmonious or misleading. Taken as a whole it fairly submitted the case to the jury; and under such circumstances the verdict will not be disturbed for mere inaccuracies or errors, from which no possible injury could have resulted to the defendant.

The newly discovered evidence upon which the defendant asked for a new trial was cumulative.

We can not say that the damages given by the jury are excessive, or appear to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice.

No error prejudicial to the defendant appearing in the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

EVA M. DUNN v. D. G. DUNN ET AL.

HABITUAL INTEMPERANCE — DIVORCE. — Under Section 107 of the Civil Code, habitual intemperance, as defined in Section 106 of the same Code, must continue for one year before it is a ground for divorce.

FINDING. — If on that issue there be no finding showing the continuance of habitual intemperance for one year, the judgment will be reversed.

APPEAL by the defendant, D. G. Dunn, from a judgment in the Superior Court of the County of Placer. MYERS, J.

Action against the defendant, D. G. Dunn, for a divorce on the ground of habitual intemperance. The answer of the defendant denied all of the allegations of the complaint relating to intemperance. The case in the Court below was tried before a jury, and upon the question of intemperance two special issues were submitted by the Court to the jury — that is to say: 1. Was the defendant, D. G. Dunn, so addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks that he was, disqualified a great portion of his time from properly attending to business? 2. Was the defendant, D. G. Dunn, guilty of the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors to such a degree as to inflict upon the plaintiff, Mrs. Eva Dunn, a course of great mental anguish? The jury answered both in the affirmative. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. The judgment recited that it was based on the findings of the jury.

J. M. Fulweiler and J. E. Prewett, for Appellant.

The findings of the jury are insufficient to justify a decree. The first finding does not find that defendant was guilty of habitual intemperance for a period of one year, and defendant might admit the truth of said finding, and yet plaintiff would not, as a conclusion of law therefrom, be entitled to a divorce. The duration of the intemperance is a material issue. The findings must cover all the material issues and support of the judgment. (See Downing v. Graves, 55 Cal. 544; 53 Cal. 88, 300; 16 id. 113; 17 id. 299; 17 id. 511; 19 id. 103.)

In this case the findings are clearly insufficient to support the decree, and they were excepted to by defendant. There can be no implied findings, for: 1. Findings were not waived; 2. There are some findings by the jury, and the Court can not supplement them or add to them, because a jury trial was not waived; and, 3. The decree purports expressly to be founded upon the findings of the jury. (See Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 355; Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 id. 317.)

Hale and Craig, for Respondent.

To appellant's objection here, that said first and second findings do not embrace the element of time, as provided in Section 107 of the Civil Code, we think this a conclusive answer, viz.: that the terms of each of said issues, ex vi termini, embrace all of the elements requisite to constitute intemperance — as a legal cause of divorce.

Taken together, Sections 92, 106, and 107 of the Civil Code define intemperance as a legal cause for divorce. Section 92 prescribes for what causes divorces may be granted, one of which is habitual intemperance. Sections 106 and 107, taken together, define habitual intemperance, and it is declared to be that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks, continued for one year, which disqualifies the person, a great portion of the time, from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party.

We submit that, in legal intent and effect, by said first and second issues, the Court presented to the jury for answer the one vital question, viz.: Had the defendant been guilty of habitual intemperance (as legally defined), with the result, either as to his business, or upon the mental condition of plaintiff, which would legally justify her in demanding a divorce, and to this question the jury answered that he had been so guilty.

Any other reading of the record is too narrow; is, in fact, to stick in the bark.

The Court:

The ground relied on by the plaintiff for divorce was the alleged habitual intemperance of the defendant. Section 106 of the Civil Code declares that "habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party;" and the following section declares that such intemperance must continue for one year, before it is a ground for divorce. There is in the case before us no finding that the habitual intemperance of which the defendant was found guilty had continued for the period of one year, for which reason we are bound to remand the cause. Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

THOMAS MENZIES ET AL. v. THE BOARD OF EQUALI-ZATION OF THE COUNTY OF MONO.

CERTIORARI TO BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — PRACTICE. — Application for writ of certiorari denied on the ground that the petition did not show a sufficient reason why the application should not have been made to the Superior Court.

APPLICATION for writ of certiorari to the Board of Equalization of the County of Mono to review an order of the Board directing the Assessor to assess to the plaintiffs a mortgage standing in their names upon the records of the county which had not previously been assessed. The affidavit alleged that no notice was given by the Clerk of the proposed action by the Board, as required by Section 3681 of the Political Code, and further alleged as follows: "That petitioners made this application to this Court in the first instance for the reason that the application will only present a question of law, which must in the end be determined by this Court; and for the further reason that there is not time to apply to the Superior Court, and by appeal to this Court obtain a final judgment before the time fixed by law for the payment of taxes for said fiscal year."

No brief on file for Defendant.

The Court:

The application for a writ of review is denied, the petition showing no sufficient reason why the application should not have been made to the Superior Court.

SANTA CRUZ RAILROAD CO. v. THE COUNTY OF SANTA CLARA.

ACTION AGAINST COUNTY — LIABILITY OF SUPERVISORS. — The complaint alleged a failure of the Board of Supervisors to issue certain bonds to the plaintiff at the times the same should have been issued, and that the plaintiff had suffered damage thereby.

Held: The facts alleged would not justify a judgment against the county. For a neglect or a refusal to perform a duty imposed on him by law, a Supervisor is by Section 4086, Political Code, made personally liable.

APPEAL from a judgment for the defendant, on demurrer, in the Twentieth District Court, County of Santa Cruz. BELDEN, J.

The action was brought to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the delay of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Santa Cruz in issuing to the plaintiff certain bonds, to which the plaintiff was entitled under the contracts and laws referred to in the case of Santa Cruz Railroad Company v. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Santa Cruz, 8 P. C. L. 809.

Charles B. Younger, for Appellant.

The county contracted to deliver its bonds to appellant as the work on the railroad progressed, and failed so to do until long after the stipulated times. Appellant was damaged thereby as though the contract had been executed between individuals.

J. H. Logan, for Respondent.

Admitting, for the purpose of argument, that the plaintiff has suffered damages by the negligence of the Supervisors, the county can not be held for the same. (Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 113; Huffman v. San Joaquin County, 21 id. 426; Crowell v. Sonoma County, 25 id. 313.)

The Court:

The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. We see no such statement of facts in the complaint as would justify a judgment against the county. For a neglect or a refusal to perform a duty imposed on him by law, a Supervisor is by Section 4086, Political Code, made personally liable.

Judgment affirmed.

THE ST. HELENA WATER CO. v. A. B. FORBES.

EMINENT DOMAIN — PUBLIC USE — DEFINITION. — The supplying of the inhabitants of a town with pure fresh water, is one of the "public uses" in behalf of which the Legislature has declared the right of eminent domain may be exercised.

ID. — ID. — ID. — CORPORATION. — A corporation organized under the laws of this State, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of a town with fresh water, is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain in behalf of such use.

ID. — ID. — ID. — STREAM OF WATER. — Under the laws of this State, the right of a private individual to enjoy the flow of water in its natural channel, upon or along his land, can be condemned for public use.

APPEAL by the defendant from a judgment in his favor, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Seventh District Court of the County of Napa. WALLACE, J.

McAllister & Bergin, for Appellant.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, and B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

Ross, J.:

The plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of this State, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town of St. Helena with fresh water. The defendant is the owner of a tract of land through which run the waters of a certain creek called Hudson or York Creek.

The purpose of the present proceeding on the part of the plaintiff is to condemn the waters of the creek for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town with water; and the principal question in the case is, whether or not, under the laws of this State, the right of a private individual to enjoy the flow of water in its natural channel, upon or along his land, can be taken from him for such purpose.

There can be no sort of doubt that the supplying of the inhabitants of a town with pure fresh water, is one of the "public uses," in behalf of which the Legislature has declared the right of eminent domain may be exercised. (Code of Civil Proc., § 1238.) Whether, with such declaration, the Courts can in any case interfere, need not now be determined, since it is very clear that we would not be justified in holding that the supplying of the inhabitants of a town with pure fresh water is not a public use. It is equally clear that the plaintiff is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain in behalf of such use. Section 1001 of the Civil Code provides: "Any person may, without further legislative action, acquire private property for any use specified in Section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, either by consent of the owner or by proceedings had under the provisions of Title VII, Part III, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and any person seeking to acquire property for any of the uses mentioned in such title is 'an agent of the State,' or 'a person in charge of' such use, within the meaning of those terms, as used in such title."

The only question about which we have had any serious doubt is whether the statute authorizes the condemnation of the particular kind of property here sought to be taken.

Section 1240 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines the property which is made subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and Section 1239 classifies the estates and rights in lands subject to be taken for public use, as follows: "1. A fee simple, when taken for public buildings or grounds, or for permanent buildings, for reservoirs and dams, and permanent flooding occasioned thereby, or for an outlet for a flow, or a place for the deposit of debris or tailings of a mine. 2. An easement, when taken for any other use. 3. The right of entry upon and occupation of lands, and the right to take therefrom such earth, gravel, stones, trees, and timber as may be necessary for some public use."

It is sufficiently obvious, we think, that the property in question comes within the category of real property. "The rights of riparian proprietors," says Mr. Washburn, in his work on Easements and Servitudes, pp. 276-7 (215), "though coming under the head of what are called 'Natural Easements,' are not, in fact, the result of any supposed grant, evidenced by long acquiescence on the part of a superior proprietor, of the flow of the water from his land to the land below. The right of enjoying this flow, without disturbance or interruption by any other proprietor, is one jure naturæ, and is an incident of property in the land, not an appurtenance to it, like the right he has to enjoy the soil itself, in its natural state, unaffected by the tortious acts of a neighboring land-owner."

"It is inseparably annexed to the soil, and passes with it, not as an easement, nor as an appurtenance, but as parcel," said Chief Justice Shaw, in Johnson v. Jordan, 2 Metc. 284; S. C., 37 Am. Dec. 85. (See, also, Angell on Watercourses, Sec. 141; Brace v. Yale, 10 Allen, 448; Civil Code, §§ 14, 658, 662.)

The water therefore, that runs over the defendant's land, is a part and parcel of his land. The Legislature has said that "an easement" in land may be taken for such public use as is here involved. Does this mean only an easement owned by the person against whom the right to condemn is asserted? We think not. As no man can have an easement in his own land, it would be only such easements as he might own in lands of others, that would be subject to be taken for public use, under such a construction of the statute as that. Yet the statute subjects all real property belonging to any person to the right of eminent domain, to be exercised in the cases and for the purposes therein stated. In other words, it authorizes the fee simple of all real property belonging to any person to be taken when needed for any of the public uses enumerated in subdivision 1 of Section 1239, and an easement in all real property belonging to any person, to be taken when needed for any other public use. The question remains: By taking the water that in its natural channel runs over the defendant's lands, does the plaintiff take an easement in the lands of defendant? If the defendant should sell to the plaintiff the right thus to divert the water, there can be no doubt that he would sell an easement in his land. (Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90; Amidon v. Harris, 113 id. 59; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72; Cary v. Daniels, 5 Metc. 236; S. C., 41 Am. Dec. 532.) And if the plaintiff, by adverse use, should acquire the right, it is equally clear that the interest so acquired would be an easement in the land of the defendant. "In many cases," says Mr. Washburn in his work on Real Property, Vol. 2, c. 1, p. 321, "one landowner may acquire a right to apply the use of water upon his own lands so as essentially to impair its use by other proprietors, above or below him, and even to interfere thereby with the enjoyments of the land of another; as for instance, by stopping the water of a stream in his own land, and flowing back the same upon the land of a proprietor above him, or diverting it so as to water it, or prevent its reaching the land of a proprietor below him in its natural quantity. A right thus to interfere with the natural right to make use of water belonging to another where it is connected with the occupation of land, would constitute an easement in favor of the latter, as the dominant estate. Such an easement may be acquired like other easements, by grant, or by an adverse enjoyment so long continued as to raise a legal presumption of a grant." (See also Wood on Nuisances, §§ 353, 354, 374; Angell on Watercourses, § 141.)

If there is any difference in the nature of the same right when acquired by condemnation proceedings, we are unable to perceive it.

In response to the suggestion that the proceedings taken in this case are in effect a violation of an injunction previously obtained by the defendant in respect to the same water, it is sufficient to say that the present plaintiff was not a party to the suit in which the injunction was awarded, and, besides, the right here asserted is to take the water upon making just compensation therefor.

Upon proof made, the Court below found all of the facts essential to authorize the taking.

We must affirm the judgment and order. So ordered.

MORRISON, C. J., and SHARFSTEIN, J., concurred.

MYRICK, J., concurring:

As the right to have the water flow in the stream to defendant's land is an incorporeal hereditament appertaining to his land, and is, therefore, real property, and as all real property of an individual, or such interest therein as may be necessary, may be taken by the right of eminent domain, in behalf of canals, aqueducts, flumes, ditches, or pipes for conducting water for the use of the inhabitants of any county, etc., the taking of the water from the stream, above the land of defendant, is a taking of an interest in real property in behalf of a public use. The land through, over, and upon which pipes, aqueducts, flumes, and ditches may be constructed or laid is not used by the public; the corporation uses the land for the conveying of water; the water, after having been conveyed, is taken by the public, and at that point, strictly speaking, is where the public use commences; but both the water and the land are taken, to the end that the public may be supplied with the one by the use of the other. In this case the plaintiff has already acquired the one, viz., places for its pipes, etc. (which are worthless and serve no purpose without water), and now it seeks to acquire the necessary water, such water, when acquired, to be used in behalf of, for the benefit of, to the interest of, for the behoof of, ditches, etc., for conducting water for the use of the inhabitants of a village. ESTATE OF W. W. HILL, DECEASED.

ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS — CONTENT OF CLAIM — SETTLEMENT OF FINAL ACCOUNT — APPLICATION TO SUPREME COURT TO PROVE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. — An allowed claim may be contested at the settlement of the final account of the administrator, if such claim has not already been passed upon, and a party contesting such claim is entitled to an exception to any adverse ruling of the Court, and in case of the refusal of the Court to allow the exception, may apply to the Supreme Court under § 653, C. C. P., to prove the same.

APPLICATION to the Supreme Court to prove bill of exceptions.

H. S. Dickson, for Petitioners.

The Court:

This is an application to prove certain alleged facts on which an exception was reserved, which exception it is averred the Judge of the Court below has refused to allow in accordance with the facts. We have examined the petition and answer, and are of opinion that the petitioners should be allowed to make proof of such facts.

The matters referred to in the petition and answer relate to a contest as to a claim which had been allowed by the administrator, which allowance is contested by the heirs and distributees of the deceased, who are the petitioners.

The Judge of the Court below refers to the matters in issue as something incidental and collateral to the proceeding before the Court. In this we can not concur with him. The matters in contest relate to the allowance of a claim by the administrator of deceased, which, the petitioners allege, was improperly and unlawfully done; and these matters were brought before the Court, in connection with the settlement of the final account of the administrator. An allowed claim may be contested at such settlement (C. O. P., § 1636), when such claim has not been passed on on the settlement of a former account, or on rendering an exhibit, or on making a decree of sale. Such does not appear to have been the case with regard to the claim in this case.

We are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted, and an order will be made that the petitioners be allowed to prove the facts alleged in their petition before Stuart S. Wright, on reasonable notice to be given.

A. L. HART v. JONAS SPECT ET AL.

BILL OF PARTICULARS — ACCOUNT — EVIDENCE — PRACTICE. — After the plaintiff had on the demand of the defendants served a bill of particulars, and under an order of the Court had furnished the defendants a further account in writing of the items of the plaintiff's claim, the defendants, without asking an order for a still further account, moved the Court for an order that the plaintiff be precluded from giving any evidence in support of his complaint, which motion was denied.

Held: An order precluding a party from giving evidence in support of his claim is proper only where such party has failed or refused to deliver to the adverse party on demand a copy of his account; and that the motion in this case was properly denied.

APPEAL by the defendant Jonas Spect, from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Colusa. BLANCHARD, J.

Action to recover the value of legal services. Trial before a jury. Verdict for plaintiff. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Dyas & Bridgford, for Appellant.

The only point presented by the record in this case is whether or not the Court erred in denying defendants' motion to preclude plaintiff from giving any testimony as to the account sued upon.

Section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "It is not necessary for a party to set forth in a pleading the items of an account therein alleged, but he must deliver to the adverse party, within five days after a demand thereof in writing, a copy of the account, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. The Court, or Judge thereof, may order a further account, when the one delivered is too general or is defective in any particular."

In making the motion for the order to preclude plaintiff from giving testimony, defendants followed literally the rule of practice in such cases laid down by this Court in the case of Conner v. Hutchinson, 17 Cal. 280.

A. L. Hart, Respondent, in propria persona.

The bill of particulars served by the plaintiff upon the defendants in pursuance of the order of the trial Court, requiring an additional bill of particulars, was a sufficient compliance with such order. It set forth the items of the account sued on with as much particularity as the nature of the account would admit.

The object to be secured by requiring a bill of particulars to be furnished to a defendant in an action is, that he may be apprised of the particular nature of the demand made, and what will be attempted to be proved against him at the trial. This object was accomplished by the one furnished in the present case. (See P. T. Co. v. Prader, 32 Cal. 638.)

the motion of defendants was made, does not authorize the trial Court to make an order precluding a plaintiff from giving any evidence of an account sued on, when he has, in good faith, furnished the defendant with a bill of particulars containing the items of the account, as far as it is in his power to do so. The section simply provides that if he fails to furnish the adverse party with a copy of the account, he shall be precluded from giving evidence thereof; and that when an account is furnished, if too general, the Court may require a more particular one.

The Court:

The complaint is to recover the value of legal services. Defendants demanded a bill of particulars, which was served. The Court made an order that plaintiff furnish a further account in writing of the items of the claim, setting forth the number of suits in which services were performed, the title of each suit, and the value of the services rendered in each suit, together with the date at which each item of service became due.

Plaintiff then served the further account following:

"JONAS SPECT AND LOU G. SPECT,

Respectfully,

"A. L. HART."

Defendants moved, that, inasmuch as plaintiff had failed to comply with the order of the Court, plaintiff be precluded from giving any evidence in support of his complaint. The Court denied the motion and defendants excepted.

It will be observed that no application was made to the Court below for an order for a further account. It is only where a party has failed or refused to deliver to the adverse party on demand, a copy of his account, that the latter is entitled to an order that the former be precluded from giving evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

HELEN D. GRIDLEY, ADMINISTRATRIX OF THE ESTATE OF GEORGE W. GRIDLEY, DECEASED, v. JOHN BOGGS ET AL.

FINDING — SUBSTANTIAL CONFLICT IN EVIDENCE. — Action commenced by George W. Gridley in his life-time, prosecuted by plaintiff, appellant, as the administratrix of his estate, to obtain a decree setting aside a deed made by him September 4, 1878, to certain of the defendants (John Boggs, E. D. Pond, and C. W. Clarke), and also an accompanying contract executed by them declaring trusts in favor of named creditors of said George W. Gridley and one D. M. Reavis. The fraud charged upon the defendants especially named is, that taking advantage of the weak, feeble, and diseased condition of the mind of George W. Gridley, and of his consequent incapacity to protect his own interests, they induced him, by false representations, to execute the deed, and enter into the contract sought to be annulled. The representations were made concerning matters in respect to which Gridley was fully informed, and must have acted responsibly, provided he was a person of sound mind, on which question the Court below found in favor of the defendants on evidence in which there was a substantial conflict.

Cross-EXAMINATION OF WITNESS.—An expert witness, called on behalf of the plaintiff, had testified that he had made a post mortem examination of the body of George W. Gridley, and as to the condition of the brain, pelvic viscera, and particularly the kidneys and bladder, and the prostate gland and the urethra; that he had found nitrate of urea in crystals in washing the membranes of the brain, and crystals of urea in the arachnoid sac, etc.; that the kidneys were apparently in the normal state, except that they were engorged with blood; that the membranes of the brain, the pia mater, the arachnoid and dura mater were "thickened, discolored, adherent, and matted together;" that the prostate gland was enlarged, thickened, and indurated, and its walls pressed together. In his opinion, the deceased must have been of unsound mind for five or six years prior to his death, by reason of the facts that the condition of the prostate gland had obstructed the elimination of urea, causing it to enter in the circulation, and poisoning the cranial membranes, and that the patient died of uræmic convulsions, thus produced; that the thickened condition of the brain coverings established insanity, and that the thickening produced by the chronic uræmic poisoning must have been gradual, continuing several years. One B., called as an expert witness by the defendant, after stating that he had been a practicing physician and surgeon since 1864, that he was a graduate of certain medical schools, and that he had been superintendent for about two years of an insane asylum in Lancashire, England, proceeded to testify, in effect, that he had never known crystals of urea to be found in the brain or any of its surroundings; that nitrate of urea is perfectly soluble in water; that uric and urea are specifically different. He added, that taking the condition of the coverings of the brain and the brain itself, and of the kidneys, the bladder, the prostate gland, and the urethra, as described by M. (and Dr. C., who assisted at the post-mortem), he could not understand how any such condition of his brain or its membranes could be attributed to uræmic poisoning, without disease of the kidneys antedating it, and declared that disease or unsoundness of mind could not be predicated on the condition of the coverings of the brain as described by Messrs. M. and C. On cross-examination of B., the plaintiff wished to put to him a hypothetical question, in all respects similar to such questions propounded to plaintiff's witnesses on direct examination.

Held: Since the testimony of B. on direct examination was confined to a contradiction of the theory of M. as to the mental unsoundness of Gridley produced by slow uræmic poisoning, the question was not proper cross-examination, as the answer of the witness thereto, if it sustained the plaintiff's views, would have constituted part of the plaintiff's case, which should have been made out before she rested. Nor was the question proper as testing the capacity of B.; for if the answer of B. had been the same as that given by the plaintiff's experts it would have strengthened the plaintiff's affirmative case, if different it would have tended no more to prove the incompetency of B. than it would have done to prove the incompetency of the plaintiff's experts.

EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT REFUSING PROBATE OF WILL—HOW FAR CONCLUSIVE.
—The plaintiff in the Court below offered to introduce in evidence a document filed in the Superior Court on the fourteenth day of March, 1881, purporting to be the last will and testament of George W. Gridley, deceased, together with the objections to the probate of the same by Charles W. Gridley and Flora D. Harris, and the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon, and the decree of said Court thereon rejecting said will, "and deciding that said George W. Gridley was unsound in mind, and incompetent by reason thereof to make a will at the date of the execution thereof, to wit, March 26, 1879." Upon the objection of the defendants the documents offered were excluded.

Held: The ruling was proper. The judgment of the Superior Court determined that a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of George W. Gridley, was not his last will and testament. The proceeding was not a special inquiry to determine his status as to sanity or insanity. The finding of insanity was of a probative fact upon which the Court held the will to be invalid, as it might have held it to be invalid upon proof of duress or undue influence.

APPEAL by plaintiff from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Butte, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. HUNDLEY, J.

Action to set aside a deed and contract on the ground of fraud. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision in department a petition for hearing in bank was presented and denied.

York & Whitworth, for Appellant.

The exclusion of proper testimony is error fatal to a judgment, and is always ground for reversal. (Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 516, 517; Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. U. S. 6; Barstow v. City Railroad Co., 42 Cal. 465; Rice v. Heath, 39 id. 611, 612; Jones v. Young, 28 Am. Dec. 569; Hilliard on New Trials, 408.)

This proposition is founded in reason, and its soundness is unquestioned. And, in Courts of equity particularly, where fraud and imposition upon one of weak mind are of the issues, any fact or circumstance which tends to show fraud, or to cast a suspicion of unfairness upon the transaction investigated, is relevant, material, and proper testimony. (Tracy v. Craig, 55 Cal. 91, 93, 94; Tracy v. Colby, 55 id. 67; Moran v. Abbey, 58 id. 167, 168; 1 Greenleaf's Ev., § 51, a; 1 Story's Eq., § 190; Ingersoll v. Baker, 21 Me. 474; Trull v. True, 33 Me. 367; Burkholder v. Plank, 67 Pa. St. 233; Stewart v. Fenner, 81 id. 180; 3 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 445, 446; Davis v. Calvert, 25 Am. Dec. 282; Pa., Del. and Md. Steam Nav. Co. v. Dandridge, 29 id. 543.) Nor can it be maintained that the admission of the rejected evidence, in any given case, would not have changed the result, and that, therefore, no injury was done the appellants.

Injury will be conclusively presumed from such error. The adoption of any other rule would make the rights of litigants to depend upon the uncertainties of the most unreliable speculations. No one can, by any possibility, tell what might have been the result, in a given case, if the rejected testimony had been admitted, or to what other evidence it might have led, if it had been received. (Arthurs v. Hart and Estate of Toomes, supra; Barstow v. City Railroad Co., 42 Cal. 465; Jackson v. Feather River W. Co., 14 id. 24; Rice v. Heath, 39 id. 611, 612.)

The Court below in this case did exclude and refuse to entertain testimony, relevant, material, and proper, which the appellant, at the trial, sought to elicit and to introduce: 1. By sustaining defendants' objection to plaintiff's hypothetical question propounded to their own expert witness, Dr. C. F. Buckley, on cross-examination. This was a proper question on cross-examination, for the reason that the witness had been introduced by the defendants as an expert on the subject of insanity, and in his direct examination had expressed his opinion that the pathological conditions found in the brain of the deceased upon a post mortem, and the fits with which deceased was afflicted, were not incompatible with mental integrity of every form, etc. (People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358; Dilleber v. Home Life Ins. Co., 87 id. 83.)

The hypothetical question simply assumed the same facts upon which the witness had expressed his opinion, coupled with certain other facts, and asked his opinion upon them all taken together. The hypothetical question was a proper one as such. (Cowley v. People of the State of New York, 83 N. Y. 464; Guiderman v. Liverpool etc. Co., id. 358; Harnett v. Garvey, 66 id. 641; Negro Jerry v. Townshend, 9 Md. 159.) And whilst an error in the assumption of facts would not make the interrogatory objectionable, so long as it is within the probable range of the evidence (Harnett v. Garvey, supra).

2. In sustaining defendants' objection to plaintiff's offer to introduce in evidence a document, filed in said Superior Court on the fourteenth day of March, 1881, purporting to be the last will and testament of said George W. Gridley, deceased, together with the objections to the probate of the same by Charles E. Gridley and Flora D. Harris, filed in said Court on the sixth of April, 1881, and the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon, and the decree of said Court thereon rejecting said will and deciding that said George W. Gridley was unsound in mind, and incompetent by reason thereof to make a will at the date of the execution thereof, to wit, March 26, 1877.

This evidence should have been admitted. Here was the judgment of a Court that on a certain day, to wit, March 26, 1877, said Gridley was of impaired or unsound mind, to such an extent as to be, by reason thereof, incompetent to make a will. Evidence of the state of a person's mind before and after the act done is admissible to prove insanity. (2 Greenl. on Ev., § 371; Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 516, and cases cited.) The judgment was conclusive as to his condition on the day named. (Code of Civil Procedure, § 1908, Subd. 1.) It was at least prima facie evidence of his condition of mind on that day. (Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 386; Gibson v. Soper, 6 Gray, 285-6; Rippy v. Gant, 4 Ired. (N. C.) Eq. 443; Rider v. Miller, 86 N. Y. 511; Hicks v. Marshall, 8 Hun, 329.)

F. C. Lusk, for all Respondents except C. E. Gridley.

Belcher & Belcher, also for all Respondents, except C. E. Gridley and D. M. and Ann E. Reavis.

Before proceeding to examine in detail the tedious list of exceptions specified under this head, amounting to nearly three hundred in all, counsel would submit that if any one of them were well taken, the error would not be a sufficient prejudice to the plaintiff to work a reversal of this case. The case shows no evidence to sustain the charge of fraud made by the plaintiff, and, on the issue of insanity, the preponderance is overwhelmingly with the defendants. In such a case, unless the error was one that might have materially injured the plaintiff, a reversal will not be had. An inspection will satisfactorily show that the answer to any question objected to by appellant, if it had been excluded, or the admission of any answer that was excluded, could by no possibility have affected the result. If every ruling complained of had been in plaintiff's favor, the result could not have been changed. Of necessity the decision must have been for defendants.

Our Code has said, and this Court many times stated, that judgments will not be reversed for every error, but only for those where the party's substantial rights have been prejudiced.

The rule should be carefully applied in such a case as this. The trial was long, tedious, and very expensive, and after a careful and patient hearing and consideration, the learned Judge of the Court below found for the defendants. The case should not be sent back unless for weighty reasons. The record shows that a new trial could never terminate differently from the first. Counsel think none of the exceptions well taken, but if the Court in so great a number should discover any, we submit that they are entirely immaterial, and could not have damaged the appellant.

On this point we desire to call the attention of the Court to a late case in Michigan, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, in which the issue was insanity. The result of a long trial was a decision in favor of the sanity of the party in question. Judge Cooley, in an elaborate opinion, reviewing the evidence, came to the same conclusion, but he discovered several exceptions in the admission or exclusion of evidence that he deemed well taken. After discussion, he came finally to the conclusion that the case ought not to be reversed on that ground, and on this point he said: "We have already said, that the Court erred in one instance in overruling questions, because they were leading, and in another because they called for conclusions and not facts. The Court also erred in holding that the questions put to Mary Colvin respecting family history, were objectionable, on the ground of being hearsay. It is that sort of evidence of all others that is not objectionable on this ground. (Shields v. Boucher, 1 De Gex & Smale, 40.) * * * The important fact they sought to bring out was that Mr. Fraser's mind weakened in the last year of his life; and as they appear to have gone fully into the question of mental soundness, we must suppose this ground to have been covered. On the whole, we all agree that we ought not to reverse the judgment because of the rulings mentioned."

The alleged errors of this class will now be considered in detail, in the order specified by appellant. * * *

The question was not in cross-examination; nothing of that character had been asked on direct examination. It was an attempt to ask the question they had propounded to their own witness Shurtliff, as a part of their own case, on cross-examination of our witness, who was called only to disprove certain parts of Dr. Miller's testimony. He had on direct examination been asked no question as to the condition of Gridley's mind or his opinion of it. * * *

Gridley left a will. One of his family presented the will for probate, another objected to the probate on the ground that he was of unsound mind, and, without any contest, the family allowed the will to be set aside on that ground. Of course, the proceedings of the Probate Court in that regard were immaterial here and could not bind these defendants, nor affect them, for the reasons stated at the time, which were that the evidence was irrelevant and immaterial, so far as the judgment was concerned; that we were not parties to it, and could not be in any way bound by it; and that we could neither be bound by the findings nor the judgment; and that all the other papers offered in connection are incompetent to prove anything in this case as against the defendants. And further, that neither of the defendants were parties to or in any manner interested in the proceedings out of which that judgment arose; and that neither of the defendants were present at that proceeding, or had any right to or did cross-examine the witnesses therein produced.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The action, commenced by George W. Gridley in his lifetime, is prosecuted by plaintiff, appellant, as the administratrix of his estate, to obtain a decree setting aside a deed made by him September 4, 1879, to certain of the defendants (John Boggs, E. B. Pond and C. W. Clarke), and also an accompanying contract executed by them declaring trusts in favor of named creditors of said George W. Gridley and one D. M. Reavis.

The complaint alleges that for more than five years next before the first day of December, 1880, George W. Gridley was continuously feeble and diseased in body, and feeble and weak and unsound in mind, and by reason thereof during all that time "wholly incompetent to transact business." That during such five years all the defendants had full knowledge of said Gridley's feeble and diseased condition of body, and his said weak and unsound condition of mind, and that he was so as aforesaid "wholly incompetent to transact business." That during said five years prior to December 1, 1880, and while the said defendants Boggs, Pond, Clarke and Reavis were each and all of them fully cognizant of said George W. Gridley's said weak, feeble and diseased condition of body and his said weak, feeble and unsound condition of mind, "and of his said incompetency to transact business," they conspired, confederated and colluded together to take an unfair and fraudulent advantage of him, "while in his said feeble and diseased condition of body, and while in his said weak, feeble and unsound condition of mind, and while he was so incompetent to transact business, to wrong, cheat, and defraud him out of his said property" (previously described), "and to that end, and with that intent, they wrongfully, fraudulently and falsely represented to said George W. Gridley that he was liable to pay to said Boggs, Pond, Clarke, and to certain other of the defendants, moneys due to them on certain promissory notes, all, or nearly all, signed by him and by said D. M. Reavis," etc.

The fraud charged upon the defendants especially named is, that taking advantage of the weak, feeble and diseased condition of the mind of George W. Gridley, and of his consequent incapacity to protect his own interests, they induced him, by false representations, to execute the deed and enter into the contract sought to be annulled.

The representations alleged to have been made to Gridley (with the exception, perhaps, of the alleged representation that Reavis had conveyed all this property to Boggs, Pond and Clarke, in reference to which the Court below found upon evidence that no such representation was made, but, to the contrary thereof, that the fact as to conveyance from Reavis to Boggs, Pond and Clarke was stated to Gridley), had relation to matters in respect to which he was fully informed, and must have acted responsibly, provided he was a person of sound mind.

The Court below found: "For the five years next before the first day of December, 1880, the plaintiff's intestate, George W. Gridley, was not either feeble or diseased in body, or feeble, or weak, or unsound in mind, and was not during all, or any portion of that time, incompetent to attend to, manage or transact business, but, on the contrary, was during all said time and up to the time of his death of sound, healthy and vigorous and unimpaired condition of mind and body, and fully competent to transact business."

It is admitted that as to this finding, there was a substantial conflict in the evidence.

In argument counsel indulged in much criticism, some of it perhaps just, of the findings. It is obvious, however, in presence of the explicit findings that Gridley was of sound mind, and further, that defendants practiced no such arts or devices as constitute fraud when practiced upon a person of sound mind, the judgment must be affirmed, unless errors occurred at the trial.

It is contended that the Court below erred in sustaining the objection to the hypothetical question propounded by plaintiff's counsel on cross-examination to the expert witness, Dr. C. F. Buckley.

Dr. P. B. M. Miller, an expert witness called on behalf of the plaintiff, had testified that he had made a post mortem examination of the body of George W. Gridley, and as to the condition of the brain, pelvic viscera, and particularly the kidneys and bladder, and the prostate gland and the urethra; that he had found nitrate of urea in crystals in washing the membranes of the brain, and crystals of urea in the arachnoid sac, etc. That the kidneys were apparently in the normal state, except that they were engorged with blood; that the membranes of the brain, the pia mater, the arachnoid and dura mater were "thickened, discolored, adherent, and matted together." That the prostate gland was enlarged, thickened, and indurated and its walls pressed together. In his opinion the deceased must have been of unsound mind for five or six years prior to his death, by reason of the facts that the condition of the prostate gland had obstructed the elimination of urea, causing it to enter in the circulation and poisoning the cranial membranes, and that the patient died of uræmic convulsions thus produced; that the thickened condition of the brain coverings established insanity, and that the thickening produced by the chronic uræmic poisoning must have been gradual, continuing several years.

In his direct examination on behalf of defendants, Dr. Buckley, after stating that he had been a practicing physician and surgeon since 1864, that he was a graduate of certain medical schools, and that he had been superintendent for about two years of an insane asylum in Lancashire, England, proceeded to testify in effect that he had never known crystals of urea to be found in the brain or any of its surroundings; that nitrate of urea is perfectly soluble in water; that uric and urea are specifically different. He added, that taking the condition of the coverings of the brain and the brain itself, and of the kidneys, the bladder, the prostate gland and the urethra, as described by Dr. Miller (and Dr. Caldwell, who assisted at the post-mortem), he could not understand how any such condition of his brain or its membranes could be attributed to uræmic poisoning, without disease of the kidneys antedating it, and declared that disease or unsoundness of mind could not be predicated on the condition of the coverings of the brain as described by Messrs. Miller and Caldwell.

It is apparent from the foregoing that the testimony of Dr. Buckley was addressed to the contradiction of the theory of Dr. Miller, that the diseased condition of the membranes of the brain was produced by slow uræmic poisoning, and such condition indicated insanity in Gridley, which extended backward from his death to a period of time including the acts alleged to have been done by him while incompetent to protect his business or other interests.

It is disputed between counsel for the respective parties whether there was any evidence in the case tending to prove some of the facts assumed to exist in the hypothetical question propounded, on the part of plaintiff, upon the cross-examination of Dr. Buckley, the sustaining of the objection to which by the Court below is now here urged as error.

After such examination as we have been able to give the enormous transcript of nearly six thousand folios, made up to a great extent of the questions and answers contained in the short-hand reporter's notes — and we consented to hear the appeal upon the unnecessarily voluminous record only out of consideration for the important interests involved — we are not prepared to say but there is to be found in it some evidence tending to prove the existence of each of the facts assumed in the question.

But the objection that the question could not be asked in accordance with any legitimate rule of cross-examination was properly sustained.

The burden of showing that George W. Gridley was insane when and before the instruments were executed, was cast upon the plaintiff. Taking up the burden and in making out her affirmative case, plaintiff, in addition to other evidence, had propounded a series of hypothetical questions to expert witnesses called on her behalf. The question put to Dr. Buckley was of the same character, and in substance the same as one put to plaintiff's witnesses, and his answer, if it sustained plaintiff's views, would have constituted part of plaintiff's case, which should have been made out before she rested. His direct examination had been limited to the expression of his opinion as to the correctness of the theory of Dr. Miller, one of plaintiff's witnesses, a theory based upon certain conditions of the bodily organs as the same appeared at the post-mortem. The question put by plaintiff was much broader than was justified by the matters drawn out on the direct examination. Nor can the question be justified as testing the capacity of the expert. If the answer of Dr. Buckley had been the same as that given by plaintiff's experts, it would have strengthened the plaintiff's affirmative case; if it had been different it would no more tend to prove the incompetency of Buckley than it would tend to prove the incompetency of the experts called by plaintiff.

Appellant also claims the Court below erred in sustaining defendant's objection to plaintiff's offer to introduce in evidence a document filed in the Superior Court on the fourteenth day of March, 1881, purporting to be the last will and testament of George W. Gridley, deceased, together with the objections to the probate of the same by Charles W. Gridley and Flora D. Harris, and the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon, and the decree of said Court thereon rejecting said will, "and deciding that said George W. Gridley was unsound in mind and incompetent by reason thereof to make a will at the date of the execution thereof, to wit, March 26, 1879."

It is said the judgment was conclusive as to Gridley's mental condition, or was at least prima facie evidence of his mental condition on that day. Section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "The effect of a judgment or final order in an action or special proceeding before a Court or Judge of this State or of the United States, having jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment or order, is as follows: 1. In case of a judgment or order against a specific thing, or in respect to the probate of a will, or the administration of the estate of a decedent, or in respect to the personal, political, or legal condition of a particular person, the judgment or order is conclusive upon the title to the thing, the will or administration, or the condition or relation of the person."

With respect to a judgment in a proceeding de lunatico inquirendo it was said in L'Amoureux v. Crosby (2 Paige Ch. 427), that as to the acts done by the lunatic before the issuing the commission, and which were overreached by the retrospective finding of the jury, the inquisition is only presumptive but not conclusive evidence of incapacity. It would seem that as to acts done after the finding, the inquisition, in the absence of the statute, would be only presumptive evidence. (Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 386; Rider v. Miller, 86 id. 511; Gibson v. Soper, 6 Gray, 285-6; Rippy v. Gant, 4 Ired. Eq. 443; Griswold v. Miller, 15 Barb. 523, and cases there cited.) But there can be no doubt, that, under the section of the Code of Civil Procedure above quoted, the judgment in a proceeding whose direct purpose and end is to obtain a determination "of the personal, political, or legal condition of a particular person" is conclusive upon such condition. Was the judgment rejecting the will such a judgment?

Mr. Starkie says: "In many instances a court possesses a jurisdiction which enables it to pronounce on the nature and qualities of the particular subject-matter, where the proceeding is, as it is technically termed, in rem; as where the Ordinary or Court Christian decides upon a question of marriage or bastardy; or the Court of Exchequer upon condemnations; or the Court of Admiralty upon questions of prize, or a Court of Quarter Sessions upon settlement cases. Decisions of this sort are for the most part binding and conclusive upon all the world." (Starkie Ev., p. 36, 10th Am. ed.) Such a judgment is conclusive unless impeached for fraud, on those who were neither parties nor privies to it. (Id. 384.) And the reasons given by Professor Greenleaf are: "These decisions are binding and conclusive, not only upon the parties actually litigating in the cause, but upon all others; partly upon the ground that in most cases of this kind, and especially upon cases of property seized or proceeded against, every one who can possibly be affected by the decision has a right to appear and assert his own rights, by becoming an actual party to the proceedings; and partly upon the more general ground of public policy and convenience, it being essential to the peace of society that questions of this kind should not be left doubtful," etc. (1 Green. Ev., 525.)

If the defendants in the present cause are bound by the judgment of the Superior Court, as being a judgment declaring George W. Gridley to have been insane at the date of the offered will, it must be upon "the more general ground" mentioned by Mr. Greenleaf. Certainly all those who might be affected by a judgment that Gridley was insane when the will was executed, did not have the right to appear and assert their rights in the proceeding for the probate of the will. The legal notice of that proceeding ran only to those interested in Gridley's estate. And as to "the more general ground," public policy only requires, at most, that a judgment as to the status of a particular person, which shall be conclusive as against those not parties to it, shall be a judgment which simply determines such status in a proceeding whose sole end and aim is to determine it. The judgment of the Superior Court determined that a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of George W. Gridley, was not his last will and testament. The proceeding was not a special inquiry to determine his status as to sanity or insanity. The finding of insanity was of a probative fact upon which the Court held the will to be invalid, as it might have held it to be invalid upon proof of duress or undue influence.

If there remains doubt of the correctness of this conclusion, it should be dispelled by the wording of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure. There a judgment "in respect to the probate of a will" is spoken of as a separate and distinct thing from a judgment "in respect to the personal, political, or legal condition or relation of a particular person." It would be difficult more explicitly to declare that a judgment in respect to the probate of a will should be evidence that the offered instrument had been rejected or admitted to probate—that it was or was not the last will and testament of the decedent—neither more nor less.

We find no substantial errors in the record.

THE PEOPLE v. YE PARK.

ASSAULT TO COMMIT MURDER — MERETRICIOUS UNION — INSTRUCTION. — The defendant was charged with an assault upon Chung Tan, with intent to commit murder. On the trial the Court instructed the jury that if they found that the defendant and one Toy Ping were living together as man and wife, in meretricious union, that such union, as a matter of law, would not be sufficient to give the defendant the right or power to control or restrain the acts and liberty or power of locomotion of said Toy Ping; that in such union either the man or woman has perfect right to go and come as he or she pleases, unrestrained by the other; and it was claimed on appeal, that there was no evidence that the defendant and said Toy Ping were living together in meretricious union, and therefore that it was error for the Court to state what their relative rights would be in such a case.

Held: That the instruction was as to an irrelevant and immaterial fact and could have had no tendency to prejudice the defendant.

IN. — DEFINITION — INSTRUCTIONS. — The Court charged the jury that the Supreme Court of this State had said that assault to commit murder is the attempt to kill a person, coupled with the present ability to do so, but, in another instruction, given at the request of the defendant, gave a correct and full definition of the crime.

Held: The first instruction was erroneous, in not containing a full definition of the crime, but that it was supplemented by the latter and the error cured.

1a.—ID.—QUESTION OF LAW.—The Court instructed the jury that a conflict of testimony on immaterial questions should not be considered by them, without telling the jury what questions were immaterial; and it was objected on appeal that the instruction left to the jury the question as to what was or was not an immaterial issue or question; it was a question of law for the Court and not for the jury to determine.

Held: Conceding the question was one of law the Court is not prepared to say that it was submitted by the instruction to the jury.

1a.—ID.—The Court, upon the request of the defendant, instructed the jury: "Before you can find the defendant guilty of the charge laid in the information, you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt by the evidence produced on the part of the prosecution, that the defendant in this case, with premeditation and malice aforethought, made the assault upon Chung Tan with the intention then and there to murder him;" and then added the following: "Two elements for your consideration on this point are the character of the weapon and the nature of the wound." Held: There was no error in the additional clause.

1a.—ID.—JUSTIFICATION.—The Court refused to instruct the jury at the request of the defendant as follows: "If you believe from all the evidence that the circumstances were such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man, and the defendant in this action acted under such fears when he made the assault upon Chung Tan, even though the defendant was mistaken in the circumstances and they turned out to be false, you will acquit him."

Held: In order to justify homicide under the circumstances stated, the circumstances must not only be sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person, but the party killing must have acted under the impulse of such fears alone.

1a.—ID.—FLIGHT.—The Court instructed the jury: "If you believe from the testimony that defendant had sufficient cause, from the conduct of Chung Tan, to believe that he, the defendant, was in imminent danger of his life or of great bodily harm from Chung Tan, then the defendant had a right to use all lawful means to secure his own safety; but if the testimony shows that the defendant could have more readily avoided danger to himself by flight than in any other way, then an assault by him is not justifiable."

Held: The exception of the defendant to the portion of the instruction italicized is well taken.

1a.—ID.—ID.—FELONIOUS ASSAULT.—Where an attack is made with murderous intent, the person attacked is under no obligation to flee. He may stand his ground, and, if necessary, kill his adversary. It is otherwise in cases of mere assault and in cases of mutual quarrel, where the attacking party has not the purpose of murder in his heart.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the County of Mono. WIGGINS, J.

Bennett & Reddy, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

The first ground upon which it is contended that this judgment should be reversed is, that the Court erred in instructing the jury that if they found that the defendant and one Toy Ping were living together "as man and wife in meretricious union, that such union as a matter of law would not be sufficient to give defendant the right or power to control or restrain the acts and liberty or power of locomotion of said Toy Ping; that in such a union either the man or woman has a perfect right to go and come as he or she pleases, unrestrained by the other." As an abstract proposition the correctness of what the Court said is not disputed. But the defendant's counsel insists that there was no evidence that the defendant and said Toy Ping were living together "in a meretricious union," and, therefore, it was error for the Court to state what their relative rights would be in case the jury should find that they were so living together. And it is claimed that the defendant's case might have been prejudiced by instructions which were apparently based upon the assumption that there was evidence which, at least, tended to prove that such a union had existed between the defendant and said Toy Ping. As there was no such evidence, it is urged that the instructions were calculated to mislead the jury.

If the defendant would have had "the right or power to control or restrain the acts and liberty or power of locomotion of said Toy Ping," if they had not been living together in a meretricious union, we could readily see that the jury might have been misled by the instructions referred to in this connection. But we do not understand that if the parties had not been living together in a meretricious union, that either would have had the right or power "to control or restrain the acts and liberty or power of locomotion" of the other, and, therefore, can not see that the jury could have been misled by said instructions.

The Court, doubtless, erred in charging the jury "that the Supreme Court of this State" had said "that assault to commit murder is the attempt to kill a person, coupled with the present ability to do so." That instruction does not contain a full definition of the crime with which the defendant was charged, but the Court, in another instruction given at the request of the defendant's counsel, did give a correct and full definition of that crime. We think that the latter supplemented the former, and cured the error complained of.

The instruction "that a conflict of testimony on immaterial questions should not be considered" by them without telling the jury what questions were immaterial, is objected to on the ground that it "left to the jury the question as to what was or was not an immaterial issue or question," which was a question of law for the Court and not for the jury to determine. Conceding that the question was one of law, we are not prepared to say that the Court submitted such question to the jury.

The Court was requested by the defendant to give, and did give the following instruction: "Before you can find the defendant guilty of the charge laid in the information, you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt by the evidence produced on the part of the prosecution, that the defendant in this case, with premeditation and malice aforethought, made the assault upon Chung Tan with the intention then and there to murder him;" and then added the following: "Two elements for your consideration on this point are the character of the weapon and the nature of the wound."

It is claimed by defendant's counsel that the jury might have been misled by the addition of this clause to the instruction which he requested the Court to give. We do not think so. Nor can we see that it would be improper for the jury to consider the two elements mentioned by the Court while deliberating upon the questions of premeditation, malice aforethought, and intent to murder.

We do not think that the Court erred in refusing to give the following instruction asked by the defendant: "If you believe from all the evidence that the circumstances were such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man, and the defendant in this action acted under such fears when he made the assault upon Chung Tan, even though the defendant was mistaken in the circumstances, and they turned out to be false, you will acquit him." In order to justify a homicide under the circumstances stated, the circumstances must not only be sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person, but "the party killing must have acted under the influence of such fears alone."

Another instruction to which exception is taken reads as follows: "If you believe from the testimony that defendant had sufficient cause, from the conduct of Chung Tan, to believe that he, the defendant, was in imminent danger of his life, or of great bodily harm from Chung Tan, then the defendant had a right to use all lawful means to secure his own safety; but if the testimony shows that the defendant could have more readily avoided danger to himself by flight than in any other way, then an assault by him is not justifiable." The defendant excepts to the portion of the instruction which we have italicized, and we think that the exception is well taken.

"Where an attack is made with murderous intent, the person attacked is under no obligation to fly; he may stand his ground, and, if necessary, kill his adversary." (Bishop's Criminal Law, 850.) It is otherwise in case of mere assault and cases of mutual quarrel, where the attacking party has not the purpose of murder in his heart. (Id.) Assuming, however, as the Court did in this instance, that the defendant had sufficient cause from the conduct of Chung Tan to believe that he, the defendant, was in imminent danger of his life or great bodily harm from Chung Tan, it was not incumbent on the defendant to fly for safety, even if he might more readily have secured it by flight than by standing his ground, and, if necessary, killing his adversary.

This entire instruction is extremely faulty. The jury, in one part of it, is, in effect, told that a man in defense of his life has "a right to use all lawful means to secure his own safety;" but the jury was not informed as to what would be lawful means under such circumstances, although the jury might have inferred from the language of the Court that if the defendant could not have saved his life by flight an assault would be justifiable. But whether the Court meant a simple assault, or a more serious one, does not appear. The right of self-defense is quite as sacred as any other, and assuming that the defendant was placed in the position which, for the purposes of this instruction, he was assumed to be in, the instruction, as a whole, does not fully state his rights, and was calculated to mislead the jury as to them. For this error the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial must be reversed.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THE PEOPLE v. J. D. STEPHENS ET AL.

WATER SUPPLY.—Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, the right of laying pipes in the streets of any incorporated city or town in this State for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of such city or town with fresh water lay only in grant from the Legislature.

CONSTITUTION.—The provisions of the Constitution of 1879 in reference to the supplying of municipalities with fresh water, made many changes from the pre-existing condition of things.

CONSTITUTION — CONSTRUCTION OF.—All of these provisions of the Constitution, to wit, Art. xi., § 19, Art. xiv., § 1, and Art. xiv., § 2, must be taken and read together, and effect given to each of them. They must, like all other provisions of the Constitution, receive a practical common-sense construction, and be considered with reference to the prior state of the law and the mischief intended to be remedied by the change.

WATER — PUBLIC USE.—By Sec. 1 of Art. xiv. of the Constitution, the use of all water heretofore or hereafter appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution, is expressly declared to be a public use, and it is not now left to the Legislature, as formerly, to say whether it shall be a public use or not. The Constitution itself declares it to be such, and then makes the use subject to the regulation and control of the State; that is, to say, of the Legislature, in the manner to be prescribed by statute, subject, however, to certain enumerated provisions contained in the Constitution itself, and among them to the provisions in respect to the rates or compensation to be collected by any person, company, or corporation for the use of water supplied to any city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof.

RATES — FIXING OF.—The Constitution expressly declares that such rates or compensation shall be fixed in a certain specified manner, at a certain time, and by a certain body; and the body failing to do so is expressly made subject to peremptory process to compel action at the suit of any party interested and liable to such further processes and penalties as the Legislature may prescribe.

RATES — RIGHT TO COLLECT — FRANCHISE.—By the Constitution the right to collect the rates or compensation so established is declared to be a franchise, and can not be exercised except by authority and in the manner prescribed by statute.

LEGISLATURE—DUTY OF.—The Constitution contemplated the enacting by the Legislature, where they did not exist, of all laws necessary to give effect to its commands, and that none should be passed in contravention of its provisions. When, therefore, the Constitution fixed the manner of establishing such rates or compensation, and further declared that the right to collect such rates or compensation so established is a franchise, and can not be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law, it was the duty of the Legislature, if they did not exist, to provide the needful laws.

LEGISLATURE—FAILURE TO ENACT LAWS—EFFECT OF.—But the failure of the Legislature to enact such laws, if failure there was, could not prevent the establishment of the rates or compensation specifically required to be established by the Constitution.

WATER—GAS—PUBLIC STREETS.—Sec. 19, Art. xi. of the Constitution expressly grants to any individual or company incorporated for that purpose, subject to the direction of the Superintendent of Streets or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulation as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity of damages, the privilege of laying pipes in the public streets and thoroughfares of any city (where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality), so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants with gas, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water, subject to the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof.

CITY—TOWN.—The word "City" in Sec. 19 of Art. xi. of the Constitution includes towns.

CONSTITUTION—CONSTRUCTION OF.—The provisions of Sec. 1, Art. xiv. of the Constitution, requiring the rates or compensation to be fixed, has no application to water furnished by a municipality itself. Those provisions refer to the rates or compensation to be collected for water authorized by Sec. 19 of Art. xi. of the Constitution to be introduced into cities by individuals or companies incorporated for that purpose.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants in the Superior Court of the County of Yolo, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and also from an order made after judgment. BUSH, J.

The action was brought by the Attorney General in the name of the People against the defendants, to require the defendants to show by what right or authority they were claiming and exercising certain franchises in the town of Woodland, and to obtain judgment against them, adjudging that they were doing so unlawfully; that they be debarred therefrom, and that they be enjoined from making any excavations in the public streets of that town without the consent of the proper authorities, etc. The following is a statement of the facts: On the seventh day of February, A. D. 1871, one J. W. Peek was the owner of certain water works in Woodland, in the county of Yolo, which works were intended for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town with pure fresh water. At that time Woodland was unincorporated, but on the twenty-second day of February, A. D. 1871, the Board of Supervisors of Yolo County in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to provide for the incorporation of towns," approved April 19, 1856, made an order incorporating the town. It was subsequently by an Act of the Legislature, approved March 24, 1874, reincorporated, and has ever since continued its corporate existence under this Act. On the seventh day of February, A. D. 1871, the Board of Supervisors of Yolo County made an order, of which the following is a copy, viz.:

"In the matter of granting to the Woodland Water Works Company the privilege to lay down water pipes in the streets and alleys of Woodland: The petition of Giles E. Sill, agent of the Woodland Water Works Company, asking permission to lay down water pipes through the streets and alleys of Woodland, in this county, coming on to be heard, and the premises, all and singular, being fully considered, it is ordered by the Board that said petition be granted; provided that the said company shall at all times during its use of the privilege above granted, repair and keep in good order all the streets and alleys, or parts thereof, torn up by said water company."

Peek at this time was the only person interested in the Woodland Water Works Company, which name was in reality the name under which he then proposed to, and afterwards did, carry on the business. The Board of Supervisors made no other order granting or purporting to grant any privileges to Peek. After the twenty-second day of February, 1871, Peek, under the name of the Woodland Water Works Company, laid down main and branch water pipes in some of the streets and alleys of Woodland, and continuously until the tenth of April, 1880, was engaged in the business of furnishing water to the inhabitants of the town, and complied with all the conditions and requirements of the Board of Supervisors. On December 8, 1877, the Board of Trustees of Woodland adopted a resolution in the following words: "Whereas, it is expedient and necessary that the town should secure an adequate supply of water for use in cases of fire and other public necessities: and, whereas, J. W. Peek has procured and set up at his water works a new pump of sufficient capacity to provide such supply of water, and is willing to convey a controlling interest therein for the sum of four hundred dollars, in gold coin, upon certain conditions set forth in a deed for the same this day tendered by him; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the said deed be and is hereby accepted; and the President of the Board of Trustees be and he is hereby authorized and directed to execute the same on the part of the town; and the Town Clerk is hereby directed to draw his warrant for the sum of four hundred dollars in gold coin in favor of said J. W. Peek in payment therefor."

On the same day there was duly executed by and on behalf of Peek and the town of Woodland, in pursuance of the resolution, an indenture by which Peek sold and transferred to the town an "undivided four-seventh of that certain pump used by the party of the first part (Peek) in raising water at his water works in said town, being the new pump lately put in by him," and "also, the use of said system of water works in connection with said pump in the manner and to the extent specified in the covenants hereinafter contained." It was covenanted that Peek should run the water works at his own expense and for his own profit; that he should furnish water to the town for all municipal uses, at all points in his then present system of pipe service, in preference to all other customers, and that the town in like manner should have the benefit of any extension of the system; that the Board of Trustees might regulate the use of the water by private individuals, so as to secure for the town a sufficient supply of water in cases of fire or other public necessity, and that he (Peek) should receive a reasonable compensation for water furnished. On the sixth day of October, A. D. 1879, the supply of water for said town and its inhabitants was insufficient for use in case of fire and for the ordinary use of the citizens of said town, and it became necessary to increase the same; and it became and was necessary that said water works should be under the control and management of the authorities of said town, both as to the rates to be charged for water furnished, and as to the manner and extent of the supply thereof; and on that day the said Board of Trustees duly adopted and published the ordinance, which is as follows: "Ordinance No. 25. To procure a supply of water for use in cases of fire and other purposes. Whereas, the present supply of water in the town of Woodland is insufficient for the needs of the town in cases of fire or other great necessity, as well as insufficient for the ordinary use of the citizens; and whereas, the necessity for an increased supply of water for such purposes is urgent; and whereas, J. W. Peek, the proprietor of the present water works in said town, has signified his willingness to provide a sufficient supply of water for such purposes, and to furnish all water required in cases of fire free of charge, in consideration of the grant hereinafter contained; now, therefore,

"Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the Town of Woodland: Section 1. There is hereby granted to J. W. Peek, his associates and assigns, the exclusive right for the period of ten years from the date of the adoption of this ordinance to lay down and maintain main and branch pipes for the purpose of supplying said town and its inhabitants with pure fresh water, in any and all of the streets and alleys in said town in which there are at present main or branch pipes, from the water works of said Peek, or which are at present supplied with water from said water works; and also the right, but not exclusive, to lay down and maintain main and branch pipes for said purpose in any and all of the streets and alleys in said town not at present supplied with water from said water works.

"Section 2. Within eighty days from the date of the adoption of this ordinance the said J. W. Peek, his associates or assigns, shall lay down a new main pipe not less than seven (7) inches in internal diameter from the said present water works, near the corner of Main and Fourth streets, in said town, and extending westerly through Main street to the intersection of Main and First streets, and shall connect the same with all branch pipes leading from Main street within said distance, including the branch mains leading northerly and southerly through First street.

"Section 3. The said J. W. Peek, his associates and assigns, shall at all times within the period of said ten years, furnish water to said town for use in case of fire, at all points to which such water service does or may extend, to the extent of the full capacity of the said water works, without any charge or compensation whatever, and in preference to, and, if necessary, to the exclusion of all other customers whatever.

"Section 4. The rates to be charged and collected by said J. W. Peek, his associates or assigns, for furnishing water to said town and its inhabitants for domestic and other purposes, except for use in case of fire, shall be the same as are now charged and received by said J. W. Peek for such services, until the Board of Trustees of said town shall alter or change said rates, or shall establish new rates therefor.

"Section 5. The Board of Trustees of said town shall have the right at all times to regulate the mode and manner of laying such pipes within the streets, alleys, and other public places of said town, and to make reasonable rules and regulations governing the supply and use of water, so as to secure a sufficient supply and to prevent unnecessary waste thereof; and the ordinances heretofore adopted on said subjects shall remain in force until altered or repealed.

"Section 6. Nothing in this ordinance contained shall be so construed as to take away or impair the right of said town, through its proper authorities, to establish and regulate the rates to be charged and received by the proprietors of said water works for furnishing water to said town and the inhabitants thereof, as now or hereafter to be provided by law; nor the right of said town to acquire by purchase or condemnation the title to said water works and franchise, in the manner now or hereafter to be provided by law.

"Section 7. Within three days after the date of the adoption of this ordinance, the said J. W. Peek shall file with the Town Clerk his written agreement, under his hand and seal, to accept and abide by the grant and conditions in this ordinance contained; and in case of a failure to file such agreement within said time, or to lay down and connect the new main herein provided for within the time herein allowed, the grant herein contained shall become and remain wholly null and void.

"Section 8. Nothing in this ordinance contained shall be so construed as to prevent the Board of Trustees of said town from granting to any person or corporation the right to supply water to any portion of the town in which no exclusive right is granted by this ordinance, and, for that purpose only, to grant to such person or corporation the right to lay main pipes along or across any street in which said Peek, his associates or assigns, has such exclusive right."

That the said Peek accepted of the conditions and grant in the last mentioned ordinance contained, and on the tenth of December, 1879, completed the work of laying down and connecting the new main pipes referred to in section two of the ordinance. All the conditions and provisions of the ordinance except as to the additional supply and the furnishing of water free in case of fire, were disadvantageous to the town and its inhabitants. On the twenty-third day of April, 1880, the Board of Trustees ordered a further extension of the pipes, and Peek complied with the order. That the supply of water from the works of Peek, his associates or assigns, has at all times been either inadequate or not sufficiently extended to meet all the demands of the town or its inhabitants. That the town has never owned or controlled any public works for supplying the town and its inhabitants with water.

In the answer of the defendants it was alleged and found by the Court substantially, as follows: That on the tenth day of October, 1879, the defendants being desirous of laying down pipes in all of the public streets and alleys, and of supplying the town and its inhabitants with water, presented to the Board of Trustees a memorial and draft of ordinance granting the right to defendants, which memorial and ordinance were rejected. Thereupon the defendants presented to the Board of Trustees and asked the adoption of an ordinance granting to them the right to lay down pipes and conduct water through the streets for their individual use. This was also denied. On the seventeenth of October, 1879, the defendants asked of the Trustees the right to lay down and maintain pipes, and to sell water in that portion of the town wherein no exclusive right had been granted to J. W. Peek, but the Trustees again refused to grant their request. On January 16, 1880, a petition was presented by the defendants to the Board of Trustees, suggesting that they, the defendants, lon M. Corp. §§ 546, 551, 691, 697; Pol. Code, § 2634; C. C., § 548.) The right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any town or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and can not be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law. (Const. Cal., Art. xiv., § 2; Spring V. W. W. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 140.)

The clause of the Constitution under which defendants claim their authority to act, furnishes no foundation for their claim. That clause is not self-executing, but requires legislation to enforce it. (Cooley Const. Lim., 4th ed., 99, 100, 101; Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 341; Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167; People v. Supervisors, 8 Barb. 332; People v. McRoberts, 62 Ill. 41.) That clause applies to cities as distinguished from towns, and therefore has no application to this case. (Abbott's New Law Dict., Titles "City" and "Town.")

To recapitulate our argument on the point under consideration we say: That the last clause of Section 19 of Article xi. of the Constitution furnishes no justification for the acts of defendants, and does not, of itself, and without further legislation, authorize such acts: Because a consideration of the language used in view of the subject-matter and the evil to be remedied, viz., the prevention of monopolies, does not require such a construction. Because the right intended to be conferred is a right on the part of the public to receive water freely, and not a right conferred for the private advantage of those furnishing the water; and this clause contains, in itself, no sufficient rule by which that right can be enjoyed or protected. Because, by the terms of that clause, this right is to be exercised only so far as may be necessary to secure the object intended, and no sufficient rule is therein contained by which that necessity can be ascertained. Because Sections 1 and 2 of Article xiv., which are in pari materia with the clause under consideration, clearly imply an intention to leave the whole matter subject to the principles laid down, to further legislative action, and clearly require such action before this right can be exercised. Because the clause in question evinces an intention to require further legislation, both to secure the right intended to be granted, and to guard against abuses and evils which must be deemed to have been foreseen by its framers. Because if this clause is intended to go into full operation of itself, and not as a mere principle or guide for the Legislature, it will not be competent for the Legislature to enact the laws necessary to suppress those evils. Because this clause requires that, in connection with the exercise of the right, the municipality shall enact certain regulations for the protection of the public and third persons; which regulations are to be deemed conditions precedent, and which have not been enacted; and, because the whole Constitution evinces an intention to leave all such matters to be determined by the municipalities whose interests are to be affected, subject to general rules prescribed for their guidance; and this clause evinces no contrary intention.

Section 19 of Article xi. of the Constitution does not apply to towns as contradistinguished from cities. Owing to the unavoidable length to which the discussion on the last point has extended, we shall be compelled in this and the succeeding point to confine ourselves to an exceedingly brief outline of the argument. The Constitution uses the words "city" and "town" in many cases, sometimes together and sometimes apart. Is any distinction intended between the words, and, if so, when can one be construed to include the other? These words are used together in the following sections: (Art. iv., §§ 22, 30; Art. vi., §§ 1, 11; Art. xi., §§ 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18; Art. xiii., § 10; Art. xiv., § 1; Art. xv. § 3; Art. xix., §§ 1, 4.)

The word "city" is used apart from "town" in the following sections: (Art. iv., §§ 25, 31; Art. xi., §§ 7, 8, 19.)

The word "town" is used apart from "city" only in Art. xiv., § 2. Section 31 of Art. iv., although omitting "town," contains the words "or other political corporation;" so that the omission of the word "town" has no significance. In Section 25 of Article iv., the omission of the word "town" is obviously unintentional, while in Sections 7 and 8 of Article xi. it is obviously intentional. There remains only Section 19 of Article xi. and Section 2 of Article xiv. to be construed. The word "town" is a generic word, while a "city" is only a particular kind of "town." Blackstone says, 1 Com. 114: "The word town or vill is, indeed, by the alteration of times and language, now become a generical term, comprehending under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. A city is a town incorporated, which is or hath been the see of a bishop. * * * A borough is * * * a town, either corporate or not, that sendeth burgesses to parliament." In Abbott's Law Dictionary, under the title "Town," where is contained a somewhat extended discussion of the subject, we find the following:

"This term is differently used in different parts of the United States, in some regions signifying a civil division of a county, irrespective of incorporation or powers of government, such as is elsewhere called a township; in others, denoting a species of municipality more highly organized than a village, and less so than a city."

In the New England States, and in some others that have borrowed their system, a town is a civil division of a county, possessing certain corporate powers, but of very slight organization, principally characterized by the purely democratic form of its government, there being no representative body. In most of the other States the word signifies an inferior municipal corporation as stated by Abbott; some of those States (e. g. West Virginia) having also what are called "townships," corresponding to the New England "towns." (See Constitution of West Virginia, 1861-63, Art. vii., also Art. vi., § 17.) The former Constitution of this State (Art. iv., § 37) provided for the organization of "cities and incorporated villages," and (Art. xi., § 4) for a "system of county and town governments." The word "town," as there used, had the signification given to it in New England. (Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 318.) This provision of the Constitution was never carried out by the Legislature.

On the eleventh day of March, 1850, the Legislature passed an Act for the incorporation of cities (Stats. 1850; 87), and on the twenty-seventh day of March, 1850, an Act for the incorporation of towns. (Stats. 1850, 128.) By the latter Act, and those afterwards substituted for it, a town was an incorporated place of small size, distinguished by having no separate departments of government; the whole government being vested in a Board of Trustees. By the former Act, a city was a larger incorporated place, having the executive, judicial, and legislative departments separate, their powers being vested respectively in the Mayor, Recorder, and Common Council. By numerous special Acts thereafter passed, particular "cities" and "towns" were incorporated under special charters, the above mentioned distinguishing characteristics existing in all. The same distinction exists in all other States where cities and towns, as municipal corporations, exist. (See the statutes of those States, passim.) In this state of things the present Constitution was adopted, in which a new provision (Art. xi., § 6) was made, as follows:

"Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns. * * Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws; * * and cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized * * shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

Can it be for a moment doubted that the intention here was to distinguish between these two classes of municipal corporations, and to perpetuate the distinction then and before recognized by the laws of the State? The next section provides for the consolidation of "city" (not "town") and "county" governments into one government, which is, throughout the Constitution, called a "city and county," and provides that the provisions of the Constitution applicable to "cities," and those applicable to "counties" shall apply to such consolidated government. The next section makes certain provisions for a "city" containing a population of more than one hundred thousand. In all these cases the distinction is obvious. Then follow numerous provisions, some applying to cities and towns, some including all municipal corporations and quasi corporations, and some including also counties and townships. But when we reach Section 19 of Article xi. we find two new and extraordinary provisions relating, by their terms, to "cities" only. We may safely assert that, under such circumstances, "towns" are, prima facie, excluded. But it is not to be denied that these words are sometimes construed as interchangeable, and it is therefore important to see if there is any rule of construction by which we can be guided in determining whether this omission was intentional. Without entering into any discussion of the question, we will assert the rule to be that the word "town" is the generic word, and will be held to include "city" unless the context requires otherwise; while the word "city" denotes a particular species, and will not be held to include "town" unless the context demands it. This is only a special case of the rules, that general words will usually be held to include particulars, but particular words will not usually be extended so as to include general ones, and that technical words will usually be considered as used in the technical rather than in the popular sense. (Rafter v. Sullivan, 13 Abb. Pr. 262; Peck v. Weddell, 17 Ohio St. 271; Abbott's Law Dict., titles "City" and "Town.")

Can any reason be shown why the word "city" as used in this section, should be extended so as to include "town" and can not good reasons be given for denying such an interpretation? In the first place the care observable throughout the Constitution furnishes strong ground for supposing a deliberate intention. There can be no possible reason suggested why "county" should be held to be included, yet all the argument made by respondents requires the inclusion of this word as well as that of "town." The whole scope of both parts of the section shows that it is intended to apply to large, thickly settled, and highly organized places. To hold that the first clause applies to the smallest municipalities would be to create an almost intolerable hardship in opposition to the express letter of the law; yet, if the last clause is so construed, we must treat the first in the same manner. In both cases the evil intended to be remedied presses heavily on large places and but slightly on small ones, and therefore the scope of the remedy should be held to be no more than co-extensive with the mischief.

With regard to Section 2 of Art. xiv., respondents call attention to the use of the word "county" in that section, and its omission in Section 1 of the same Article, and say that the Court, in construing Section 1, should insert the word "county." Here, at least, they have fallen into a grave error. That portion of the section following the word "provided" was offered as an amendment by Mr. Barbour, in the morning session of February 14, 1879. As offered by him, it contained the word "county" in every place. (Debates, Vol. 3, 1871.) In the afternoon session of the same day, this amendment, before action taken upon it, was amended by its author, by consent, by striking out the word "county" wherever it occurred, and, as so amended, was adopted. (Id. 1372.)

Again, counsel for respondents say that the word "city" should be interpolated into Section 2 of Article xix. In this we heartily agree with them for the following reasons: first, as we have before shown, the word "town" should generally be held to include "city"; second, the context undoubtedly requires its inclusion; and third, because the word was omitted solely through a clerical error. As to this last matter, the facts are these; that section was offered as an amendment by Mr. Herrington, in committee of the whole, January 15, 1879. As offered, it contained the word "city." (Debates, Vol. 2, 1029.) On the debate, it was referred to as including "cities." (See remarks of Messrs. Herrington and Reynolds, id. 1029, 1030.) Before action, the section was again read for information, and then adopted by the committee. As so read and adopted, it contained the word "city." (Id. 1030.) On February 14, 1879, in Convention, the President announced the question as being upon concurrence with the Committee of the Whole in adopting the section. The section was then read and the report concurred in, without debate. As so read and adopted the word "city" was omitted. (Debates, Vol. 3, 1375.) This word, then, was left out solely by the unauthorized act of the Secretary, probably through a mistake of the printer, and the error passed unnoticed.

Counsel for respondents, in their points on file, call attention to certain sections of the Constitution in which the word "city" is used, but not "city and county," and argue that, as those sections have been held to apply to a "city and county," by parity of reasoning "city," in this section, should be held to include "town." But they forget that the reason why it was necessarily so held, was that Section 7 of Art. xi. expressly provides that "the provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities * * * shall be applicable to such consolidated [i. e. city and county] governments." When counsel can show a similar provision with reference to towns, we will admit this to be a case in point.

As to Section 27, Article iv. (with which should be compared Section 6 of the same Article), it will be observed that Assembly, Senatorial, and Congressional Districts are intended to be composed of counties, and the only reason why a city and county is mentioned in that connection is, because such a government does not, by its consolidation, lose its character as a county. Counsel for respondents say truly, that this provision "would not apply literally to San Francisco should it become a city;" to which we may add that it would not so apply either literally or in spirit.

We have thus examined every provision mentioned, and have, as we believe, shown that only one change (viz., the insertion of "city" in § 2, Art. xiv.) is necessary to make the Constitution entirely harmonious; and that this change is not only warranted by both the letter and the spirit of that section, but is in conformity with the actual intention of the Convention, which only failed of its intended form of expression through a clerical error. In this state of the case we respectfully submit that, to adopt the construction contended for by respondents upon no better reason than those advanced by them, would be an extreme case of judicial legislation. The construction to be given to a Constitution on such a question is somewhat different from that adopted in the case of a statute. The Constitution purports to cover the entire ground of government, and when its provisions are so drawn that an intention is manifest to distinguish between certain cognate terms, that intention must be presumed to have existed throughout, unless strong and grave reasons are shown to the contrary. The Courts can not say that because such a provision might well have been made to apply to cases not within its terms, therefore it was intended so to apply; but, before adopting such construction, it is necessary to show that it is inconceivable or, at any rate, highly improbable that it was not so intended. As we have shown, a clear and deliberate intention is manifested in other sections to distinguish between these words; and, inasmuch as no other section has been pointed out in which the word "city," standing alone, can, with the slightest plausibility, be claimed to include "town," reasons of a nature very different to and much stronger than those advanced by respondents will be required to overthrow the almost conclusive presumption thus created.

Woodland is a "town" both in fact and in law. (Stats. 1873-4, 557.) Section 4356 of the Political Code, cited by respondents, has no application. (Pol. Code, §§ 19, 4478, 4479; Ex parte Simpson, 47 Cal. 128; Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 id. 488.)

The constitutional provision relied on does not, therefore, furnish any justification for defendants' acts. (Rafter v. Sullivan, 13 Abb. Pr. 262; Peck v. Weddell, 17 Ohio St. 271.)

Under the facts of this case the town of Woodland, owning an interest in the Peek water works, and having the entire control of them, is within the exception contained in that clause, which, for that reason, does not apply here.

C. P. Sprague, Jo. Craig, and Rhodes & Barstow, for Respondents.

The words of the clause of that section which are involved in this controversy are: "In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality, for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual or company * * * shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein," etc.

Our position is that the word "city" means, in that connection, "municipality;" that the purpose of that clause was to give to an individual or corporation, the right to introduce water into a municipality which does not own and control public works of its own, by which the municipality and its inhabitants are supplied with water. And we contend that there is nothing in the Constitution which leads to the conclusion that the intent was to limit this right to cities alone, excluding cities and counties, towns and municipalities of any other name or description. The word "city" is used in every instance in that section in its generic sense. Blackstone (1 Com. 114) says that "a city is a town incorporated." (See Bouv. Law Dic.; Webster's Dic.) See also Mason v. Finch, 2 Scam. 223; Burke v. Monroe Co., 77 Ill. 610, in which the word "city" was held to include a "town." The Political Code, § 4356, defines a city, and Woodland comes within the definition. (Winbigler v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 38.)

The Court has, it is to be presumed, often had occasion to notice that the Constitution has not always employed the same word or words to express the same idea, but that, on the contrary, it has, apparently, studiously avoided the repetition of words and phrases in the same or different sections, where there is not a shade of difference in the idea. Art. vi, Sec. 4, confers on this Court appellate jurisdiction "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate," while Section 5 confers upon the Superior Court original jurisdiction "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property." By the same sections, jurisdiction is given to this Court "in cases of forcible entry and detainer," and to the Superior Court, jurisdiction "of actions of forcible entry and detainer." The Justices of this Court are to be elected "at the general State elections at the times and places at which State officers are elected" (Sec. 3); and Judges of the Superior Courts are to be elected "at the general State election" (Sec. 6). Evidently, the two sections refer to the same elections — the general elections.

The words "law," "act," "bill," and sometimes "legislation," are used synonymously, and as having the sense of "law." And so it will be found that, in many instances, the terms "city," "city and county," "town," "municipality," and "municipal corporation" have been employed in such sense that one of those terms will include the meaning of one or more, and sometimes all of the other terms. These several terms occur, either separately or combined, in the following sections: Art. iv., §§ 22, 25, 27, 30, 31, 32; Art. vi. §§ 1, 6, 7, 11; Art. ix., § 3; Art. xi., §§ 5-10, 11, 12, 14, 16-19; Art. xiii., §§ 4, 9, 10; Art. xiv., §§ 1, 2; Art. xv., § 3; Art. xix., §§ 1, 3, 4; Art. xxii., §§ 6, 8.

It is provided by Art. xi., § 8, that "any city containing a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government," etc. The words of the provision are not "any city, or city and county," and yet there can be no doubt that it was intended that the word "city" should embrace "city and county." The City and County of San Francisco, in Art. xi., §§ 6, 7, and perhaps in others portions of the Constitution, is recognized as an existing municipality. This Court, in upholding the election of the Board of Freeholders in San Francisco (see People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612), necessarily affirmed that the term "city" in that section comprehended "city and county." In the first portion of the section involved in this point (Art. ii., § 19), provision is made in respect to assessments, etc., for improvements in "any city," and this Court, in McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245, held that the provision was inapplicable to the "city and county" of San Francisco.

The provisions in relation to the formation of congressional districts (Art. iv., § 27) mentions "county, or city and county," but not city; and it would not apply literally to San Francisco should it become a city. The power granted by Art. xi., § 11, to make police and sanitary regulations, is not expressly extended to a city and county. Nor does the provision of Art. xi., § 18, in respect to incurring indebtedness, extend expressly to cities and counties. Art. iv., § 25, Sub. 28, prohibits special laws creating offices "in counties, cities, cities and counties, townships, election or school districts," and we think there would be no hesitation in saying that the provision was intended to extend to towns also.

It will be noticed that in the several instances above cited, by reference to article and section, the words differ, though the idea intended to be conveyed may be identical. It is worthy of attention that Art. xiv., § 1, provides that the rates for water supplied to any "city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof," shall be fixed, etc., and that § 2 of same Article provides that the right to collect rates, etc., for water supplied to any "county, city and county, or town or the inhabitants thereof," is a franchise, etc. The omission of "county" in the first instance, and of "city" in the second, would be very significant were these several clauses to receive a literal reading; but there is no manner of doubt that the Court will, when the question shall be presented, decide that those clauses are to be read as they would be, were the words "county" and "city" inserted in the respective clauses.

In the second section the word "town" may properly be construed as comprehending a city, for it would be absurd to contend that the intent of the instrument was to declare that the right to collect rates for water supplied to a town was, but to a city was not, a franchise. It will be noticed that in each section the word "town" is employed, and it is obvious that it was intended that water might be introduced for the use of towns and their inhabitants, not only by the towns, but by individuals and corporations. It is equally obvious, that the Constitution did not intend to provide that the towns might fix the rates for water supplied by themselves as municipalities; nor did it intend to declare that a right exercised by towns to collect rates for water supplied by themselves, should be deemed a franchise. By the first section, the "governing body" of the town is required to fix the rates in respect to that which, in the second section, is declared to be a franchise. The last clause of the first section places the matter beyond question, for it is there declared that, for the collection of rates, otherwise than as so established by the town, the water works shall be forfeited to the town. No one, we think, will contend that a right exercised by a town to collect rates for water supplied by itself is, in the sense of the second section, a franchise; nor that the public water works of a town should be forfeited to itself, because of its collection of rates otherwise than is provided by the Constitution.

Reading those two sections of Art. xiv. in connection with Sec. 19, Art. xi., the conclusion is inevitable, that the intent of the instrument is to secure to individuals and companies the right to introduce water into the same classes of municipalities that have a right to fix the rates for its use; and that it intends to declare that the right to collect the rates upon water so introduced is a franchise; that it does not intend to limit this right to cities, but to grant it in respect to cities and counties, and towns as well; and that it employs the term city as synonymous with the word employed in that section as its exact equivalent — "municipality." By no other construction can the several sections above referred to be brought into harmony.

The provision is, that "In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality, for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual or company * * * shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, * * * and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof and laying down pipes," etc. The right thus given does not require any legislation for its security and certainly none for its creation. The right is as fully and completely granted and secured by the Constitution, as is the right to the free exercise of religious profession, or liberty of speech, or trial by jury, or mechanic's lien. It is not claimed that the right to introduce water is, in its exercise, free from all conditions or restrictions. In that respect it is like the other rights above mentioned. Laws may be passed providing for the impaneling of juries, or the securing and enforcement of mechanics' liens. And so here. The water pipes may be laid down under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets and under municipal regulations for damages. But the right to a trial by jury is not dependent upon the question whether an effectual law has been passed for the impaneling of juries. The lien of the mechanic for labor performed, does not depend upon the passage of a law for its enforcement. Should the municipality fail or refuse to prescribe general regulations for damages that might be occasioned by the laying down of water pipes, the right would not cease; but the purpose of the Constitution is to secure that right, and to subject it, in its exercise, to the operation of such general regulations. The Constitution does not declare that the individual or company may lay down water pipes, if such general regulations shall have been prescribed. The existence of those regulations is not a condition precedent. If there be no Superintendent of Streets or other officer in charge thereof, that fact can not impair the right in question. Any person may travel upon a turnpike, but he is subject to reasonable rules and regulations made by the company for the maintenance and protection of the turnpike. His right to travel on the turnpike is not dependent upon the existence of such rules or regulations. If the municipality, by refusing to make, or by repealing such regulations, or by failing or refusing to give the control of the streets to any officer, could prevent the exercise of the right to introduce water; or it could effectually destroy all competition, if the municipality was disposed to favor a company which had already laid down its water pipes. The purpose of securing competition in supplying water, in all towns which do not own and control public water works, is manifest from the several provisions of the Constitution.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to give an accurate definition of a self-executing Constitutional provision; but where the provision clearly confers a right, it is none the less self-executing because there is also a provision that the right is to be exercised in conformity with the rules or regulations that some authority may make. The right granted to introduce water is not dependent upon the exercise by the municipality of its authority to make regulations in respect to damages that may occur in the laying down of the water pipes. Had that been the intent, the Constitution would have declared that municipalities might permit the introduction of water, under such rules and regulations as it might prescribe. The first portion of this section was, in McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245, respecting street improvements, held to be self-executing. There was the same ruling in People v. Hoge, 55 id. 612, involving the election of a Board of Freeholders. (See also, People v. Bd. of Education, 55 id. 331; Weber v. Supervisors, 8 P. C. L. J. 493; Barton v. Kalloch, 6 id. 330.)

It will be noticed — and it is a matter of great significance — that the plaintiffs allege in their complaint that the town refused and still refuses to make or prescribe any regulations for damages, or indemnity for damages, for the use of the street in laying down water pipes. The Trustees evidently were of the opinion that by failing to perform their duty — by neglecting to keep a condition subsequent — they could defeat the constitutional grant of the right in question.

The only possible ground upon which it can be pretended that the town owned or controlled any water works for supplying the town or its inhabitants, is based on Exhibits "A" and "B," by which the town, for four hundred dollars, purchased from Peek "four undivided sevenths of that certain pump, used by the party of the first part in raising water at his water works in said town." The indenture contains this further clause: "And for the same consideration, the party of the first part grants to the party of the second part, the use of said system of water works in connection with said pump, in the manner and to the extent of the covenants hereinafter contained." Then follow covenants to the effect that Peek shall run the pump and water works; that he shall supply water for municipal uses where his pipes may run; that the town may make regulations respecting the use of water, so as to supply water in cases of fire and other public necessity; and that Peek shall receive for water supplied for the last mentioned purposes, only a reasonable compensation.

The ownership of four sevenths of a pump does not constitute ownership of the works to which the pump may be attached. That is all the ownership that the town has in the water works.

The town does not control the works, but they are controlled by Peek, subject, of course, to municipal regulation, as are all water works which supply municipalities or their inhabitants.

They are not public works, for the reason above given, and because, by the terms of the indenture, Peek is to run and manage them.

The covenant to furnish water for municipal uses—in cases of fire and other public necessity—is no more than is required by all companies furnishing water to towns and their inhabitants. (C. C. § 549; Spring Valley W. W. v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 111.)

That the works are not public, and are not owned and controlled by the town, is apparent from the fact that Peek is to be paid a "reasonable compensation" for the water furnished for fires and other public necessity.

Ross, J.:

The gist of the very able argument of appellant's counsel is that, under the provisions of the present Constitution, no company or individual possesses the right to lay pipes in the streets of any incorporated city or town of the State for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants thereof with fresh water, until the Legislature has prescribed the terms and conditions under which all of this may be done.

Prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, the Legislature had that power. It could delegate to the municipal government, or itself exercise, the power of prescribing the terms and conditions upon which pipes might be laid and water furnished. The privilege lay only in grant from the Legislature, which might be, and which experience showed had been, abused. As with many others, in dealing with this subject, the framers of the Constitution of 1879, determined to, and did make many radical changes from the pre-existing condition of things. They enacted several provisions in relation to the subject to be considered, all of which must be taken and read together, and to each of which effect must be given. Those provisions are:

"Article xi., Section 19. * * * In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose under and by authority of the laws of this State, shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gas light or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof.

"Article xiv., Section 1. The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the State, in the manner to be prescribed by law; provided, that the rates or compensation to be collected by any person, company, or corporation in this State for the use of water supplied to any city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof, shall be fixed, annually, by the Board of Supervisors, or city and county, or City or Town Council, or other governing body of such city and county, or city or town, by ordinance or otherwise, in the manner that other ordinances or legislative Acts or resolutions are passed by such body, and shall continue in force for one year and no longer. Such ordinances or resolutions shall be passed in the month of February of each year, and take effect on the first day of July, thereafter. Any Board or body failing to pass the necessary ordinances or resolutions fixing water rates, where necessary, within such time, shall be subject to peremptory process to compel action, at the suit of any party interested, and shall be liable to such further processes and penalties as the Legislature may prescribe. Any person, company, or corporation collecting water rates in any city and county, or city or town, in this State, otherwise than as so established, shall forfeit the franchises and water works of such person, company or corporation, to the city and county, or city or town, where the same are collected, for the public use.

"Art. xiv., Sec. 2. The right to collect rates, or compensation, for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and can not be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law."

Now, these provisions, as well as all other provisions of the Constitution, must receive a practical common-sense construction. They must be considered with reference to the prior state of the law, and with reference to the mischief intended to be remedied by the change. If the framers of the instrument had intended to leave the entire matter where it previously rested—in the hands of the Legislature—they would have said so in appropriate language. But it is perfectly evident that there were some things in regard to the subject that they were unwilling to trust to the Legislature. It was not with the view of "liberating the great public uses of water and gas from legislative control, and making them independent of the State," that the changes were made, but, on the contrary, it was intended, in certain enumerated respects, to lay a stronger hand upon them than that of the Legislature—to wit, the hand of the Constitution itself. So it was, that by Section 1 of Art. xiv., the use of all water heretofore or hereafter appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution, is expressly declared to be a public use. It is not left to the Legislature, as formerly, to say whether it shall be a public use or not, but the Constitution itself declares it to be such, and then makes the use subject to the regulation and control of the State; that is to say, of the Legislature, in the manner to be prescribed by law, to wit, by statute law, subject, however, to certain enumerated provisions contained in the Constitution itself; among them, to provisions in respect to the rates or compensation to be collected by any person, company, or corporation, for the use of water supplied to any city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof. Such rates or compensation, the Constitution expressly declares shall be fixed in a certain specified manner, at a certain time, and by a certain body; and the body failing to do so is expressly made "subject to peremptory process to compel action, and at the suit of any party interested, and liable to such further processes and penalties as the Legislature may prescribe."

But by the next section of the same article of the Constitution, the right to collect the rates or compensation so established is declared to be a franchise, "and can not be exercised except by authority and in the manner prescribed by law"—that is, by statute law. But, of course, the Constitution contemplated the enacting by the Legislature, where they did not exist, of all laws necessary to give effect to its commands, and that none should be passed in contravention of its provisions. When, therefore, the Constitution fixed the manner of establishing the rates or compensation to be charged for water furnished to any city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof, and further declared that the right to collect the rates or compensation so established is a franchise, and can not be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law, it was the duty of the Legislature, if they did not exist, to provide the needful laws. But the failure of the Legislature to do so, if failure there was, could not prevent the establishment of the rates or compensation specifically required to be established by the Constitution. And so with respect to the privilege granted by Section 19 of Article xi. of the Constitution of laying pipes in the public streets and thoroughfares of any city (where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality), so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants with gas or other illuminating light or with fresh water. That privilege is expressly granted by the section of the Constitution cited, subject to the direction of the Superintendent of Streets or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulation as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, and upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof. The purpose of this provision was thus explained by the gentleman at whose instance it was inserted in, and became a part of the Constitution: "It gives to any individual, as well as to any incorporated company, the right to the use of the streets for laying down pipes for the supply of gas and water, or either. I think that the objection that was taken to the section as formerly introduced was well taken — that it should not be limited to corporations; that any individual, for the public good, should have the right to use the streets for laying down pipes for supplying water or gas. It is in the public interest that it should be conceded, and it prevents monopoly in any sense. It also provides that the city authorities may make a regulation in relation to damages and indemnity; that is, that they may make a regulation requiring all work to be done under the supervision of the Superintendent of Streets, and also, if any damage should be likely to occur, they may, by security or otherwise, guard against it. * * * Then it provides that the city and county shall have the right to regulate the price to be paid by the inhabitants for the gas and for the water. This is also a necessary regulation, I think, against the abuses of monopoly. Now, in Los Angeles we have a gas company with a monopoly for twenty years, and several parties have endeavored to get the privilege for laying down pipes in the streets for the purpose of supplying the city and competing with this company, but the company has always had sufficient influence in the municipal government to prevent this being done, and this company has a prospect of exclusive right for twenty years to come. Now, I submit to the Convention that this is a great abuse of public authority and that it ought to be corrected. We have, also, there, a water company that claims the monopoly, and the private individual who did succeed in laying down pipes and is to some extent supplying the city with water in opposition to the monopoly, is threatened constantly with suits and injunctions, and if this thing goes on we will have a monopoly, not only of water and gas, but of all domestic necessities, and then we will have some company peddling it by the tin cupful. It is time this abuse was corrected, and, therefore, I offer this amendment"—which "amendment" is the clause of the Constitution now under consideration. (Debates Cons. Con., Vol. 2, p. 1075.)

We have quoted at length the remarks accompanying the introduction of the provision, for the purpose of showing that the members of the Constitutional Convention had distinctly put before them the evils intended to be remedied, and the purpose of the enactment; and thus informed, they adopted it. Yet we are asked to hold, in effect, that after all, the whole matter rests where it did before—with the Legislature. This we can not do. Nor under our construction of the provisions in question, do we discover any indication of a return "to the doctrine of the Dartmouth College Case," nor any fostering of monopolies, but, on the contrary, the most manifest intent to prevent them as respects the important subjects treated of—gas and water. By the adoption of those provisions the people asserted their willingness to leave the entire subject in the hands of the Legislature, and in the particulars already indicated, declared the rule that should govern, in the organic law itself, and gave to the Legislature the "regulation and control" in all other respects.

It is also claimed on the part of the appellant that the word "city" used in Section 19 of Art. xi., supra, does not include towns, and therefore does apply to the town of Woodland. But in this position, also, we are unable to agree with the learned counsel for appellant. As already said, all of the provisions of the Constitution above quoted must be taken and read together. Indeed, this is conceded by counsel. Now, Section 1 of Art. xiv. provides that the rates or compensation to be collected by any person, company, or corporation in this State for the use of water supplied to any city and

Is it not too plain for argument that the rates or compensation required to be fixed by this provision of the Constitution are the rates or compensation to be collected by the individual or corporation introducing water "in any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality," as provided by Section 19 of Art. xi.?

That the provision of the Constitution requiring the rates or compensation to be fixed has no application to water furnished by a municipality itself, is conclusively shown by the concluding clause of the provision, which is in these words: "Any person, company, or corporation, collecting water rates in any city and county, or city or town in this State, otherwise than as so established, shall forfeit the franchises and water works of such person, company, or corporation to the city and county, or city or town where the same are collected, for the public use." It would be absurd to say that the Constitution meant to provide for the forfeiting of the water works of a city and county, or city or town to itself. We think it clear that the rates or compensation required to be fixed by Section 1 of Article xiv. are the rates or compensation to be collected for water authorized to be introduced by Section 19 of Article xi., and that the latter section secures to individuals and to corporations duly incorporated for such purpose under and by authority of the laws of the State, the right to introduce water into the classes of municipalities that by Section 19 of Article xi. are given the right to fix the rates or compensation for its use — that is to say, cities, towns, and cities and counties. This construction brings the several sections into harmony, and gives effect to the evident purpose of the Constitution.

Other points are made which need not be noticed in detail.

Our conclusion is that the judgment and order ought to be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

TOWN OF WOODLAND v. J. D. STEPHENS ET AL.

WATER SUPPLY FOR MUNICIPALITIES — CONSTITUTION — CITY AND COUNTY GAS FRANCHISE — INJUNCTION. — The case of the People v. J. D. Stephens et al., No. 8,023, decided November 28, 1882, followed. (See ante, 209.)

APPEAL from the Superior Court of the County of Yolo, from an order dissolving a preliminary injunction. BUSH, J.

Action to restrain the defendants from making excavations in the streets of the Town of Woodland. A preliminary injunction was granted upon the complaint alone. Defendants filed an answer, and set up, as a defense, that the excavations made and threatened to be made by defendants in the streets of said town were for the purpose of laying pipes to supply the inhabitants of the town with water, and pleaded certain matters as facts under which they claimed the right to so supply water. Defendants also filed their own affidavit, containing, substantially, the same matters as in the answer; and upon the affidavit and answer, moved to dissolve the injunction. Upon the hearing of the motion counter affidavits were read, and the Court dissolved the injunction. From the said order dissolving said preliminary injunction plaintiff appealed.

After decision in bank a petition for rehearing was filed and the same denied.

SANTA CRUZ RAILROAD CO. v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE COUNTY OF SANTA CRUZ.

COUNTY BOND — MANDAMUS — NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT — STATUTE — BOARD OF SUPERVISORS — CONTRACT.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Twentieth Judicial District in and for the County of Santa Cruz, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. BELDEN, J.

Application for a writ of mandate. The Court below found the following facts: 1. On or about the eighteenth of June, 1873, the plaintiff duly incorporated under the laws of the State of California for the construction of a railroad, from a point upon the "Southern Pacific Railroad," in the County of Monterey, and extending in a westerly direction across Santa Cruz County to a point called "New Year's Ranch," upon the western boundary of Santa Cruz County. 2. Upon the twenty-fifth day of September, 1872, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, approved "April 4, 1870," the Board of Supervisors of Santa Cruz County submitted to a vote of the electors of said county, the question of granting the aid of said county in the form of bonds to the amount of six thousand dollars per mile, to aid in the construction of said road. Said order was by the Board of Supervisors regularly made and entered upon their minutes, and after a proper petition requesting said submission had been filed with said Board. 3. That upon the fifth day of November, 1872, after due and regular notice, by publication as by law required, the electors of Santa Cruz County voted upon said proposition, and there was then cast in favor of granting said proposed aid nine hundred and twenty-seven votes, and against granting such aid five hundred and sixty-four votes, and thereafter and in due time and form said "Board of Supervisors" canvassed said vote so cast and returned, and did enter upon their minutes that the vote was as above set forth, and that the proposition to grant said aid, as in said proposition submitted, had carried at said election. 4. That in pursuance of said election and vote and order thereupon as above set forth, the defendant did, upon August 4, 1873, make and execute upon behalf of the County of Santa Cruz the contract in writing set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and which is as follows:

"This contract, made and entered into on the fourth day of August, A. D. 1873, by and between the County of Santa Cruz, in the State of California, acting by and through the Board of Supervisors of said county, as the party of the first part, and that certain corporation, organized, acting, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of said State, and known, designated, and called the Santa Cruz Railroad Company, as the party of the second part.

"Witnesseth, that the Board of Supervisors of said county, having by an order duly made on September 25, 1872, and recorded at large in volume 3, pages 236-8 of the minutes of the proceedings of said Board, proposed that said county shall aid in the construction of a railroad of not less than three-foot gauge, the route of which road is definitely described in said proceedings, as beginning at or near the Pajaro Depot on the Southern Pacific Railroad, and thence running in the most practicably direct route through the Counties of Monterey and Santa Cruz, crossing the Pajaro River near Watsonville, and crossing the San Lorenzo River between the county road leading to Soquel and the Bay of Monterey, and thence along or near the coast to the boundary of said county near the south-east corner of the point New Year's Rancho, by the issue of county bonds, payable within twenty years, and bearing interest payable semi-annually at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, to the amount of six thousand dollars per mile, but not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of two hundred and forty thousand dollars: such aid to be in lieu of the aid of one hundred thousand dollars heretofore authorized to be granted in the construction of a railroad connecting the town of Santa Cruz with the Southern Pacific Railroad: And the Board of Supervisors of said county, under and in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of said State, approved April 4, 1870, and entitled "An act to empower the Board of Supervisors of the several counties of the State to aid in the construction of a railroad in their respective counties," and of the Act of April 4, A. D. 1870, supplemental thereto, having at the election held in said county on the fifth day of November, A. D. 1872, of which election at least thirty days' notice was given by publication once a week in a newspaper printed and published in said county, which notice stated the day on which, and the places where such election was to be held in said county, and the amount of bonds of said county to be issued for railroad aid, and definitely described the route of the railroad for which aid was proposed, submitted to the qualified electors of said county the question whether such railroad aid shall be granted by said county to aid in the construction of a railroad on the route hereinbefore described; and at such election a majority of the electors voting at such election, having cast their votes in favor of such railroad aid, and the result of said election after a full and fair canvass by said Board, having been declared by said Board to be in favor of granting such railroad aid, and the sum of two hundred and forty thousand dollars, authorized by the said vote as aforesaid to be granted in and to such railroad, being less than five per cent. of the value of the taxable property of said county, and no aid whatever to any railroad having ever been granted by said county: And a certain agreement dated January 18, A. D. 1872, between said county and the Board of Supervisors thereof, and the Santa Cruz and Watsonville Railroad Company, having been fully and forever canceled and annulled, and said county released and discharged from all liability thereunder, and covenants therein: And the said party of the second part having been heretofore duly organized as a corporation under the laws of said state for constructing and maintaining a railroad on the entire route first hereinbefore mentioned and described, and proposing to construct on said route, first, the section of such railroad between a point at or near said Pajaro Depot, and a point on the westerly side of said San Lorenzo River, and within the corporate limits of the Town of Santa Cruz, which point last referred to is hereafter to be located by said party of the second part; and said party of the second part having solicited the said Board to grant the aid of said county in the construction of such railroad, and the terms offered by said party of the second part appearing to said Board to be advantageous to said county, and it appearing that said county will be greatly benefited by the construction of such railroad, or any part thereof: Now, therefore, this contract witnesseth, that in consideration of the premises, and of the agreements herein named, to be done and performed by said party of the second part, the said party of the first part has agreed and hereby does agree with said party of the second part, to issue, deliver, and donate unto said party of the second part, in aid of the construction of such railroads, bonds of the said County of Santa Cruz, in amounts, and at the times, and upon the terms as herein stated, said bonds as herein provided shall be payable in gold coin to said party of the second part, or to the holders of such bonds, within twenty years from the date of their issue, at the office of the Treasurer of said county, and shall bear interest in like coin at the rate of seven per cent. per annum: and the installments of interest shall be payable semi-annually on the first Mondays of January and July of each year, on coupons to be issued and delivered with such bonds, and each of such bonds shall be of the denomination of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, signed by the chairman of said Board, and by the Treasurer and Clerk of said county, and under the seal of said county; the interest coupons to be signed by the Treasurer and Clerk of said county: such bonds are to be prepared for signing in the following form, to wit:

“In pursuance of an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled ‘An Act to empower the Board of Supervisors of the several counties of the State, to aid in the construction of a railroad in their respective counties, approved April 4, 1870,’ and of an Act supplementary thereto, approved April 4, 1870, and in accordance with the terms of a contract entered into by the Board of Supervisors of said county, on the fourth day of August, 1873, with the Santa Cruz Railroad Company, which said contract is entered upon the minutes of the Board of Supervisors, in Vol. 3, pp. 279-286: The county of Santa Cruz owes and will pay at the office of the County

Treasurer, in the town of Santa Cruz, State of California, to the Santa Cruz Railroad Company, or the holder of this bond, within twenty years from the date of these presents, the sum of _____ dollars, in United States gold coin, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, in like gold coin, from the date hereof, until paid, interest payable semi-annually, on the first Mondays of January and July of each year, on the surrender to said County Treasurer of the coupon for said interest. In testimony whereof, and by virtue of the authority upon them conferred by the Board of Supervisors of said county, the chairman of the Board of Supervisors of said county, the County Treasurer, and the County Clerk have hereunto set their hands, and caused the seal of the county to be affixed, this _____ day of _____ A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy _____ Chairman Board of Supervisors. County Clerk. County Treasurer.

Coupon No. _____ On the first Monday of _____ A. D. _____ the County of Santa Cruz will pay to the Santa Cruz Railroad Company, or bearer, at the County Treasurer's office, _____ dollars in United States gold coin, interest due on bond No. _____

County Clerk. County Treasurer.

"Said bonds, with their respective coupons, shall be issued and delivered as follows, to wit: When five miles of said first section of said railroad shall have been constructed, and a construction train run over the same, there shall be issued and delivered to said party of the second part, by said party of the first part, bonds of said county, as aforesaid, to the amount of thirty thousand dollars, and upon the construction of every mile of track thereafter, of such railroad, and the passage of a construction train over the same, there shall be issued and delivered as last aforesaid, to said party of the second part, bonds of said county to the amount of six thousand dollars, and so on until the construction of said railroad is completed. When said party of the second part shall have constructed the first five miles of said railroad as herein designated, a written notice to that effect, signed by the President, Secretary, or Chief Engineer of said party of the second part, shall be delivered to the County Clerk of said county, and within fifteen days after the delivery of such notice to such Clerk, the said Board of Supervisors shall inspect, or cause to be inspected, the said five miles of such road, and if found constructed in accordance with this contract, said Board shall issue and deliver to the said party of the second part the bonds of said county, as aforesaid, to the amount of thirty thousand dollars, and thereafter as each mile of said railroad is constructed as stipulated, a similar notice to that effect shall be delivered to said clerk, and thereafter within fifteen days, said Board shall inspect, or cause to be inspected, such mile of the road so constructed, and if found constructed in accordance with this contract, said Board shall issue and deliver to said party of the second part the bonds of said county as aforesaid to the amount of six thousand dollars. And in case said Board, after inspection as aforesaid, shall determine that the part of the road so inspected has not been constructed according to this contract, said Board shall, within fifteen days after such notice shall have been delivered to said Clerk, cause a written notice, signed by the chairman of said Board, or by said County Clerk, stating the objections of said Board to the materials used in said railroad, or to the style of the work, or to the defects in its construction, or other objections, to be delivered to the President, Secretary, or Chief Engineer of said party of the second part, or left at its office; and in default thereof said bonds shall be issued; but after the ninety thousand dollars of said bonds, with their coupons, shall have been delivered to the said party of the second part, no other or further bond or bonds shall be issued or delivered to the said party of the second part, until a railroad bridge shall have been built, constructed, and finished over and across the said San Lorenzo River, on the line of said railroad, between the county road leading to Soquel and the Bay of Monterey, and the track of such railroad shall have been constructed, and the rails laid to within three hundred feet of the Bay of Monterey, on the westerly side of the river last named. And the said party of the second part has agreed, and hereby does agree to and with the said party of the first part, to build, construct, and furnish such last named bridge, and to lay the track of said railroad from the easterly bank of said last named river, to a point on the westerly side thereof, within three hundred feet of said bay, in three months after said bonds of said county, to the amount of ninety thousand dollars shall have been issued and delivered to said party of the second part. And if on the completion of the laying of the track of said first section of said railroad, there shall be in the whole distance thereof a fractional part of a mile, said Board of Supervisors shall issue and deliver to said party of the second part, such bonds of said county therefor, at the rate of six thousand dollars per mile. The aid of said county is granted to said party of the second part upon the following conditions, to wit: 1. Work upon the construction of said railroad must commence within three months from the date of this contract, and must thenceforth be prosecuted to the completion of said first section of said railroad, with all the reasonable diligence permitted by the means at the disposal of the said party of the second part. 2. The construction of the road-bed of said railroad may be commenced or prosecuted or carried on at any part of the route of said railroad, but the laying of the rails must commence on the eastern bank of said San Lorenzo River, or within one hundred yards thereof, and thence be continued on the said route of said railroad towards the said Pajaro Depot. 3. The said railroad shall be of not less than a three-foot gauge, the rails used shall be of iron, and weigh on an average not less than thirty pounds to the yard, but no rail used shall weigh less than twenty-five pounds to the yard; the railroad ties shall be of redwood; the rail joints shall be united by fish-plates; the grades adopted shall be practical for the economical transportation of heavy freight; the bridges and trestles shall be substantially built, and of approved style, and the whole work shall be first-class. 4. The said railroad, when the first section shall have been constructed, must be equipped with passenger and freight cars and locomotives, sufficient to accommodate the travel and trade, and the rolling stock thereof shall be an average of that used on other railroads in the United States of the same gauge, and the road-bed shall be well ballasted. 5. The westerly terminus of said first section of said railroad shall be at such point on the western side of said San Lorenzo River and within the corporate limits of the said town of Santa Cruz, as shall hereafter be selected by said party of the second part. 6. Said Board of Supervisors shall not grant the aid authorized to be granted as aforesaid as to any part of such railroad between said town of Santa Cruz and said Pajaro Depot, which shall not have been completed and in full operation on or before the thirty-first day of December, A. D. 1875, and no bond shall be issued for such uncompleted portion thereof. In witness whereof, the said party of the first part has caused this contract to be executed for and on behalf thereof, by the members of its Board of Supervisors, to wit, Bernard Peyton, P. F. Dean, and Frank P. Porter, and its seal to be hereto affixed; and the said party of the second part has duly authorized and directed its President, F. A. Hihn, and its Secretary, J. N. Besse, for and on its behalf, to execute this contract."

5. That thereafter said plaintiff proceeded to construct said road in accordance with the terms and provisions of said contract. That said plaintiff began the construction of said road at a point on the east bank of the San Lorenzo River, and from then thereafter prosecuted said work with all reasonable dispatch, until the completion of the same, from the Town of Santa Cruz to the required junction with the "Southern Pacific Railroad." That while said road was in process of construction, and about the time that the first five-mile section was completed, and said plaintiff under the provisions of said contract should have been entitled to receive, upon said first section, thirty thousand dollars of the bonds of said county, two suits were brought by two several taxpayers of Santa Cruz County against said Board of Supervisors, to enjoin the payment and delivery of such bonds, and a regular order was made and served upon said Board on or about the ninth of December, 1874, enjoining and restraining said Board of Supervisors from delivering said bonds to said plaintiff, and upon appeal taken from said order to the Supreme Court of the State of California, said injunction order was affirmed and the same remained in full force, restraining the delivery of said bonds or any portion of the same, until the day of February, 1876, when said injunction was dissolved and said bonds to the amount of thirty thousand dollars were delivered by said county to this plaintiff. That said injunction was procured and maintained against the wish and will and earnest effort of both said plaintiff and also of said Board of Supervisors, and that said Board of Supervisors employed counsel to procure the dissolution of the same.

6 That upon account of said injunction and the failure of plaintiff to receive said bonds, the plaintiff was greatly hindered and delayed in the construction of the said road, and was unable to procure money or credit to the extent that was required for the most expeditious prosecution of said work; and when said injunction was removed and said bonds were delivered to plaintiff, it did proceed to prosecute, and did complete said work within the points above designated, to wit, Santa Cruz Town and the Southern Pacific Railroad, with all reasonable and proper diligence and dispatch.

7. That after the fixing of the line of this road, and the execution of the contract as above set forth, and after a portion of said road near the town of Watsonville had been constructed and the rails laid, the Legislature of the State of California did authorize and empower said Board of Supervisors to so modify and change said route of said road, and also the contract of said plaintiff with the County of Santa Cruz, as to permit the former to so change the original route of said road, that the same might be constructed through the Town of Watsonville.

8. That thereafter and after the passage of said Act of the Legislature, said parties, the railroad company, upon the one hand, and the Board of Supervisors acting upon behalf of said Santa Cruz County upon the other, did so modify and change said contract that the line of said road was changed to, and did pass through the Town of Watsonville. The order of said Board authorizing and permitting said change, was made by said Board upon the seventeenth of April, 1876. That in said Act of the Legislature it was provided that no additional liability against said county should be created by reason of said change, and such alteration of said route. That thereafter and in pursuance of the several Acts and orders permitting such change, the plaintiff took up one mile and 570-1000 of one mile of track then laid, upon so much road then finished, and relaid the same upon the route through the Town of Watsonville. The line of said road as changed to pass through the Town of Watsonville is three fourths of a mile ($\frac{3}{4}$) longer than the line as originally projected, and before said track was taken up. Upon the seventeenth of August, 1876, the portion of said road extending from the town of Santa Cruz to the Southern Pacific Railroad was completed and in actual operation. The road so constructed was from the depot in the Town of Santa Cruz to the connection with the Southern Pacific Railroad at Pajaro Station, twenty-one miles 362-1000 of a mile. Of this distance one mile and two hundred and twenty feet was east of the eastern boundary of Santa Cruz County, and in the County of Monterey.

9. The entire line of the proposed road, from the point of connection with the S. P. Railroad to "New Year's Ranch," upon the western boundary of Santa Cruz County, has been surveyed and mapped, and is a distance of 39 695-1000 miles as surveyed. No work has been done of any other kind than to make such survey from the Town of Santa Cruz to the western terminus of said road. The surveyed line of said road is 19 miles 279-1000 of one mile.

The construction of this western portion of the road is practicable, and the same can be constructed at a length not exceeding twenty miles, and twenty miles will be required for said road. No contract has been made by the Board of Supervisors of Santa Cruz County, for the construction of the portion of said road surveyed west of the Town of Santa Cruz, nor has any work whatever been expended upon such portion of the road, other than making such survey.

10. The entire length of said road as completed, from the Town of Santa Cruz to the point of junction with the Southern Pacific Railroad, is 21 362-1000 miles. This section of the road was made three fourths ($\frac{3}{4}$) of a mile longer by the change of the route through the Town of Watsonville, than had it been completed upon the route as originally surveyed.

11. The road in question, between the points when the same was constructed, would have been fully completed and in running order by the thirty-first of December, 1875, but for the injunctions restraining the delivery of the bonds, as heretofore set forth. Said road, as to material, construction, and equipment, was in all respects in conformity with the terms of said contract, and the Board of Supervisors has at no time objected to the same, upon any of the grounds last suggested, or in any form or matter protested as to the character or position of said road, or the material employed therein.

12. That upon the twenty-third day of February, 1874, the first section of said road was fully completed and in working order, to wit, five miles of the same east from the west bank of the San Lorenzo River, and said section was then, by said Board, examined, approved, and accepted, and the bonds of said county for the sum of thirty thousand dollars, or six thousand dollars per mile, for said section were then delivered to said plaintiff.

That thereafter, upon the first day of March, 1876, fourteen additional miles of said road were examined, approved, and accepted by said Board, and bonds for the same, to the amount of eighty-four thousand dollars, or six thousand dollars per mile, were then delivered to said plaintiff, making in all one hundred and fourteen thousand dollars in bonds so delivered, and nineteen miles of road so accepted. That after the first day of March, 1876, the plaintiff changed the line of its road to pass through the Town of Watsonville, the plaintiff completed said road to its junction with the Southern Pacific Railroad, and thereafter served due notice of such completion upon the Board of Supervisors, and demanded that they issue the county bonds, at the rate of six thousand dollars per mile, for such road so completed. But said Board then did and ever since have failed and refused to issue any other bonds to plaintiff, than the one hundred and fourteen thousand dollars heretofore mentioned.

13. That the whole length of road constructed from the Town of Santa Cruz to the Southern Pacific Railroad, deducting therefrom the increased length caused by passing through the Town of Watsonville, is twenty miles and three thousand two hundred and thirty-one feet.

14. That the compensation to which plaintiff is entitled from the County of Santa Cruz, under the several Acts of the Legislature, and the contracts heretofore referred to, for the road so constructed, is to bear such a proportion to the entire aid voted ($240,000) as the amount of road constructed (20 miles, 3,231 feet) bears to the entire length of the road (40 miles, 3,231 feet). The Court found as conclusion of law that the entire amount so payable is one hundred and twenty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two dollars. That the entire amount paid is one hundred and fourteen thousand dollars. That the plaintiff is entitled to receive from the defendant bonds in accordance with said contract, to the amount of seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-two dollars ($7,862); and ordered that a writ of mandate issue accordingly.

J. H. Logan, W. D. Storey, and J. H. Skirm, for Appellant.

Charles B. Younger and Taylor & Haight, for Respondent.

The Court:

We are satisfied, from the record, that the conditions precedent upon which the respondent was entitled to have the bonds issued to it, had all been performed by it, before the commencement of this proceeding, and therefore that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed. (Nevada Bank v. Steinmetz, 10 P. C. L. J. 459.)

Judgment affirmed.

[No. 6,974.—In Bank.]

November 28, 1882.

E. I. UPHAM v. WILLIAM HOSKING.

TITLE TO LANDS UNDER CURATIVE ACT OF MARCH 27, 1872.—Plaintiff claims title to a portion of the lands sued for in this action of ejectment under State patent issued May 18, 1872. The premises embraced in the patent are below high-water mark, and include a wharf which extends into the water to such depth that vessels can be moored at it for receiving and discharging cargo.

Held: 1. Such tide lands were not subject to sale under the Act of 1868. 2. But the curative Act of March 27, 1872, validated sales of such lands, and the title of the State vested in the plaintiff under that Act.

PRESUMPTION AS TO THE DISCHARGE OF OFFICIAL DUTY.—To the objection that it did not appear that plaintiff had a certificate of purchase when the Act of 1872 went into operation and therefore was not entitled to the benefit of its provisions.

Held: The plaintiff is entitled to the presumption that the officer issuing the patent, regularly performed his duty in issuing it to him, and that he would not have issued it had not the plaintiff brought himself within the provisions of the curative Act.

TOWN.—The evidence shows that the place called Collinsville was not a town.

RESERVATION IN DEED—HOUSE NO PART OF WHARF.—In a deed of conveyance from one B. to the plaintiff for a part of the premises in dispute, there was a reservation of "the wharf and wharf franchises."

Held: A house, a portion of which was on the premises in controversy, and which according to the evidence was built on piles adjoining and "butting up" against the wharf, was no part of the wharf, and therefore not included in the reservation.

FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE DECLARED BY STATUTE.—As to the remaining portion of the premises there had not been a compliance with the terms of a grant by the Legislature to one C., under whom the defendant claimed, and all rights thereunder had been forfeited to the state before the accrual of the title claimed by the plaintiff. No action was necessary to enforce or to judicially establish the forfeiture. It was declared by statute, and when so declared the title to the thing forfeited immediately vested in the state upon the happening of the event or the commission of the offense for which the forfeiture was declared.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District in and for the County of Solano, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.
WALLACE, J.

Action of ejectment. The evidence as to the house claimed to have been reserved in the deed, and from one Brown to the plaintiff, was as follows:

Testimony of C. K. Marshall:

"Question. You know the end of the house that extends over into the swamp land?

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is that building the same structure as the wharf itself—a body of piles altogether—a wharf on portion and a house on portion, altogether?

"A. It is built on piles.

"Q. The house joins the wharf itself?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The house and wharf are all together, are they not?

"A. They are both on piles right together.

"Q. Joined right together?

"A. Yes, sir; butt up together.

"Q. It does not extend any further on the wharf now—or how is it—than then?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. It is precisely as built in 1861, as far as the foundation is concerned?"

"A. Yes, sir."

The Court below found that the land included in the plaintiff's location and in the patent to him is not and never has been situated within two miles of any town whatever. This finding was attacked by the defendant on the ground that it was within two miles of a place called and known as Collinsville, and that Collinsville was a town. The evidence relied on to show that Collinsville was a town, was as follows: 1. An Act of the Legislature of March 30, 1868, entitled "an Act to authorize the establishment of a steam ferry between Collinsville in Solano County and New York Landing and Antioch in Contra Costa County." 2. In the patent from the State to the plaintiff, the "bridge leading on to Collinsville wharf" is mentioned as one of the calls in the description of the land. 3. In the deed of conveyance from Brown to the plaintiff, he, the plaintiff, is described as "of Collinsville." 4. One of the witnesses (Hooper) testified that between the years 1867 and 1876, considerable business was done at and over the wharf, and that a portion of that time several steamers occasionally landed there. 5. Another witness (Charles J. Collins) testified that after the building of the wharf in 1861, "the town was named Collinsville after that; about that time we applied for a post-office there, and they named it Collinsville." Q. "Was there a post-office there at that time or soon after?" A. "Soon after." 6. Another witness (Turner) testified that he ran a ferry from Antioch to Collinsville. 7. Another witness (Marshall) testified that his home since 1853 had been in Collinsville, but at the time of the trial he was County Recorder and lived in Fairfield.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

B. S. Brooks and Wm. Leviston, for Appellant.

The existence of Collinsville is assumed all through the case, and it appears to be a place of considerable importance. It has existed since 1861, is a post-town, a place where all steamers on the river land, and where a large business is done; and is clearly a town or village. Plaintiff names it in his deed as the town where he resides. Respondent does not question the existence of Collinsville. The defense was expressly alleged in the answer that said land is situated within two miles of the Town of Collinsville, Solano County, and was at time of survey.

The finding is, "is not and never has been situated within two miles of any town whatever." This does not meet the issue. If it means that the land is not within two miles of Collinsville, the patent confutes the finding, for one of the calls of the patent is the Collinsville wharf. It certainly is not a finding that Collinsville has no existence. Nor that it is not a town or village. The confirmatory Act of 1872 does not apply. That Act was only intended to cure defects in the proceedings under the Acts providing for the sale of such land as had been authorized by the State. In Yoakum v. Brower, 52 Cal. 376, cited by respondent, it was said that the "purpose of the Act was to afford relief to those who had become purchasers of State lands, but who, because of some defect in the proceedings or default on their part, could not, under the laws then in force, procure title by means of the proceedings already instituted." In Rowell v. Perkins, 56 Cal. 220, there were a defective application and a default in payment, and the decision was to the same effect. Anything in these decisions to the effect that the land granted was any land that might have been applied for, is obiter dictum. No such matter was before the Court.

The Act of 1872 is to be construed in connection with the acts providing for the sale of lands of the State, and to which it evidently refers. To hold that it grants the land in controversy, is directly contrary to the decision in Kimball v. MacPherson, 46 Cal. 103, which says that the Act of 1868 (under which plaintiff claims) although it mentions "tide lands," does not authorize or provide for the sale of the class of land in controversy.

J. F. Wendell, for Respondent.

The testimony shows, without contradiction, and the Court finds, that although eighteen years had elapsed since the passage of the Act, no ferry was ever established, and the grantees utterly failed to comply with any of the requirements of the Act save the building of a wharf on the Solano side. This worked a forfeiture. No judicial proceedings were necessary on the part of the State, but the rights conferred at once ceased and determined upon the happening of the event for which the statute denounced the forfeiture. (Oakland R. R. Co. v. O. B. & F. V. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365; Borland v. Lewis, 43 Cal. 569; Clarke v. Calloway, 1 Sneed (Ky.), 46; reported in vol. 2 Am. Dec., p. 706.)

The only ground of attack upon the patent alleged in defendant's answer is that the premises granted are situated within two miles of the town of Collinsville. The Act of March 28, 1868, providing for the sale of State lands (Stat. 1867-8, p. 514), Section 70 as amended April 4, 1870 (Stat. 1869-70, p. 877), reserved from sale "tide-lands * * within two miles of any town or village." Upon this point the Court finds that the land is not situated within two miles of any town. Webster defines a town as "any collection of houses larger than a village and not incorporated as a city." There was no evidence of any town incorporation or of any such collection of houses as would constitute a town in fact. A town on paper or in name only would not come within the exceptions. All post-offices have names. The inference from the entire testimony is that there was no town in fact, and in the absence of express testimony the presumption that the patent was legally issued sufficiently sustains the finding of the Court.

Even were the patent objectionable on the grounds urged by the defendant, the defect would be absolutely cured by the curative Act of March 27, 1872 (Stat. 1871-2, p. 587), entitled "An Act for the relief of purchasers of State lands;" Section 1 of which provides that "when application has been made to purchase lands from the State and payment made to the Treasurer of the proper county for the same in whole or in part, and a certificate of purchase or patent issued * * * the title of the State is hereby vested in said applicant," etc. The record shows that the patent in question was issued May 18, 1872, upon a location surveyed in April, 1870, and approved August 6, 1870.

The record does not show the date of the payments or of the certificate of purchase, but under the law it must have been in 1870, and the patent itself is prima facie evidence, at least, that the law was complied with. The burden of proof is on the defendant to show that the patent was not authorized by the curative Act of 1872, even though it could be successfully assailed in the absence of that Act. "A party claiming land under a patent has the benefit of the presumption that the officers rightfully performed all their duties in selling the land and issuing the patent, and it devolves upon the party assailing the patent to show that it was issued without authority of law." (Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 383; Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 Cal. 69; Toland v. Mandell, 38 Cal. 30.) "The burden of proof is cast on the one who undertakes to impeach the patent to establish the facts necessary for its overthrow." (People v. Stratton, 25 Cal. 243; Summers v. Dickinson, 9 Cal. 556; Durfee v. Plaisted, 38 Cal. 83.)

THORNTON, J.:

Action to recover possession of certain lands described in the complaint, situate in the County of Solano. The plaintiff had judgment. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order just mentioned.

As to a portion of the land sued for (part of Swamp Land Survey No. 17), on which was a portion of a building, it is admitted that the title was in one Brown, and that the conveyance from him to plaintiff passed to the latter Brown's title to that portion of the lot which was covered by the building, unless excluded from the operation of the conveyance by a reservation contained in it of "the wharf and wharf franchises." On the premises in controversy was a wharf and a part of the building above mentioned.

It is contended here that this building constituted a portion of the wharf, and was embraced in the reservation aforesaid, and, therefore, did not pass to the plaintiff under Brown's conveyance.

On an examination of the evidence, we are of opinion that this contention is untenable, that the building did not constitute a part of the wharf, and was not, therefore, reserved from the operation of the deed.

As to the remaining portion of the premises sued for, the defendant claimed under a grant on certain conditions made to one Collins, in which grant it was provided that on failure to comply with the conditions, all the rights granted by the Act should become forfeited to the State. The Court below found and held that there had not been a compliance with the terms of the grant, and that all rights under the Act had been forfeited to the State before the accrual of the title claimed by plaintiff. This matter will be better understood from the findings of the Court in regard thereto. They are as follows:

"As to the affirmative matter alleged in defendant's answer, the Court finds: That a private statute of the State of California was enacted by the Legislature thereof entitled and approved as alleged in said answer, the whole of which statute is contained in the printed statutes of California for the year 1861, on page 300 thereof. That by the terms thereof there was granted to one C. J. Collins, his associates and assigns, for the term of twenty years from the date of May 6, 1861, the right to establish a ferry across the upper end of Suisun Bay, from the point known on Ringold's map of Suisun Bay as 'Point Collberg' in Solano County, to a place known as New York in Contra Costa County, and said parties were also authorized to construct a wharf at each of the landing places of said ferry, one in Solano County and one in Contra Costa County, which wharves were required by said Act to be substantially built, of such materials and of such dimensions as to make said wharves sufficient for all the purposes of a steam ferry as well as for the local business of the two points; and from time to time said wharves were required to be enlarged as the commerce of the places might require.

"That by the terms of the said Act there was granted to the said C. J. Collins, his associates and assigns, for the purposes of the ferry and wharves aforesaid, the use and occupation of a strip of land at each of the said wharves, commencing at high tide six hundred (600) feet wide along the water-line in Solano County and three hundred (300) feet wide along the water-line in Contra Costa County, and commencing at high-water mark and running into the bay to a point where the water is ten feet deep at low tide.

"That all of said grants, rights, and privileges, however, were made upon the terms and conditions expressed in Section 4 of said Act, which is as follows:

"Section 4. The said parties herein named shall within six months from the passage of this Act commence the building of the wharves herein provided for, and within nine months shall have the steam ferry in operation, with a steam ferry boat running between said wharves of sufficient capacity to accommodate the public travel; provided, that if the said parties shall fail to commence and complete the said wharves and establish the said ferry within the time prescribed in this Act, or in any other manner violate its provisions, then all the rights granted by this Act shall become forfeited to the State.

"That neither the said C. J. Collins, his associates or assigns, being the parties in said Act named, ever complied with any of the requirements of said Section 4 of said Act, except that the wharf described in plaintiff's complaint was commenced by said Collins within six months from the passage of said Act and thereafter completed by him.

"That neither said Collins, his associates or assigns, ever established or put in operation any ferry of any kind between the points named in said Act, or between either of said points and any other point, and never commenced building, or completed, or owned any wharf whatever in said Contra Costa County, but totally failed to comply with each and every requirement of said Act, except as to building the wharf in Solano County, as aforesaid. That eighteen years have elapsed since the passage of said Act.

"That by reason of such non-compliance, all the rights and privileges granted by said Act to said Collins, his associates and assigns, became forfeited to the State of California.

"That said land at all the times mentioned in said answer was subject to sale, and had never been at any time reserved by the State of California from sale."

In regard to this last proposition the Court decided correctly both in point of law and fact. No action was necessary to enforce the forfeiture. It needed not to be established judicially. The forfeiture was declared by statute, and when so declared, the title to the thing forfeited immediately vests in the State, upon the happening of the event or the commission of the offense for which the forfeiture is declared. This is settled law in this State; so held under like circumstances in Borland v. Lewis, 43 Cal. 572, and O. R. B. Co. v. O. B. & F. V. R. R. Co., 45 id. 377. The plaintiff claims title to the said last mentioned portion of land under a patent from the State of California, bearing date the eighteenth day of May, 1872. The premises embraced in the patent are below high-water mark and include the wharf, which extends into the water of such depth that vessels can be moored at it for receiving and discharging cargo.

On an examination of the cases of Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471; Kimball v. MacPherson, 46 id. 103; and People v. Cowell, 60 Cal. 400, we are of opinion that such tide lands were not subject to sale under the Act of 1868. Such we think is the proper interpretation of the judgment of this Court in Kimball v. MacPherson, which case arose under the Act of 1868—the same Act under which the plaintiff made his application. At the close of the opinion in this case the Court used this language: “Nothing short of a very explicit provision to that effect would justify us in holding that the Legislature intended to permit the shore of the ocean between high and low-water mark to be converted to private ownership.” People v. Cowell is in the same line of decision. (See also People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 336.) Taylor v. Underhill was also an application under the Act of 1868, and although the point in judgment was that tide land belonging to the State by virtue of its sovereignty could not be purchased under an application for swamp and overflowed land, the remarks of the Court as regards the Act of 1868 accord with the conclusions reached in Kimball v. MacPherson.

Although the land sought to be purchased was on the shore of the ocean still the same reasoning applies to the land between high and low-water mark everywhere. We do not think that the Court intended to hold that such portions of the tide lands between high and low-water mark, which could be used for commercial purposes, as could be reclaimed for agricultural purposes, were subject to sale, and those which could not be reclaimed were not subject to sale, but that in their judgment the tide lands subject to sale and purchase were those described in People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 355, as the channels of greater or less width within the ebb and flow of the tide, 'threading the swamp lands, which channels are of little or no use either in the way of fishing or navigation. Note the observations of the Court on this point in 26 Cal. 356.

But it is said that this defect is cured by the fourth section of the Act of twenty-seventh of March, 1872. It was said in Rowell v. Perkins, 56 Cal. 226, of this Act: "The Act of March 27, 1872, is very broad and comprehensive. It validates every application to purchase land from the State when payment has been made, in whole or in part, to the Treasurer of the proper county. When the Act of 1872 was passed, the State owned the land, and by that Act disposed of it. It had received a portion of its value, and had full power to conform or perfect, conditionally or otherwise, any attempted purchase, even if when the application was made there was an entire failure on the part of the applicant to comply with the existing laws, or if the State did not then own the land or had adopted no legislation for the disposition of it." This ruling was approved and followed in Muller v. Carey, 58 Cal. 538.

That the State is the owner of the land embraced in the patent is declared by Section 670 of the Civil Code, and in accordance with the rule laid down in the cases just cited, we hold that the title of the State vested in the plaintiff by virtue of the Act of March 27, 1872.

It is urged that the Act of 1872 is retrospective (it was so held in Johnson v. Squires, 55 Cal. 103), and that inasmuch as it does not appear that the plaintiff had a certificate of purchase when the Act of 1872 went into operation, he is not entitled to the benefit of its provisions. But we think that the plaintiff is entitled to the presumption that the officer issuing the patent regularly performed his duty in issuing it to him, and that he would not have issued it, had not plaintiff brought himself within the provisions of the curative Act of 1872.

An objection is made to the title of plaintiff that the land patented to him was within two miles of the Town of Collinsville. But the Court in its findings negatived this, and we not show that the notice required by the law was given. Section 3144 of the Civil Code provides that notice of dishonor may be given:

"1. By delivering it to the party to be charged, personally, at any place; or,

"2. By delivering it to some person of discretion at the place of residence or business of such party, apparently acting for him; or,

"3. By properly folding the notice, directing it to the party to be charged, at his place of residence, according to the best information that the person giving the notice can obtain, depositing it in the post-office most conveniently accessible from the place where the presentment was made, and paying the postage thereon."

As the notice of the dishonor of the note required by the law was not given to the defendant Sweeney, the trial Court properly gave him judgment. But after this the plaintiff moved for a new trial, basing his motion on an affidavit of the notary, in which he states that after his examination as a witness in the case, he examined the city directory, thinking that if he could ascertain the business of Sweeney he might be able to recall the manner of the service of the notice of protest; that in the directory he found Sweeney described as keeping certain marble works, and that that fact brought the manner of his service of the notice of protest distinctly back to his mind; and the affiant then proceeds to detail the manner of service of the notice, which shows a compliance with the statutory requirements. On the strength of this affidavit the Court below granted a new trial. But the affidavit discloses a mere want of recollection. The city directory was open to the witness as well before as after the trial, and an examination of it before the trial would have disclosed the business of Sweeney as well as an examination of it afterwards. Due attention, in due season, would have afforded the witness the data which he deposes refreshed his memory; and that being so, its subsequent discovery is not sufficient ground for a new trial.

While we do not, of course, impute to the witness in this case anything of the sort, it is manifest that the sanction of such a practice would open the door to the unscrupulous for the perpetration of perjury, and would be fraught with great danger. (See Arnold v. Skaggs, 35 Cal. 684; Graham and Waterman on New Trials, vol. 1. pp. 477-479; id., vol. 2, pp. 1031, 1095-6; Bond v. Cutler, 7 Mass. 205; Harbour v. Rayburn, 7 Yerg. 432.)

W. W. DODGE ET AL. v. W. B. RIDENOUR ET AL.

SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT ON GROUND OF SURPRISE, INADVERTENCE, OR MISTAKE—JUDGMENT—PRACTICE—NEW TRIAL—DEFAULT.—In this case, Held: The Court below should have granted the defendant's motion to set aside the judgment. The case is within Section 473, C. C. P.

APPEAL by Samuel Crozier, one of the defendants, from the judgments of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, the one rendered May 27, 1880, for six thousand five hundred and fifty dollars and seventy-five cents, and the other May 29, 1880, for seven thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and seventy-five cents, and from the order refusing to vacate and set aside said judgments, and to grant a new trial. SULLIVAN, J.

Action on contract. The plaintiffs, W. W. Dodge & Co., on April 26, 1879, commenced the action in the 12th District Court against the defendants, W. B. Ridenour and Samuel Crozier, as copartners under the firm name of Ridenour & Crozier, to recover judgment against them; 1. On a promissory note executed in the name of the firm, San Francisco, October 28, 1878, payable on demand for four thousand five hundred dollars and interest at one per cent. per month; 2. Upon balance of account for money laid out, etc., amounting to nine hundred and seventy-three dollars and forty-nine cents; and 3. Upon an indebtedness of six hundred and eighty-five dollars for money loaned, etc., which note and indebtedness all accrued to and was assigned to plaintiffs by W. W. Dodge. Both defendants separately appeared and demurred to the complaint and their demurrers were overruled July 11, 1879, and ten days given each to answer. Ridenour filed no answer. Crozier, July 21, 1879, filed his answer, in which he admitted the partnership between himself and Ridenour, but alleged that it was confined to merchandising in the Territory of Arizona, and denied the making of the note, and all indebtedness to the plaintiffs therein or otherwise from himself or the firm of Ridenour & Crozier. On May 27, 1880, Mr. M. M. Estee appearing for plaintiff, no one appearing for the defendants, the case was tried by the Court and judgment ordered in favor of plaintiffs against the defendants for six thousand five hundred and fifty dollars and seventy-five cents, and on May 29, 1880, an order reciting a mistake in the calculation of interest as made on the twenty-seventh of May was made, that judgment be entered for plaintiffs against defendants for seven thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and seventy-five cents and costs. Judgment was entered in accordance therewith.

The defendant Crozier on July 14, 1880, gave notice of motion as follows: 1. To relieve him, the said Samuel Crozier, from the judgment rendered in the above entitled action on May 27, 1880, for six thousand five hundred and fifty dollars and seventy-five cents. 2. To relieve him, the said Samuel Crozier, from the judgment rendered in the above entitled action on May 29, 1880, for seven thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and seventy-five cents. 3. To set aside and vacate both of the said judgments, as to the said Samuel Crozier, and award him a new trial of the said action.

The said motion will rest upon the following and other grounds: The said Crozier was prevented from having a fair trial by reason that the setting of the said clause for hearing on May 27, 1880, was irregular, because that day was within vacation, and there was no written consent of parties that the cause might be tried in vacation filed in the above mentioned department, or elsewhere, as was required by a resolution to that effect, adopted and promulgated by the Judges of the said Superior Court about April 12, 1880. There was mistake, because said Crozier knew nothing to the contrary, and the conviction of his counsel was, that the said cause would not be tried until after July 6, 1880, when said vacation closed. There was inadvertence, because Crozier's counsel inferred, from the conduct of plaintiffs' counsel, that this defendant had until the end of vacation, at least, within which to take Ridenour's deposition. There was surprise, because said Crozier knew nothing to the contrary, and his counsel was under the conviction that the cause was postponed until after vacation, and that conviction continued until said counsel was informed that the first mentioned judgment had been entered. If there was neglect, it was excusable, because it was not to be presumed that in the face of the above mentioned resolution of the Judges, the cause would be taken up in vacation without the written consent of the parties litigant. Because, as to the judgment of May 29, 1880, there was no notice whatever, and the Court was without jurisdiction to render the same, and it is excessive.

Upon the hearing of the said motion, there will be used the record, pleadings, papers, minutes, etc., of, in, and pertaining to the above entitled action, and the affidavits and papers heretofore served and filed in the said action on said Crozier's motion of June 18, 1880, to be relieved from the said judgment of May 27, 1880.

The following affidavits were used upon the hearing:

SAMUEL CROZIER, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he is one of the defendants in an action pending in the Superior Court, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, wherein W. W. Dodge et al. are plaintiffs, and W. B. Ridenour and Samuel Crozier are defendants. That he resides in the County of Mohave, Territory of Arizona. That on the eleventh day of April, 1880, he received a communication from D. L. Smoot, Esq., of said City of San Francisco, who is his — affiant's — attorney in said action, notifying him that said action had been set down for trial on the twenty-first instant, and notifying him to be present at Court on that day with his witnesses; that he had not received any notification thereof before that time; that the said notification is so brief, that it is impossible for affiant to reach the said City of San Francisco with his witnesses in time for the said trial. That affiant and W. B. Ridenour, defendants in said action, are both witnesses material and necessary for affiant in his defense of said action; that both said witnesses reside in the Territory of Arizona; that the evidence of each of said witnesses is material for defendant's defense. That he will prove by said witnesses that W. B. Ridenour, one of the defendants, made and executed the promissory note upon which the said action is brought. That at the time of said Ridenour making and delivering said notes, affiant and he were partners, doing business as merchants only, in the County of Mohave, Territory of Arizona. That said note was made and delivered by said Ridenour for certain mining stock, purchased by him at that time. That the said Ridenour had no authority, either by the terms of their copartnership, or by the usages of their business, or by any other authority, direct or implied, to give the said promissory note in the firm name of Ridenour & Crozier, or to purchase any mining stock whatever for or on account of the said partnership. But, on the contrary, it had before, and at the time of the making of the said note, been specifically agreed and understood by and between affiant and said Ridenour, that said partnership should not purchase any mining stock whatever, or deal in anything outside the proper and legitimate business of merchandising. That affiant has not, in any way, ever ratified or acquiesced in the making of said note or purchase of said stock and said partnership; nor has affiant ever accepted or received said stock, or any of the benefits thereof in any way. That said facts can not be proven by any other witnesses.

This affidavit is not made for delay merely, but that justice may be done in the premises; and affiant verily believes that if this cause be continued for this term of this Court, he will be able to be present in person to testify in said action, and will be able to have the deposition of the said W. B. Ridenour to offer in evidence at that time. And affiant further says, that he can not be present at the day set for the trial of this cause, because he can not now leave his family, for the reason that his wife has but recently been confined and is now in a delicate state of health, requiring the personal care and attention of affiant. And further, affiant saith not.

D. L. Smoor, having been duly sworn, April 27, 1880, deposes as follows: That he is the attorney of Samuel Crozier, one of the defendants in the above entitled action. That from the sworn answer of said Crozier, the oral statements of said Crozier and Ridenour, and documents shown me by said Ridenour, I am convinced that the said Crozier has a good and substantial defense on the merits to the said action. That said Ridenour informed affiant that he had employed Messrs. Garber & Thornton to defend the said action for him; and said Ridenour gave affiant to understand that he would attend the trial and testify, and that his testimony would exonerate the said Crozier. That the said Ridenour and Crozier are living in Arizona Territory. That when the trial of the said action was fixed for April 21, 1880, affiant was under the impression that the said Ridenour would attend promptly on notification. That affiant wrote promptly to said Crozier, but the letter did not reach him until a week or so before the twenty-first; and instead of the said Crozier attending Court as requested, he is prevented by sickness in his family; and instead of the said Ridenour attending, as it was understood he would, he now, as affiant is informed, abandons the defense of the said action, and refuses to come forward and testify in behalf of his co-defendant, Crozier. That the evidence of said Ridenour is material and indispensable to the defense of said Crozier; that the same facts can not be proved by any other person who is not a party to the action; that the trial, so far as said Crozier is concerned, can not safely proceed without the testimony of the said Ridenour; and that since hearing of said Ridenour's abandonment of the said defense and his refusal to appear at the trial and testify, neither the affiant nor the said Crozier has had time to prepare for and have the deposition of the said Ridenour taken in the said Territory of Arizona, where he resides and now is.

D. L. SMOOT, having been duly sworn, June 9, 1880, deposes and says: That he is the only attorney of Samuel Crozier, one of the defendants in the above entitled action. That from the sworn answer of said Crozier filed in said action, from the oral statements of said Crozier and his co-defendant, W. B. Ridenour, made to affiant, and from documents shown to affiant by said Ridenour, and in the possession of said Ridenour, affiant is convinced that the said Crozier has a good and substantial defense on the merits to the said action. That the trial of the said action was fixed for April 21, 1880. That finding that the said Crozier, because of sickness in his family, at his home in Arizona Territory, could not attend on April 21st, and that said Ridenour, after promising to attend as a witness on behalf of said Crozier, refused to leave his home in Arizona Territory and keep his promise, this affiant was prepared with affidavits setting forth good and sufficient grounds for a postponement of the trial of the said action, for a length of time sufficient to enable him to sue out a commission and take the other necessary steps to have the deposition of the said Ridenour taken in Arizona. That on April 21st, when the said action was called, and answered "ready" on behalf of the plaintiffs, this affiant stated that he was not ready on behalf of said Crozier, and was prepared, by affidavits and otherwise, to move for a postponement, and exhibit grounds sufficient to obtain the same. That because of business undisposed of, and which was ahead of the said action, the Court directed the motion for a postponement to abide until the business ahead of the said action was disposed of and the action reached. That day after day affiant watched the business of the Court, prepared to make the said motion. That on Thursday, April 29, 1880, while affiant was engaged in Department One of the Superior Court, in the trial of the case of J. N. Wood v. The Maryland Consolidated Gold and Silver Mining Company, he was notified that said action of Dodge et al. v. Ridenour & Crozier was called in Department Two. That thereupon, affiant, with the permission of the Judge of Department One, went into Department Two and stated the ground upon which he moved for a postponement of the case. The affidavits which affiant had were not read or filed: the motion was not resisted, and the hearing of the case, according to the understanding of affiant, was postponed until after vacation. That affiant immediately returned to Department One, and resumed the trial of the case of Wood v. Maryland Consolidated Gold and Silver Mining Company. That pending the application for postponement, Mr. Wilson, one of the counsel representing Dodge et al., said to affiant, substantially, that if the postponement was granted, the counsel for Dodge et al. would facilitate the taking of the deposition, by waiving notice of application for order directing commission to issue, etc. That on May 20th, or 21st, affiant prepared an order for the Judge to sign, awarding the commission, and attached thereto, for plaintiffs' counsel to sign, a written waiver of notice. That on the last named day, affiant sent said order to plaintiffs' counsel for inspection, with the request that the written waiver should be signed. That Mr. Wilson declined to sign the waiver, until he saw the interrogatories. That upon this report being made to affiant, he made preparations to frame and write out the interrogatories which he wished propounded to said Ridenour. That on May 27, 1880, upon affiant's arrival at his office, at half past ten o'clock A. M., he was informed by the clerk that a judgment by default had been entered that morning by the Court against Ridenour & Crozier, upon the application of plaintiffs' counsel. That affiant was greatly surprised, and immediately went to Department Two and found that a recess had been taken until two P. M. of that day; and he also found, and learned for the first time, that a minute was on the clerk's book, as of April 29, 1880, setting the cause for trial on May 27, 1880. Of this order, neither the affiant nor his client, Crozier, had any knowledge or notice whatever, nor did the plaintiffs' counsel, at the time he demanded to have the interrogatories before signing the waiver, or at any other time, mention anything about the said cause being set for May 27th. That at two P. M., on May 27th, when Department Two re-opened, this affiant called the attention of the Court to the facts of this matter, and asked that the said judgment be vacated without delay, and be made to stand as if never rendered. But the Court, deeming it proper that the plaintiffs should be present, directed that notice of the motion be given in the usual way and a stay of proceedings entered.

And this affiant further deposes and says: That about April 12, 1880, the Judges of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco resolved upon a vacation, beginning April 30th and ending July 5, 1880; and further resolved, that no causes should be heard in either of the first eight departments during that time, except by written consent filed in the department. That this determination was published in "The Daily Law Journal" on April 12, 1880, and became and was generally known to others as well as affiant, long prior to April 29th. That the postponement aforesaid was granted on the day before said vacation commenced, and that with the said action of the superior Judges in mind, this affiant understood and believed, and never thought otherwise than that the postponement extended to July 5th. That no written consent was given and filed by this affiant, or any one else, that the said cause should be taken up on May 27th, or any other day during said vacation; nor was he ever asked by plaintiffs' counsel, or any one else, to enter into or waive such written consent. That the rendering of the said judgment, and the action of the plaintiffs herein, is a great surprise to affiant and his client, and a great injury to the said Crozier.

The affidavits alluded to are hereto attached — they are the affidavit of Samuel Crozier, dated April 12, 1880, and the affidavit of D. L. Smoot, dated April 27, 1880.

RAMON E. WILSON, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is now, and for more than five years last past has been, a regularly licensed attorney and counselor at law. That he is an assistant in the law firm of Estee & Boalt, the attorneys for the plaintiffs in the above entitled action, and was such at all the times hereinafter mentioned. That he has principally had the charge of and the management of the above entitled cause, representing the said law firm of Estee & Boalt. That thereafter, to wit, on or about the — day of January, 1880, said cause was set for trial on Wednesday, the thirty-first day of March, 1880. That on said last mentioned day, plaintiffs, with their counsel, appeared and answered ready upon the calling of the case. That the defendant Crozier was not ready, and asked for a continuance. That thereupon, and against the objections of plaintiffs, the Court ordered a continuance, and set the cause specially for trial on the twenty-first day of April, 1880 — and, as affiant then understood, peremptorily. That the defendant then and there waived a jury trial. That on the twenty-first day of April, 1880, the plaintiffs and their counsel again appeared in Court, and upon the calling of the case answered ready. That when the same was reached on the day-calendar, neither defendant nor his counsel were present; and thereupon, at the suggestion of affiant, the Court directed the Sheriff to call Mr. Smoot, defendant's counsel. After some delay, Mr. Smoot appeared, and stated that the defendant was not ready to proceed with the trial, for the reason that his client's family was sick and that he had not been able to secure the attendance of the co-defendant, Ridenour. That thereupon, and against the objections of the plaintiffs, the Court ordered another continuance, and set said cause for trial on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, at the suggestion and consent of the defendant Crozier, made in open Court, through his counsel, D. L. Smoot, Esq.; but said order was made upon the express agreement of both parties — made in open Court and entered in the minutes — that said cause was peremptorily set for said last mentioned day, and to be tried on said day. That to that end, counsel for defendant asked plaintiffs, through affiant, to waive the statutory notice, so that he might get a commission to take the testimony of the defendant Ridenour without delay; that plaintiffs then and there, in open Court, waived said notice. That at that time the question was discussed, between Court and counsel, as to whether defendant would have time between the said day and the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, to secure said deposition, and the Court said that plaintiffs having waived the notice, defendant would have ample time. At the same time the question of the summer vacation was discussed, and the Court remarked that it would set no cases in June, as it desired a vacation. Counsel for defendant further said that he would immediately prepare interrogatories and submit them to affiant. That neither affiant nor said firm of Estee & Boalt heard from Mr. Smoot, defendant's counsel, relative to said case, until the twenty-first day of May, 1880, when the office-boy of said Mr. Smoot, or some one representing him, called at the office of affiant, and said that Col. Smoot had sent him to affiant with a stipulation that a commission might issue in the case of Dodge v. Ridenour (meaning the above entitled cause), to take a deposition. Affiant replied that such stipulation had already been made in open Court, and to tell the colonel (Mr. Smoot meaning) to prepare his interrogatories, and that affiant would sign it when the interrogatories were settled. That said Mr. Smoot has never submitted any interrogatories in said cause to affiant, or to said Estee & Boalt. That affiant and said Estee & Boalt were at all times ready and willing to facilitate the taking of said deposition. That on said twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, plaintiffs and their counsel appeared in Court, and upon the calling of the calendar answered ready to said cause—and when the same was regularly reached on the calendar, was tried. Affiant denies that the said Mr. Smoot did not know of the order of the Court setting said cause for trial on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, for the reason that he was present in Court at the time the same was made and consented to it.

Affiant denies that plaintiffs did not contest defendant's motion for a continuance on said twenty-ninth day of April, 1880; but, on the contrary, affiant says that plaintiffs were at all times ready to proceed with the trial, and objected to every motion for continuance made by the defendant.

WALTER DICKINS, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is now, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was, a bookkeeper of the plaintiffs. That he has always been present in Court when the above entitled cause has been called for trial, representing the plaintiffs. That plaintiffs have at all times been ready for trial, and have always objected to any and every continuance. That he was present in the court-room on the twenty-ninth day of April, 1880, when said cause was reached and called for trial. That Mr. R. E. Wilson was present as counsel, representing the plaintiffs, and D. L. Smoot, Esq., was present, representing the defendant Crozier. That Mr. Smoot moved for a continuance, which motion Mr. Wilson opposed. That thereupon the Court ordered a continuance, and by consent of both parties said cause was specially and peremptorily set for the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880. That the Court then and there remarked that the case must be tried on that day, and that Mr. Smoot must secure his testimony by that time. Mr. Smoot was present when said cause was set for the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, and in open Court consented to the same.

W. B. SMITH, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is now, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was, the Court-room Clerk of Department Two of the Superior Court, to which Court the above entitled cause was assigned. That the above entitled cause was specially set in said Court for the thirty-first day of March, 1880. That on said day, on motion of defendant's counsel, said cause was continued, and again specially set for the twenty-first day of April, 1880. That on said last mentioned day, said cause was answered ready by the plaintiffs. That subsequently, on the twenty-ninth day of April, 1880, when said cause was regularly reached on the day-calendar, the defendant announced that he was not ready, for the reason that he had not been able to secure the attendance of the defendant, W. B. Ridenour, and on account of sickness in the family of defendant Crozier. That thereupon the Court ordered a continuance, and set said cause peremptorily for the twenty-seventh day of May, 1880, with the understanding that defendant's counsel should secure the deposition of his absent witnesses; and to that end, plaintiffs' counsel waived, in open Court, the statutory notice, and consented that a commission might issue. That Mr. R. E. Wilson represented the plaintiffs, and Mr. D. L. Smoot represented the defendant; that Mr. Smoot was present when said cause was so peremptorily set. That affiant entered said order in his minutes.

M. J. O'NEILL, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is now, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was, time of making them, touching the matters therein mentioned.

The Court below denied the motion.

D. L. Smoot, for Appellant.

As to Crozier, the record shows a judgment obtained through accident, mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. Section 473 declares that "The Court may, in furtherance of justice * * * relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Dr. Worcester defines "inadvertence" to be, among other things, an "oversight," an "involuntary accident," "the effect of inattention." He defines mistake to be, among other things, a "slip," a "blunder."

An examination of the facts in the light of the statute and these definitions will show a case within both the letter and spirit of the remedy. On April 29th, Crozier's counsel, whilst engaged in the trial of another cause before another Judge, was required to appear and make response as to this. Being physically unable to try two cases at the same time, and absolutely unable to establish the defense without Ridenour's deposition, a postponement was asked. The case was set down for May 27, 1880. Ridenour's counsel returned to the department from which he had been hurried and resumed the trial therein depending. Vacation set in the day following, viz., April 30th. The order of the court fixing the trial for May 27th passed entirely from the memory of Crozier's counsel; and with the resolution of the Judges as to vacation trials in mind, he got under the impression that this case would not come up until the close of vacation in July. While under this impression, viz., on May 21st, six days before the time of trial, he sent to the plaintiffs' counsel for a waiver of notice, the order to take Ridenour's deposition. The plaintiffs' counsel acted as if the trial was not imminent; as if there was ample time to take the deposition, and as if the case would not be reached before the close of vacation, when they expressed themselves as willing to sign the waiver upon the presentation of the interrogatories: Had there been a doubt in the mind of Crozier's counsel as to the case going over until after vacation, this conduct of the plaintiffs' counsel would have removed it. The lapse of memory as to the day set for trial was an accident — an event "without design" and against the interests of the defendant.

Concluding from the answer of the plaintiffs' counsel, and the resolution of the Judges, that the case would not be tried until after vacation was a mistake — a "slip," a "blunder." Falling into the conviction that Crozier had until July 6th within which to procure Ridenour's deposition was an inadvertence — an "oversight," an "involuntary accident," an "effect of inattention."

The taking of the judgment on May 27th, after the plaintiffs' counsel had indicated by their answer on May 21st, that an effort to get Ridenour's deposition would not be in vain, was a surprise; because the conduct of the plaintiffs' counsel implied that no trial would take place within the time necessary to procure the deposition from Arizona. Relying upon the implication involved in the answer of plaintiffs' counsel was, under the circumstances, excusable neglect.

In the case of Mosby v. Haskins et al., 4 Hen. & Munf. 427, relief was granted where the party had made the mistake of supposing that the summons served upon him was process in a pending chancery suit, instead of primal process in an action at law. In the case of Howe v. Independence Co., 29 Cal. 72, V. E. Howard, the attorney of the moving party, like Crozier's counsel, was District Attorney, and much pressed by his civil and public business. Through inadvertence he got under the impression that an answer had been filed. Judgment by default was taken, but subsequently set aside upon an exhibition of merits and the foregoing facts. The order was affirmed on appeal. In Francis v. Cox, 33 Cal. 323, counsel for the defense knew that the summons was served on the eleventh, but in the midst of his professional cares fell into the conviction that the time to answer did not expire until the twenty-third. Upon a showing of these facts and merits an order vacating the default was made in the Court below and affirmed on appeal. At page 325 the Court says: "The judgment was opened on affidavits showing, substantially, that the failure to answer was by mistake." This mistake and the one at bar are strikingly alike — both being errors arising from lapse of memory.

In the case of McKinley v. Tuttle, 34 Cal. 235, relief was granted by Judge S. B. McKee, and sustained by the Supreme Court, where the moving defendants got under the impression that W. H. L. Barnes had been retained to defend them. The order of Judge McKee speaks of it as "a mutual and honest mistake on the part of both of them (counsel and clients) as to the retainer of the said Barnes as attorney for them in the action." The plaintiffs had nothing to do with this mistake, and it rises no higher than the plane of inadvertence. The case at bar is a stronger one than this, as will appear upon comparison.

In Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. R. Co., 41 Cal. 17, the Court, at page 20, says: "Applications of this character are addressed to the discretion — the legal discretion — of the Court in which the default has occurred, and should be disposed of by it as substantial justice may seem to require. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts, for perhaps no two cases will be found to present the same circumstances for consideration. As a general rule, however, in cases where, as here, the application is made so immediately after default entered as that no considerable delay to the plaintiff is to be occasioned by permitting a defense on the merits, the Court ought to incline to relieve. The exercise of the mere discretion of the Court ought to tend in a reasonable degree, at least, to bring about a judgment on the very merits of the case, and where the circumstances are such as to lead the Court to hesitate upon the motion to open the default, it is better as a general rule that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the application." Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. R. Co. shows that the application was made on the day the default was entered, and that the only ground of the motion was that the defendant's secretary had been misled by a "printed sheet" as to the time when the suit was commenced. The motion to set aside was granted and upon appeal affirmed.

Now the summons was served upon the Secretary, and nobody better than he knew when it was served, and with the summons in his hand he needed no other and could have gotten no better information as to when the defense should be made. The information from the "printed sheet" as to when the suit was commenced furnished no light whatever as to when default would be taken, and yet the Court above set the judgment aside and the Court above declared that it was right so to do. In the case on hand, an oral motion was made to set aside the judgment on the very day it was rendered, and the grounds upon which this written motion rests are far stronger than those in the last case cited.

In Santa Barbara Live Stock and Farming Co. v. Thompson & Hall, 46 Cal. 63, the default was set aside, and the ruling was sustained as to Hall upon the sole ground that he relied upon Thompson's promises to see him harmless in the litigation. In Ryan v. Mooney et al., 49 id. 33, the judgment was set aside upon the sole ground that the case was placed on the calendar after defendant's attorney had examined the calendar and left the court-room. In the case of Reidy v. Scott, 53 id. 69, the sheriff returned that the summons was served as to Scott on April 25th. Scott told his attorney that the service was on April 26th. Answer not having been filed within ten days after April 25th, judgment by default was entered. A motion to set aside was made and supported by the affidavits of Scott and his counsel. Scott in his affidavit stated that he was under the belief that he had been summoned on the twenty-sixth. The Court below refused to set aside the judgment, but the Court above reversed the ruling and remanded the cause, saying: "We are satisfied that, under the views expressed in Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. Co., 41 Cal. 17, the Court should have granted the motion to open the default." It is for such relief in the case at bar that we hopefully petition. In the case of Walsh v. Hutchings et al., 6 P. C. L. J. 592, an order setting aside a default where the defendant had neglected to file an answer in time was sustained, though a doubt existed as to the neglect being excusable. The Court was materially influenced by the merits of the defense and the views expressed in Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. Co.

The plaintiffs' counsel cite in their brief the case of Coleman v. Rankin, 37 Cal. 248, and make it the occasion of an ungenerous assault upon a brother lawyer's chances of professional success. In the case at bar there was an obliteration of memory — a misfortune that may overtake even the plaintiff's counsel. It was not a negligence, a carelessness, or a lack of diligence. It was a misfortune, in itself burdensome enough without being stigmatized as "negligence, carelessness, and lack of diligence." Against the faults of memory no man is perfectly secure. The black screen of oblivion stands ready at the subtle touch of countless forces to obscure that mirror of the mind called memory, at any time. In Coleman v. Rankin there was not a lapse of memory, but a pure and simple neglect to employ counsel and make defense within ten days. And that distinguishes the case of Coleman v. Rankin, from the case at bar, and the cases supra of Howe v. Independence Co.; Francis v. Cox; McKinley v. Tuttle; Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. R. Co., and Reidy v. Scott.

View the case at bar as we may, the fact stands prominently forth that there was a lapse of memory, and that the plaintiffs' counsel had it in their power to correct it, but they did it not — preferring, it would seem, a judgment by default, with all its infirmities, to a risk of a trial upon the merits. The moral needs no finger-board. And now looking back to the remarks of the Court in Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. R. Co., it is respectfully and earnestly urged that this is one of those cases in which the doubt, if any, should be resolved in favor of giving Samuel Crozier a fair chance to show that he is in no wise liable for the debts set up in the complaint, and that his name and credit have been used without his authority, express or implied; and that he has derived no benefit whatever, proximate or remote, from the unauthorized transactions.

Estee & Boalt, for Respondents.

We waited nearly a whole year for the trial of this cause; three times we submitted to a continuance of it, on defendant's application; finally, when it did come to trial, counsel was not present—it was tried in his absence; and now he asks for a new trial, on the sole ground that he forgot the case was set for trial on the day it was tried, when, by his own showing, had he been present he was not ready for trial, had not taken any testimony, and could not have shown good ground for a continuance. In a word, counsel asks this appellate Court to do for him what a Court of original jurisdiction, in the exercise of a wise discretion and knowing all the facts, refused to do. In addition to the cases cited in the brief on file, we beg to call the attention of the Court to the following:

In the case of Davison v. Heffron, 31 Vt. 689, counsel forgot the time of trial and neglected to attend. Upon motion to set aside the judgment the Court said, "It is not the business of the Courts to open anew a scene of litigation to relieve a party of his own gross carelessness. To hold that mere forgetfulness of the day of the Court was a good ground to set aside a judgment would be fraught with evil consequences, and we think does not come within the spirit of the law."

In the case of Babcock v. Brown, 25 Vt. 552, counsel forgot the day of the Court, and Bennet, J., delivering the opinion of the Court, held that the forgetfulness of the attorney was negligence, and his negligence must be regarded as the negligence of the party, and refused to set aside the judgment. In Jones v. Leech, 46 Iowa, 186, defendant sought to have a judgment vacated on the ground, among others, that the attorney he had employed had failed to appear and attend at the trial. The Court held, "The law regards the neglect of an attorney as the client's own neglect, and will give no relief from the consequences thereof." (See cases cited.) In State of Iowa v. Elgin, 11 id. 218, the Court held that forgetfulness of counsel was no excuse.

In Field v. Matson, 8 Mo. 686, it was held that a judgment by default will not be set aside on account of the mistake or negligence of the defendant's attorney. No distinction is made between the negligence of the party and the negligence of his attorney. In this Court in the case of Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423, the following principle was laid down: "Orders like the present (setting aside judgment) in legal parlance rest very much in the discretion of the Court below, and will not be disturbed by this Court unless we are satisfied that the order is so plainly erroneous as to amount to an abuse of discretion." This same principle was laid down in the following cases: Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 445;

Haight v. Green, 19 id. 113; Mulholland v. Heyneman, id. 605; Barrett v. Graham, id. 632; Woodward v. Backus, 20 id. 137; People v. O'Connell, 23 id. 281; Howe v. Independent Con. G. & S. Mining Co., 29 id. 72; Coleman v. Rankin, 37 id. 249. None of these cases have ever been reversed. The case of Watson v. S. F. & H. B. R. R. Co., 41 Cal. 17, cited by respondent and quoted from at some length by appellant, in no wise modifies the principle above suggested. Very properly the court says: "Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts, for perhaps no two cases will be found to present the same circumstances for consideration." In the Watson case the parties were misled by an incorrect publication of the time of the commencement of the suit appearing in a printed sheet regularly issued and containing information of Court proceedings relied upon by the business community.

In the case at bar the defendant had three opportunities of trying his case, but at neither time from his own showing was he prepared to go to trial. It seems to us as though this case is materially different from the one where a default had been entered, for the reason that more than a year had elapsed between the time issue was joined and the trial, during which time the defendant could have been prepared for trial, but that during all of that time no effort in that direction was made. A very strong case in point is Ekel v. Swift, 47 Cal. 620.

The Court:

We think the Court below should have granted the motion to set aside the judgment. The case is within Section 473, C. C. P. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings with instructions, that a new trial be granted.

[No. 8,432.—Department Two.]

December 5, 1882.

EVERETT PIERCE v. A. SCHADEN ET AL.

VERDICT AS TO MATTERS NOT IN ISSUE—SURPLUSAGE—MOTION FOR JUDGMENT IN AMOUNT EXCEEDING VERDICT.—Action against indorsers to recover four hundred and sixty-six dollars and thirty-seven cents, and interest due on a promissory note, the execution of which was admitted. Under the pleadings the only issues for the jury were as to presentation, demand, refusal to pay, and notice. The jury returned a verdict in the following form: "We, the jury in the above entitled cause, find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at the sum of two hundred and ninety-four dollars and fifty cents." The plaintiff moved for judgment for the amount of the note and interest, which motion was denied, and judgment was entered for the amount named in the verdict.

Held: The plaintiff was entitled to his motion. The jury had nothing to do with matters not in issue, and a verdict referring to such matters is, so far, surplusage. So far as the verdict related to matters in issue, it was in favor of plaintiff. The Court should have computed the amount due on the note for principal and interest, and rendered judgment accordingly.

APPEAL by plaintiff from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento. DENSON, J.

Action on promissory note. The note was given for the sum of five hundred dollars, with interest at one and one fourth per cent. per month, from February 24, 1876, until paid. The complaint admitted the payment of the interest to May 24, 1876, and also a payment of two hundred and five dollars and fifty cents, on September 10, 1878. The prayer of the complaint was for judgment for the sum of four hundred and sixty-six dollars and thirty-seven cents, and interest thereon, from September 10, 1878, according to the terms of the note, and for costs. The amount claimed at the time to be due and for which the plaintiff moved the Court to give judgment was the sum of seven hundred and ten dollars. After the denial of his motion plaintiff filed a bill of exceptions and took this appeal. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

L. S. Taylor, for Appellant.

The verdict of the jury on matters not in issue is mere surplusage, and should be disregarded. (O'Brien v. Palmer, 49 Ill. 74; Austin v. Jones, Gilm. (Va.) 356-7; Vin. Abr. 736; Tevis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 127; Fitzpatrick v. Himmelmann, 48 id. 588; Benedict v. Bray, 2 id. 254; 4 B. Monroe (Ky.), 6; Proffatt on Jury Trial, § 445; C. C. P., § 656; Watson v. Damon, 54 Cal. 278; McLaughlin v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 220.)

Freeman & Bates, for Respondent Schaden.

The only point made by the plaintiff is that the verdict was upon a matter not in issue, and should be disregarded. But there were three questions in issue, viz.: whether the note was presented and payment of the whole or any part demanded; whether payment of the whole or any part was ever refused by Gardener, and whether defendant had notice of any presentment, demand, or refusal. Under these issues it might have appeared, either from plaintiff's or defendants' evidence, that payment of a part only of the note had been demanded, or that plaintiff's notice of dishonor to defendants had stated that only a part of the note remained unpaid, or that plaintiff had notified defendants that he should look to them for the payment of some sum less than two hundred and ninety-four dollars and fifty cents. In either of these cases judgment could have gone for plaintiff only for the amount for which he demanded payment, or for the amount which he notified defendants remained unpaid. Or it may be that, at the trial, plaintiff consented to have payments allowed which were made pendente lite or otherwise, notwithstanding they were not pleaded. If such evidence had been offered or such consent given, it would not appear in the judgment roll. The verdict of the jury ought to be presumed to be right, as long as the plaintiff does not choose to attack it by any statement of the evidence or proceedings. It may be urged that because the jury found for the plaintiff as to part, it ought to be deemed to have found for him as to the whole. With like force it may be said that the jury found for defendants as to part of the claim, and therefore it must be that they found there was no demand, notice, etc., for otherwise their finding should have been for the whole. The defendants might as well move for a judgment wholly exon-erating them, as for the plaintiff to move for a judgment for the whole sum claimed by him.

The amount of recovery must always be found by the jury, and there is no authority for judgment for any other amount. (C. C. P., § 626; Watson v. Damon, 54 Cal. 278.)

It is evident that the jury did not intend to find a verdict for seven hundred and ten dollars, and it is probable that rather than do so they would have found for the defendant. Neither party has considered it safe to attack the finding, nor to move for a new trial. This Court ought not to assume the province of the jury and direct judgment for seven hundred and ten dollars. Neither ought this Court to direct a new trial, for that has not been sought by either party.

The Court:

This was an action against indorsers to recover the amount due for the principal and interest of a promissory note. The answer denied the presentation of the note to the maker, the demand of payment, the refusal to pay, and notice of presentation, demand, and refusal. There was no denial of the execution or indorsement of the note, and no plea of payment. There was, therefore, no issue to go to the jury except as to presentation, demand, refusal to pay, and notice. The jury returned a verdict in the following form: "We, the jury in the above entitled cause, find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at the sum of two hundred and ninety-four dollars and fifty cents." The plaintiff moved for judgment for the amount of the note and interest, which motion was denied, and judgment was entered for the amount named in the verdict. The plaintiff was entitled to his motion. The jury had nothing to do with matters not in issue, and a verdict referring to such matters is, so far, surplusage. So far as the verdict related to matters in issue, it was in favor of plaintiff. The Court should have computed the amount due on the note for principal and interest, and rendered judgment accordingly.

Judgment vacated and cause remanded, with instructions to make computation and render judgment in accordance with this opinion.

R. TIERNAN v. HIS CREDITORS.

ESTIMATE OF VALUE IN DECLARATION OF HOMESTEAD.—Appeal by creditor from an order in insolvent proceedings setting apart a homestead to the insolvent. In the declaration of homestead, the value of the premises was stated to be eight thousand dollars.

Held: On the authority of Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 10 P. C. L. J. 411, the objection to the order on this ground can not be maintained.

DOUBLE-TENEMENT HOUSE AS A HOMESTEAD.—The premises consisted of a lot of land in San Francisco, thirty-five feet in width and one hundred and twenty-two and one half feet in depth, which with the improvements were of the value of eight thousand dollars. Upon the land was a double house intended for two families. The insolvent never occupied more than the southerly half of the same—the other half has always been and is occupied by his tenants. The double house has two distinct entrances, and there is no connection between the two tenements by which a person can go, within, from one house to the other.

Held: The Court erred in setting apart as a homestead that portion of the premises not occupied by the insolvent.

OBJECTION TO BE MADE IN COURT BELOW.—Objection by the insolvent to the right of creditors to contest the setting apart of a homestead to him on the ground that they had not proved their claims, must be made in the Court below; if not, it is too late to raise the objection in the Supreme Court.

MORTGAGE ON HOMESTEAD OF INSOLVENT.—At the time the homestead was set apart by the Court below to the insolvent the property was incumbered by a mortgage to the German Savings and Loan Society of San Francisco, upon which there was due the sum of three thousand dollars. The Court in the order setting apart the homestead found its value to be not more than five thousand dollars exclusive of incumbrances thereon: Held: The existence of a mortgage on the premises in this case is no element in the ascertainment of the property to be set apart as a homestead or of its value.

APPEAL by contestants from an order of the Superior Court, of the City and County of San Francisco, setting apart a homestead to the insolvent debtor. HALSEY, J.

Proceeding in insolvency. On the twenty-seventh day of April, 1880, Richard Tiernan filed in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, his petition in insolvency, under the provisions of "An act for the relief of insolvent debtors and protection of creditors, approved May 4, 1852," and the Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto. On the eighth day of July, 1880, the said Richard Tiernan applied to the Court to exempt and set apart for the use and benefit of himself, the real property described in the declaration of homestead; which was made and filed by him for record March 1, 1880. Davis & Cowell, the appellants, who were creditors of said insolvent, filed their opposition to said petition upon the grounds that the premises asked to be set apart were of greater value than five thousand dollars; that the house upon the land claimed was a double tenement, one half only of which was occupied by Tiernan, and the other half was by him rented and occupied by his tenant when he filed his declaration and ever since, and there was a separate entrance to each tenement, and no means of communication between them; that the alleged declaration of homestead which Tiernan claimed to have filed on March 1, 1880, did not comply with the laws of the State providing for the making and recording of a homestead declaration. The matter was heard and tried upon affidavits, which were submitted without objection, and the homestead declaration of Tiernan. This declaration recites the cash value of the premises claimed, to be eight thousand dollars. An exception to the introduction of this declaration in evidence was reserved by the opposing creditors. The only evidence as to the character of the house upon the premises claimed as a homestead was the affidavit of Isaac E. Davis, which stated that it was a double house, intended for two families; that Tiernan never occupied but one half of it, and the other half had always been and then was occupied by a tenant of Tiernan; that the building had separate entrances, and there were no means of communication between the tenements inside.

In the petition of the insolvent for the order it was shown that the property was incumbered by a mortgage to the German Savings and Loan Society of the City and County of San Francisco, and that there was then due on the mortgage the sum of three thousand dollars. The Court granted the petition, and made an order setting apart the property claimed as a homestead. In its order the Court recited "that the property, together with the improvements thereon, is of the value of not more than five thousand dollars exclusive of incumbrances thereon." The contestants excepted to the order, and filed their bills of exceptions.

Pillsbury & Titus, for Appellants.

The pretended declaration of homestead stated the value of the premises claimed to be eight thousand dollars, and was fatally defective for that reason. (Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 10 P. C. L. J. 411; Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 616.) In no event was Tiernan entitled to hold as a homestead more than the half of the premises upon which he lived — the south half — and the Court erred in setting apart both tenements; actual residence in both tenements was essential to enable him to impress upon them the condition of a homestead. (Aucker v. McCoy, 56 Cal. 524; Estate of Henry Reck, Myrick's Pre. Rep. 59.)

John H. B. Wilkins, for Respondent.

The question of the validity of a declaration of homestead which states the value of the premises claimed to be eight thousand dollars, is before this Court in the case of Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank. The real property described in the declaration of homestead is a city lot thirty-five feet front by one hundred and twenty-two feet six inches deep; the building, and the only one, erected upon which is so constructed that it can be used as one dwelling, or as two tenements, and is covered by one roof; it is claimed, therefore, that only one half of the building is exempt — the half occupied by the insolvent at the time of filing his petition in insolvency. The homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this title provided. (Civil Code, § 1237.)

No limitations are imposed by the Legislature upon the use which shall be made of the homestead, nor does the owner forfeit the benefit of his exemption by devoting some portion of the building to another use than a mere residence of his family. (Thompson on Homesteads, § 137; Phelps v. Rooney, 9 Wis. 70; Smith v. Stewart, 13 Nev. 65; Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181; Ornbaum v. His Creditors, 10 P. C. L. J. 225.)

The Court:

This is an appeal from an order, in insolvent proceedings, setting apart a homestead to the insolvent.

1. The declaration of homestead stated the value of the premises to be eight thousand dollars. The objection to the order on this ground is disposed of by the opinion of this Court in Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 10 P. C. L. J. 411.

2. The premises consist of a lot or parcel of land thirty-five feet wide, fronting on Mission Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, by one hundred and twenty-two and a half feet deep, which, with the improvements, are of the value of eight thousand dollars. Upon the land is a double house, intended for two families; Tiernan never occupied more than the southerly half of the same—the other half has always been and is occupied by his tenants. The double house has two distinct entrances, and there is no connection between the two tenements by which a person can go, within, from one house to the other. Under such circumstances, the Court erred in setting apart that portion of the premises not occupied by Tiernan. "The homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated." (C. C., § 1237.) In this case, the claimant did not reside in the structure which was occupied by his tenants. The facts of this case are widely different from the case of a person residing in a building and renting a portion or portions of it to roomers or lodgers.

3. Objection is made to the creditors being heard in this matter, before they shall have proved their debts. It might be said that the petitioner himself, having put their names in his list of creditors, is estopped from making the objection; but it is enough to say that the matter was heard in the Court below without this objection being made, and it is too late to make it here for the first time.

4. The existence of a mortgage on the premises in this case is no element in the ascertainment of the property to be set apart as a homestead or of its value.

Order reversed and cause remanded for proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

ANNIE R. VALLEAU v. SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL — SETTLEMENT — MANDAMUS.—Mandamus to a Judge of a Superior Court to compel him to settle a statement on appeal to this Court. The proposed statement was made up of the Reporter's notes, taken at the trial and written out in long hand.

Held: This is not the proper manner in which a bill of exceptions or statement on appeal should be prepared, and the Court will not sanction such a practice. Writ denied.

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus to CHAS. HALSEY, Judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

Severance, Travers & Hornblower, for Plaintiff.

Geo. D. Shadbourne, for Defendant.

The Court:

This is an application for a writ of mandamus, to compel the respondent, who is a Judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, to settle a statement on appeal to this Court. Several reasons are assigned for the refusal of the Judge to settle the statement, only one of which will be noticed, as that is sufficient to sustain the respondent's action in the case.

The proposed statement is made up of the reporter's notes, taken at the trial and written out in long hand. This is not the proper manner in which a bill of exceptions, or statement on appeal, should be prepared, and we will not sanction such a practice. It has been justly condemned in several cases (People v. Getty, 49 Cal. 584; Caldwell v. Parks, 50 id. 502), and this case comes within the rule therein laid down.

Writ denied.

THE PEOPLE v. JAMES HOPE.

COMMITMENT — SETTING ASIDE INFORMATION.—People v. Smith, 59 Cal. 365, affirmed on these points.

BURGLARY — MISCONDUCT OF JURY.—The bare fact of a juror having visited during the trial, the premises where it was alleged that the defendant had committed the crime of burglary, is not sufficient ground for discharging the jury.

BURGLARY — INSTRUMENTS OF CRIME — EVIDENCE.—The defendant was charged with burglary for entering the house, room, shop, warehouse, store, and building of S., with intent then and there to commit larceny, and was convicted of attempting to commit the crime. It appeared that S. owned the building, and that he occupied the first floor as a banking office and rented the second and third floors to tenants; that in consequence of the discovery of supposed indications of a design on the part of some person or persons to force an opening into the vault of the bank located in said building, certain police officers had been stationed where they could readily detect any one entering the building on the night of the arrest of the defendant, and that the defendant entered the building and was arrested on the second floor in a closet; and from an inspection of the premises, it appeared that in a closet over the bank vault a trap-door about two feet wide and two and a half feet long had been sawed out of the floor and then fastened down with screws, so that it might be opened without making much, if any, noise; and under the trap-door and on top of the vault there was found a large quantity of burglar's tools and a hole in the vault of the depth of two feet; and other tools, of a similar character, were found in the defendant's trunk in a room occupied by him in San Francisco.

Held: The tools found in the excavation over the vault and also those found in the appellant's trunk were admissible in evidence.

Id.—Id.—Id.—The Court, over the objection of the defendant, permitted a witness to exhibit in the presence of the jury a cylindrical steel bar about half an inch in diameter and about eight inches long, which he (the witness) said he had made for the purpose of screwing upon it the said coupling or sockets, one of which was found in the hole over the bank vault and the other in the trunk of the defendant; but the bar referred to, had not previously been offered in evidence, and the counsel for the prosecution stated that they did not intend to offer it.

Held: The object of screwing "said coupling or sockets" upon the bar is not stated, nor to us apparent; still, in support of the correctness of the ruling of the Court below, we are bound to presume, unless the contrary appears, that the object was a legitimate one.

Id.—EVIDENCE.—A witness was permitted to testify over the objection of the defendant, that a short time prior to the date of the alleged offense the defendant called himself by an alias name. Held: The objection to the testimony was properly overruled.

Id.—INSTRUCTIONS.—It is not error for the Court to refuse an instruction which, in effect, it has already given or afterwards gives.

Id.—ID.—ATTEMPT.—The Court instructed the jury: "If the jury find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant did at the time charged in the information intend and attempt to enter the house, room, apartment, building, etc., described in the information, of said O. S., then in his occupancy, with the intent to commit larceny therein, and did some act to carry out said attempt, but was anticipated in his said attempt, and before the alleged entry was completed or consummated, and before said larcenous attempt was carried but, and was interrupted, prevented, and anticipated in said attempt, while in or about the act of carrying it out, by outside agencies, and against his will and consent, and if you find that he had not alone made preparations for said attempt, but was directly, at the time of said prevention, engaged in making movements towards consummating such an attempt, then, and in such case only, you can find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary in the first degree, if the attempt was made between sunset and sunrise; of burglary in the second degree if it were made between the hours of sunrise and sunset. * * * * If you find that he had not alone made preparations for said attempt, but was directly, at the time of said prevention, engaged in making movements toward consummating such an attempt, then, and in such case only, you can find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary."

Held: It is difficult to uphold such an instruction as this, and if the evidence in regard to the acts of the defendant was of a character to render it doubtful whether he was making preparations for an attempt to commit burglary, the difficulty would be greatly enhanced, if not quite insurmountable. As it is, the jury could not have been misled by the instruction to the prejudice of the defendant.

Id.—ID.—The Court instructed the jury: "If you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the stairs, hall-way, privy-room and water-closet, and closet under the stairs, spoken of in the evidence, were at the time of the alleged entry in the occupancy of S. named in the information, and that the defendant entered in and upon such occupancy, as charged in the information, with intent to commit larceny in any part of the house or building of said S., then in his occupancy, then it is your duty to find the defendant guilty." And on appeal it was urged, that the exception to this instruction should have been sustained on the ground that there was no internal communication between the part of the building entered and that in which it was alleged that the defendant intended to commit larceny."

Held: In order to justify the verdict, it is not necessary that the evidence should show that the defendant effected an entrance into any part of the building; proof of an attempt is sufficient; but, were it otherwise, there would be no difficulty in holding that an entrance effected through a trap-door leading from the second floor of the building to the vault located in the banking-office of S. would constitute an entry into the occupation of S.

Id.—ID.—ASSUMPTION OF FACT.—The instruction does not assume that S. was in the occupancy of any part of the building.

Id.—IN.—POSSESSION OF BURGLARS' TOOLS.—There was not error in the Court's refusing to give the instruction which it was asked to give in regard to the weight which the jury might attach to the circumstance of burglar's tools having been found in the defendant's possession at or about the time of the alleged commission of the crime with which he was charged. The instruction refused did not accord to the circumstance, when considered in connection with the other circumstances of the case, all the weight to which it was entitled.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. FREELON, J.

Barham & Coogan, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

The question presented by the first point in appellant's brief, as we view it, does not differ materially from that upon which this Court passed in People v. Smith, 59 Cal. 365, and we are satisfied with the views therein expressed.

We do not think that the bare fact of a juror having visited, during the trial, the premises where it was alleged that the defendant had committed the crime of burglary, was a sufficient ground for discharging the jury. From the facts before us we are unable to see how the case of the defendant could possibly have been prejudiced thereby.

For the purpose of proving that the defendant had burglariously entered the building described in the information, with the intent to commit larceny therein, witnesses were introduced by the prosecution, who testified in substance, that in consequence of the discovery of supposed indications of a design on the part of some person or persons to force an opening into the vault of the bank located in said building, certain police officers had been stationed where they could readily detect any one who should enter said building, on the night of the arrest of the defendant. One of said officers testified that about nine o'clock p. m., he saw the defendant and another person enter said building; and another officer, who was stationed inside of the building, testified that about the same time he heard parties coming up the stairs in said building, and soon afterwards he saw the defendant on the second floor of it inside a doorway leading to a closet, where he was arrested. This witness further testified that before he became aware of the entrance of any other persons than himself and two other officers, who had been stationed inside the building with him, he inspected the closets on the second floor and found that the doors of them were locked. But that after the entrance of persons other than himself and said officers, he found the door of one of the closets "sprung open, and behind the door close to the partition * * * a large sledge hammer wrapped in paper and also a handle wrapped in papers," which were not in the hall when the witness first inspected it. A further inspection of the premises revealed the following facts: In a closet over the bank vault a trap-door about two feet wide and two and a half feet long had been sawed out of the floor, and then fastened down with screws so that it might be opened without making much, if any, noise. On opening it the witnesses found beneath it and on the top of the vault a large quantity of tools, and a hole in the vault of the depth of two feet which had been made by the removal of bricks, which had been deposited between the walls of the room and the vault. The tools found on the vault were adapted to the kind of work that was evidently being prosecuted upon it, and other tools of a similar character were found in the defendant's trunk in a room occupied by him in San Francisco. To the introduction of the tools found upon the vault and to those found in the defendant's trunk objections were made by the defendant's counsel. The objections were overruled and exceptions were taken, upon which we are asked to pass.

"The implements found in the excavation over the vault," say the appellant's counsel, "were improperly admitted in evidence because there was no evidence showing or tending to show that any of them belonged to or had been in the possession of the defendant, or were in any way connected with him." If such evidence was a necessary prerequisite to the introduction of the implements to which counsel refer, their exception was doubtless well taken. But these implements were not offered in evidence until the witness, by whom they were discovered, had testified, without objection, to the fact of having found implements of a similar description, "in the excavation over the vault," and if that testimony was admissible, of which we entertain no doubt, we are unable to conceive upon what ground the production, identification, and introduction of the implements themselves in evidence could be objectionable.

The objection to the admission in evidence of the implements found in the appellant's trunk is based on the ground that "they were not used in the perpetration of, or in the attempt to perpetrate, the offense charged." And that "if they were burglars' tools then they were evidence of another crime." There was evidence, however, which tended to prove that burglars' tools had been "used in the perpetration, or in the attempt to perpetrate, the offense charged," and that, coupled with the fact "that the defendant was in the vicinity at or about the time the burglary was committed" furnished a sufficient ground for the introduction of evidence to show "the possession by the defendant, at or about that time, of corresponding tools." (People v. Winters, 29 Cal. 658.)

Among the articles exhibited in the presence of the jury was "a cylindrical steel bar about half an inch in diameter and about eight inches long, which he (the witness exhibiting it) said he had made for the purpose of screwing upon it the said coupling or sockets"—one of which was found in the hole over the bank vault and the other in the trunk of the defendant. The Court, against the objection of the counsel of appellant, permitted the witness "to make experiments in the presence of the jury with the couplings or sockets attached to said cylindrical bar." The ground of the objection was that the cylindrical bar was not in evidence. It had not been formally offered in evidence, and the counsel for the prosecution stated that they did not intend to offer it in evidence. But the witness had exhibited it on the witness stand, and had stated that he had it made for the purpose of screwing "said coupling or sockets" upon it. The object of screwing "said coupling or sockets" upon it is not stated, nor to us apparent. Still, in support of the correctness of the ruling of the Court below we are bound to presume, unless the contrary appears, that the object was a legitimate one. Perhaps the use to which the coupling or sockets might be put, could be made more clear by screwing them upon said cylindrical bar.

It was not objected that the witness was not an expert, and we are unable to determine from anything before us that it was not necessary for him to use said cylindrical bar in order to elucidate and illustrate clearly the character of the "coupling or sockets" which had been admitted in evidence. It was not only proper, but of the first importance, that the prosecution should show that the implements found on the vault, and in the appellant's trunk, were "burglars' tools." And we must presume that it was for that or some other legitimate object that the witness was permitted to experiment with some of them in the presence of the jury, and that he was allowed to use an instrument of his own for the purpose of making the experiment better understood than it otherwise would be. The objection to the question put to the witness Aiken was properly overruled.

The Court refused to give the following instruction, which the defendant requested to have given to the jury: "Before you can find the defendant guilty of the charge in the information you must be entirely satisfied from the evidence that the defendant entered the house, room, shop, warehouse, store, or building of Peder Sather, in the City and County of San Francisco with the intent then and there to commit larceny;" but gave the following: "I instruct you that it is not sufficient for you to find that the defendant entered the house, room, shop, warehouse, store, or building of Peder Sather; but in addition to such entry you must find that he entered with the intent to commit larceny therein, and if you do not so find you should acquit the defendant."

We are unable to discover any satisfactory reason for the Court's refusal to give the instruction which it was requested to give. But since there is no substantial difference between that and the one which it gave, it is not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment. And this applies as well to the refusal to give the instructions numbered 21 and 23, which the defendant also asked to have given.

But the jury did not find the defendant guilty of burglary, and did find him guilty of an attempt to commit burglary only, so that he could not have been prejudiced by the refusal to give an instruction which contained a correct definition, not of the crime of which he was found guilty, but of a higher

one. Therefore, the material question is, whether the jury was correctly instructed as to what facts it was necessary to prove before the defendant could be found guilty of an attempt to commit burglary. And the instructions given upon that point is attacked by appellant's counsel, who insists that "it is clearly erroneous and was fatally prejudicial." It reads as follows:

"If the jury find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant did, at the time charged in the information, intend and attempt to enter the house, room, apartment, building, etc., described in the information of said Sather, then in his occupancy, with the intent to commit larceny therein, and did some act to carry out said attempt, but was anticipated in his said attempt, and before the alleged entry was completed or consummated, and before said larcenous attempt was carried out, and was interrupted, prevented, and anticipated in said attempt while in or about the act of carrying it out by outside agencies, and against his will and consent; and if you find that he had not alone made preparations for said attempt, but was directly at the time of said prevention engaged in making movements towards consummating such an attempt, then, and in such case only, you can find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary in the first degree if the attempt was made between sunset and sunrise; of burglary in the second degree if it were made between the hours of sunrise and sunset."

Of course the attempt, if any was made to commit burglary, consisted in doing some act or acts towards the commission of that crime, and if the defendant was "prevented and anticipated in said attempt," it would logically follow that he never made it. He might have made preparations for the commission of the crime without being guilty of an attempt to commit it. And if this instruction would be liable to lead the jury to confound a preparation to commit the crime with an attempt to commit it, it would be clearly erroneous. But the Court, in the following extract, attempted to point out the distinction between a preparation and an attempt: "And if you find that he had not alone made preparations for said attempt, but was directly, at the time of said prevention, engaged in making movements towards consummating such an attempt, then, and in such case only, you can find the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary." It is difficult to uphold such an instruction as this, and if the evidence in regard to the acts of the defendant was of a character to render it doubtful whether he was making preparations or an attempt to commit burglary, the difficulty would be greatly enhanced, if not quite insurmountable. As it is, we do not think that the jury could have been misled by that instruction to the prejudice of the appellant, although we would be much better satisfied, if the Court had given the instruction which the defendant's counsel asked to have given upon this point.

It was charged in the information that the defendant feloniously and burglariously entered "the house, room, shop, warehouse, store, and building of Peder Sather, then and there doing business under the firm name and style of Sather & Co., situated on the north-east corner of Montgomery and Commercial streets, in said city and county of San Francisco, and known as No. 526 Montgomery street."

The evidence tended to show that Sather owned that building and that he occupied the first floor as a banking office, and rented the second and third floors to tenants. We are unable to discover any conflict in the testimony of the witnesses upon the questions of ownership and occupancy.

One of the instructions excepted to by the defendant reads as follows: "If you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the stairs, hallway, privy-room, and water-closet, and closet under the stairs, spoken of in the evidence, were at the time of the alleged entry in the occupancy of Peder Sather, doing business as Sather & Co., named in the information, and that the defendant entered in and upon such occupancy as charged in the information, with intent to commit larceny in any part of the house or building of said Sather, then in his occupancy, then it is your duty to find the defendant guilty."

We are urged to sustain the exception to this instruction on the ground that there was no internal communication between the part of the building entered and that in which it was alleged that the defendant intended to commit larceny. But in order to justify the verdict rendered in this case it is not necessary that the evidence should show that the defendant effected an entrance into any part of the building. Proof of an attempt to enter with the intent to commit larceny is sufficient. But were it otherwise, we should find no difficulty in holding that an entrance effected through a trap-door leading from the second floor of the building, to the vault located in that part of the building occupied by Peder Sather as a banking office, would constitute "an entry in the occupancy of Peder Sather." The trap-door would constitute "some internal communication" between the closet on the second floor and the banking office on the first. We do not think that this instruction assumes that Sather was in the occupancy of any part of the building. Nor do we think that is assumed in another instruction which is excepted to on that ground alone.

Upon the question of what was or was not sufficient evidence to sustain the allegation in the information as to the occupancy of Peder Sather, we think that the instructions are as full, explicit, and accurate as the case required that they should be, and we think that there was no error in the Court's refusing to give the instructions which it was asked to give in regard to the weight which the jury might attach to the circumstance of burglars' tools having been found in the defendant's possession at or about the time of the alleged commission of the crime with which he was charged. The instructions asked and refused on that point did not accord to that circumstance, when considered in connection with other circumstances in the case, all the weight to which it was entitled.

Judgment and order affirmed.

EUGENE McCARTHY v. I. LOUPE.

BROKER'S EMPLOYMENT TO SELL REAL ESTATE.—To entitle a broker to recover commissions for effecting a sale of real estate, he must show that he was employed by or on behalf of the owner to make the sale.

IN.—USAGE.—It may be that, independent of the provisions of Section 1624 of the Civil Code, requiring such a contract to be in writing, the absence of an express contract might be supplied by proof of usage regulating transactions of that kind, but even before the Code proof of an express contract or of such usage was required.

UNDER CODE, SUCH EMPLOYMENT MUST BE IN WRITING.—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—EVIDENCE.—CONTRACT.—Since the Code, under the provisions of Section 1624, an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for a compensation or commission, can only be proved by the introduction of an instrument in writing. The plaintiff in this action failed to show any express contract, but claimed the right to recover what his services were reasonably worth, upon a promise implied by law.

Held: He could only recover upon an express contract, and therefore could not maintain this action.

NEW TRIAL, REASONS OF TRIAL COURT FOR GRANTING, NOT MATERIAL.—The Court below, on motion of defendant, granted a new trial, and assigned, as the ground upon which the motion was granted, error in the Court in its instruction to the jury.

Held: The order granting the new trial will be sustained, if it was properly granted on any other ground.

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco granting a new trial.
HUNT, J.

Action on contract. The complaint in this action, filed June 2, 1881, contains two counts. In the first count it is alleged: that on the first day of March, 1881, the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff that in consideration that he, the plaintiff, would devote his time, labor, and skill in finding and securing a purchaser for a lot of land then belonging to the said defendant, situated at the south-east corner of Market and Fremont streets, in said City and County, and being ninety-one feet eight inches on Market street, by a uniform depth of one hundred and thirty-seven feet six inches, at a price satisfactory to said defendant, the defendant would pay to the plaintiff therefor, the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars as a commission: that the plaintiff, thereupon, did, between said first day of March, 1881, and the twenty-sixth day of May, 1881, devote his time, labor, and skill, in and about the said business, and on, to wit, the twenty-sixth day of May, A. D. 1881, did find and secure a purchaser for said lot of land, to wit, one Claus Spreckels, at the price of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, and duly performed all the conditions of said agreement on his part to be performed; that said price was satisfactory to said defendant and said defendant thereupon sold the said lot of land to said Claus Spreckels, at said price; that plaintiff thereupon demanded of said defendant, said sum of thirty-five hundred dollars, but the said defendant refused to pay the same, or any part thereof, and the whole thereof is now due and payable from said defendant to the plaintiff.

In the second count it is alleged: That on, to wit, the twenty-sixth day of May, A. D. 1881, the said defendant was, and still is, justly indebted to the said plaintiff, in the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars, for the work, labor, and services of the said plaintiff theretofore, and between the first day of March, 1881, and said twenty-sixth day of May, 1881, rendered by said plaintiff, to and for said defendant at his special instance and request, in and about the finding and securing for said defendant, a purchaser, at a price satisfactory to said defendant, of the lot of land, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, on the south-east corner of Market and Fremont streets, and being ninety-one feet eight inches front on Market street, by a uniform depth of one hundred and thirty-seven and one half feet then owned by said defendant, and in consideration thereof, the said defendant then and there agreed to pay to the plaintiff, whatever the said services were reasonably worth, whenever he should be thereunto afterwards requested; that said services were reasonably worth the said sum of three thousand five hundred dollars, but though often requested to pay the same, the said defendant has refused and neglected to pay the same or any part thereof, and the whole thereof is now due and payable from said defendant to the plaintiff.

The answer of the defendant denied the making of any contract between the plaintiff and defendant, except that on the first day of March, 1881, the defendant authorized the plaintiff to sell the lot of land for one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, to the firm of Low & Montague; admits the sale by defendant himself to Spreckels of the land for the sum of forty thousand dollars; the conveyance by S. to defendant of another lot of land valued at fifty-five thousand dollars, and Spreckels' taking the defendant's lot subject to a mortgage then existing thereon, and denies that the plaintiff was in any way instrumental in making the trade with Spreckels, or that the defendant is in any way indebted to the plaintiff for any services whatever. The case was tried before a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff, in the sum of two thousand dollars, and judgment was given accordingly. The defendant moved for a new trial, on, among others, the following grounds: * * * Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; that the verdict is against law; errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendant.

The Court below granted the new trial, for the reason that the Court erred in giving one of its instructions to the jury. The plaintiff appealed.

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

The Code provides that "An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is "invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent." (C. C., § 1624.) It is not claimed that the agreement in this case or any note or memorandum thereof was in writing. But it is claimed that the plaintiff may, nevertheless, recover what his services were reasonably worth, upon a promise implied by law, by reason of the loss which he has sustained in rendering the service, and the benefit received by the defendant in accepting the same.

That there are cases in which the law will imply a promise to pay for services rendered by one person for another in the absence of any actual promise to pay therefor, can not be doubted. But no case has been brought to our attention in which it has been held where proof of employment is indispensable to a right to recover for services, that in the absence of such proof a recovery can be had. And to entitle a broker to recover commissions for effecting a sale of real estate, it is indispensable that he should show that he was employed by the owner (or on his behalf) to make the sale. (Pierce v. Thomas, 4 E. D. Smith, 354; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. Law, 328; Edwards on Factors, 144.)

But for the provision of the Code above cited it may be that the absence of an express contract might be supplied by proof of usage regulating transactions of this kind. (Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1; Burnett v. Bouch, 9 id. 620; Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438; Wisner v. Dillaway, 4 Metc. 221; Cook v. Welsh, 9 Allen, 350.) But it was held in Hinds v. Henry, supra, that a plaintiff in such a case could not recover under the common counts.

It would seem, therefore, that no recovery could have been had before the Code, without proof of an express contract or of a usage regulating such transactions. The law in such a case would never imply a contract. Since the Code, no express contract in a case like this can be of any avail unless in writing. This particular kind of contract can only be proved by the introduction of an instrument in writing. Therefore the plaintiff failed to prove an express contract, and it was upon an express contract alone that he was entitled to recover.

This is not the ground upon which the Court granted the motion for a new trial, but it is a ground upon which the respondent was entitled to have a new trial. Therefore we can not disturb the order granting it.

Order affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. THOMAS L. WESTLAKE.

HOMICIDE — JUSTIFICATION — THREATS.—On the trial of the defendant for murder, the Court instructed the jury: "Past threats or conduct of the deceased, how violent soever, will not excuse a homicide without sufficient present demonstration to authorize the belief that the deadly purpose then exists and the fear that it will then be executed." "The danger must be present, apparent, and imminent, and the killing must be done under a well-founded belief that it was absolutely necessary for the defendant to kill the deceased at that time to save himself from great bodily harm." Held: The instructions were correct.

Id.—ID.—CASE DISTINGUISHED.—The People v. Flahove, 58 Cal. 249, distinguished.

Id.—ID.—CASE CRITICISED.—The Court instructed the jury: "If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt, from the evidence, that the defendant killed the deceased, then to render said killing justifiable, it must appear that the defendant was wholly without fault imputable to him by law in bringing about or commencing the difficulty in which the mortal wound was given."

Held: The instruction is taken literally from the decision of the late Supreme Court in People v. Lamb, 17 Cal. 328, which has since been followed and approved by this Court in People v. Travis, 56 id. 254. It is true that in People v. Simons, 60 Cal. 72, the doctrine enunciated in those cases seems to have been questioned, but it was not questioned by a majority of the Judges who concurred in that decision, and the case is not entitled to be considered as an authoritative overruling of the former cases. It is not to be doubted that a person accused of crime may show in justification that although he brought upon himself an imminent danger, he, in the presence of that necessity, changed his mind and conduct and honestly endeavored to escape from it, but could not without striking the mortal blow. But that is not the present case. (SARGENT, J., dissenting.)

Id.—ID.—HYPOTHETICAL INSTRUCTION.—The Court, in effect, instructed the jury that if they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the facts and circumstances in the case, of the existence of the facts which he stated to them and which the evidence tended to prove, then the defendant would be guilty of murder or manslaughter, as they might determine.

Held: It is allowable for a Court to give a hypothetical instruction to the jury, provided the province of the jury be not invaded. No invasion took place in this instance. The jury were left entirely free in the exercise of their functions to find the facts stated to them, and were cautioned that the facts must be found by them from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.

Id.—RESERVED RULING AS TO THE ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.—Where the ruling upon an objection to a question is reserved by the Court, and the defendant does not afterwards ask for or make any effort to obtain a ruling upon the objection, or move to strike out the answer to the question, the ruling upon which has been reserved, the legal presumption is that a ruling has been waived.

Id.—MEDICAL EXPERT—EVIDENCE.—An objection was sustained to the following question, asked of a medical witness who had made a post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased: "State, from the examination you gave the wound, the course of the ball and the condition of the deceased, whether, if he were moving in a north-westerly direction, or standing facing a north-west direction, he could have received that wound from the pistol-shot fired by a person standing north of him and facing south."

Held: Whether the wound of which the witness died could have been inflected by a pistol-shot fired by the defendant from a certain direction, was a fact to be found by the jury from the evidence of the circumstances under which the homicide was committed, or by inference, from the relative position of the parties at the time the shot was fired. It was not such a matter of science or skill as required the opinion of an expert.

12.—DECLARATION OF DECEASED AFTER THE KILLING.—RES GESTÆ.—Declarations of a person who has been shot, made a half an hour after the shooting, as to what he intends to do to the man who shot him, are not part of the res gestæ of the shooting.

13.—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.—UNCONTRADICTED TESTIMONY.—IMMATERIAL ERROR.—The exclusion of the testimony of one witness as to a fact which has been proved by the uncontradicted testimony of another witness, is not a prejudicial error; for the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit, is sufficient for proof of any fact except perjury and treason.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Shasta. BELL, J.

Chipman & Garter and S. Sweeney, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.:

In the Superior Court of Shasta County Thomas L. Westlake was charged, by criminal information, with having committed the crime of murder, by maliciously and unlawfully killing one John McCool, in that county. Upon trial a verdict was rendered against him of murder in the second degree, and on this appeal, which is from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, it is insisted that the Court erred: first, in giving to the jury the following instruction upon the subject of justifiable homicide:

"Past threats or conduct of the deceased, how violent soever, will not excuse a homicide, without sufficient present demonstration to authorize the belief that the deadly purpose then exists, and the fear that it will then be executed.

"The danger must be present, apparent, and imminent, and the killing must be done under a well-founded belief that it was absolutely necessary for the defendant to kill the deceased at that time to save himself from great bodily harm."

The first part of this instruction is challenged as erroneous; but as a proposition in criminal law, it is true that previous insults or conduct, however violent and abusive, are not, in and of themselves, sufficient to justify or excuse any one for the commission of a crime. (People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 127.) They are, however, evidential circumstances, which, in connection with the facts and circumstances in which a crime has been committed, are entitled to due consideration in determining whether the person charged with the commission of the crime was justifiable or not. Substantially, that was the import of the first part of the instruction, and it was expressed in such language that the jury could not have misunderstood it.

But it is claimed that the instruction as an entirety is objectionable under the decision by this Court in Flahave's Case, 58 Cal. 249.

The instructions in the two cases are not identical. In the Flahave Case the disapproved instruction was substantially this: To justify a person for killing another upon the ground of self-defense, the killing must be done under an appearance of danger so urgent and pressing that it was absolutely necessary to save his own life or to prevent great bodily injury. In this case the instruction was qualified by the expression that the killing must be done under a well-founded belief that it was absolutely necessary, etc. That qualification saves the instruction from the rule of the Flahave Case, and, as qualified, the instruction in this case, as an entirety, was right. It is substantially the instruction which was given in the case of The State v. Rippy, 2 Head, 217, which the Supreme Court of Tennessee approved as sound law.

Justification for a homicide, according to the Penal Code, must rest upon two things: 1. A reasonable cause; 2. An actual apprehension of a design to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury. Both must exist or neither will avail. To constitute the defense the apprehension of danger must be founded on sufficient circumstances, real or apparent, to authorize the opinion that the felonious design then exists; previous threats or menacing conduct constitute part of such circumstances. And the circumstances must not only be such as authorize the fear of death or great bodily harm, but the fear caused by them must be actual—really entertained, and the homicidal act must have been done under the controlling influence of that fear, or, in other words, under the honest and well-founded belief that it was absolutely necessary to kill at that moment, to save from the imminent danger that menaced life or limb. Can such a belief arise out of circumstances of necessity or danger which a party has, intentionally or by his own fault, brought upon himself? We think not. Hence we see no error in the following instruction upon the same subject of justification, to which the defendant took exceptions:

"If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence that the defendant killed the deceased, then to render said killing justifiable it must appear that the defendant was wholly without fault imputable to him by law, in bringing about or commencing the difficulty in which the mortal wound was given."

The instruction is taken literally from the decision of the late Supreme Court in People v. Lamb, 17 Cal. 323, which has been since followed and approved by this Court in People v. Travis, 56 Id. 254. It is true that in People v. Simons, 60 Cal. 72, the doctrine enunciated in those cases seems to have been questioned; but it was not questioned by a majority of the Judges who concurred in that decision; and the case is not entitled to be considered as an authoritative overruling of the former cases. And those cases, we think, should not be overruled, for, as a proposition in criminal law, the doctrine enunciated by them rests upon reason and authority. As has been already said, the apprehension of danger to life or limb which justifies a man for taking the life of another must be an honest one — one that is well grounded, and must arise out of a reasonable cause; but a cause which originates in the fault of the person himself — in a quarrel which he has provoked, or in a danger which he has voluntarily brought upon himself, by his own misconduct, can not be considered reasonable or sufficient in law to support a well-grounded apprehension of imminent danger to his person. Error of apprehension the law overlooks, when a man is called upon to act on appearances; but it does not overlook dishonesty of apprehension. Hence a real or apparent necessity brought about by the design, contrivance, or fault of the defendant, can not be availed of as a defense for the commission of a crime. (State v. Rippy, supra; Stewart v. State, 15 Ohio St. 155; State v. Neeley, 20 Iowa, 109; State v. Roach, 34 Geo. 78; State v. Eiland, 52 Ala. 322; State v. Evans, 44 Miss. 762; People v. Gainey, 97 Ill. 271.)

Yet it is not to be doubted that a person accused of crime may show, in justification, that although he brought upon himself an imminent danger, he, in the presence of that necessity, changed his mind and conduct, and honestly endeavored to escape from it, but could not without striking the mortal blow. But that is not the present case. And, in the absence of such circumstances, it must be true, as a legal proposition that where a defendant seeks and brings upon himself a difficulty with the deceased, in which he willingly continues until he involves himself in the necessity to kill, the law will not hold him guiltless. The right of self-defense, which justifies a homicide, does not include the right of attack.

2. The instruction numbered twenty-two was correct. In effect, the Court told the jury that if they were satisfied "beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the facts and circumstances in the case," of the existence of the facts which he stated to them, and which the evidence tended to prove, then the defendant would be guilty of murder or manslaughter, as they might determine.

It is allowable for a Court to give a hypothetical instruction to the jury, provided the province of the jury be not invaded. No invasion took place in this instance; the jury were left entirely free, in the exercise of their functions, to find the facts stated to them, and were cautioned that the facts must be found by them, from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. A witness for the prosecution, on his direct examination, testified that McCool (the deceased) and a younger brother of the defendant, on the morning of the homicide, came along and halted right in front of the door of the saloon, near which the witness was seated. When they halted, McCool said to young Westlake, "I was not alluding to you or your family." At the time of the remark the witness did not observe that the defendant was present, but he came forward and joined them immediately afterwards and commenced the difficulty with McCool, in which the latter was killed. To the remark, counsel for defendant "objected as evidence and moved that it be stricken out." No ruling was then made by the Court upon the objection or motion. Impliedly, the Court reserved its ruling, and no exception was taken by defendant. But the Court did not, at any time during the trial of the cause, pass upon either, and this omission of the Court is assigned as error. But the defendant did not at any time ask for a ruling; and where a defendant makes no effort to obtain a definite ruling upon an objection to a question asked of a witness, or a motion to strike out the answer to the question, the ruling upon which has been reserved, the legal presumption is that a ruling was waived. (People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 32.) This presumption also arises from the fact disclosed by the record in this case, that the defendant did not make the omission of the Court to rule upon his objection, or motion to strike out part of the grounds of his motion for a new trial.

4. A medical witness, called by the defendant, after testifying that he had made a post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased, was asked this question: "State from the examination you gave of the wound, the course of the ball, and the condition of the deceased, whether, if he were moving in a north-westerly direction, or standing facing a north-west direction, he could have received that wound from the pistol shot fired by a person standing north of him and facing south?" Objection was taken to the question, which was sustained, and the ruling is assigned as error.

Whether the wound of which the deceased died could have been inflicted by a pistol shot fired by the defendant from a certain direction, was a fact to be found by the jury from the evidence of the circumstances in which the homicide was committed, or to be inferred from the relative position of the parties at the time the shot was fired; it was not such a matter of science or skill as required the opinion of an expert. (People v. Smith, 4 Pac. C. L. J. 213.) There was, therefore, no error in excluding the opinion of the witness. Nor did the Court err in excluding the testimony of the same witness as to a declaration made by McCool, half an hour after he had been shot, to the witness, who was his attending physician. The declaration related to what he then meant to do to the defendant for shooting him. Declarations of a person who has been shot, made half an hour after the shooting, as to what he intends to do to the man who shot him, are not part of the res gestæ of the shooting. (C. C. P., § 1850.)

Lastly.—It is contended that in excluding the testimony of John Stewart, a witness for the defendant, as to the communication to defendant of a threat which had been made by McCool against the defendant, there was error. But the threat, and the communication of it to the defendant, had been proved by the testimony of another witness, who was unimpeached and uncontradicted, and the defendant himself testified on the same subject. The exclusion of the testimony of one witness as to a fact which has been proved by the uncontradicted evidence of another witness, is not a prejudicial error (People v. Reed, 48 Cal. 553); for the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact, except perjury and treason. (Sec. 1844, C. C. P.)

There is no error in the record, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MORRISON, C. J., and MYRICK, J., concurred.

ROSS, J., concurred in the judgment.

SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting:

The following instruction, in which the Court said, "If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt, from the evidence, that the defendant commenced the affray with the deceased, in which the mortal wound was given, then his fear of danger, if really entertained, would not justify him in taking the life of the deceased," can not, in my judgment, be reconciled with that provision of the Penal Code which makes homicide justifiable, when committed by a person in the lawful defense of such person, even if he was the assailant, if he had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further struggle before the homicide was committed. (Pen. C., § 177.) This error, if error it be, is repeated in several other instructions.

THE REMINGTON SEWING MACHINE COMPANY
v. JOSEPH H. COLE ET AL.

CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL—ACTION—PRACTICE.—Action commenced in the City and County of San Francisco. Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole were united as defendants with Jewell and Showers. The complaint alleged that Showers, Jewell, and George N. Cole formed a copartnership; that plaintiff entered into an agreement with said partnership, etc.; that as a condition precedent to said agreement plaintiff exacted from each and every member of the firm a bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned that if said Showers, Jewell, and Cole should from time to time, as the same should become due, pay all dues, etc., which under their agreement might become due to plaintiff, or in default thereof, that said member would pay to plaintiff his one-third part of any such indebtedness, then the obligation to be void; otherwise, etc. George N. Cole, as one of the firm, executed such a bond to the plaintiff, with Joseph H. Cole as surety. After the dissolution of the copartnership, and settlement of the affairs, the firm was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of nine thousand seven hundred and one dollars and fifty-five cents, of which the complaint alleged, Joseph H. Cole became liable to pay three thousand two hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty-five cents; that since said settlement Showers and Jewell paid to plaintiff six thousand two hundred and eight dollars and thirty-four cents, leaving unpaid three thousand one hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty-one cents. Prayer therefor against the four defendants. Showers and Jewell demurred. The other defendants, Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole, also demurred, and moved a change of the place of trial, which was denied August 30, 1878. Afterwards the demurrer of the defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole was overruled, and the action was dismissed as to Showers and Jewell. Subsequently the defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole made a second motion for change of the place of trial, which was also denied, and this appeal was taken by them from the order denying their second motion. Both motions by them were made upon the ground that they were residents of the County of San Joaquin.

Held: 1. If the complaint counted alone on the bond executed by Joseph H. and George N. Cole, there was no cause of action stated against Jewell or Showers, and they were improperly made parties. In that view, the Coles were entitled to a change of the place of trial, and their motion in that behalf, made in 1877, and denied August 30, 1878, ought to have been granted, notwithstanding Jewell and Showers then remained parties of record. From the order made refusing a change of venue, the parties aggrieved were entitled to appeal, and that was their remedy.

2. If, on the other hand, the complaint contained a cause of action against Jewell and Showers, the order made August 30, 1878, was rightly made, for they did not join in the motion for a change of the place of trial, but on the contrary filed a demurrer, without objection, on that ground. If there was a cause of action stated against them, they had as much right to have it tried in the city and county of San Francisco, where the action was commenced, as their co-defendants had to have it tried in the county of their residence.

8. In either event, the subsequent dismissal of the action as to Showers and Jewell could not operate to confer on the other defendants the right to demand a change of the place of trial, for that right is to be determined by the condition of things existing at the time the parties claiming it first appeared in the action.

APPEAL by the defendants, Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole, from an order of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, denying their motion for a change of the place of trial. EDMONDS, J.

Action on a bond. The action was commenced September 29, 1877, in the Fifteenth District Court. The complaint is as follows:

The Remington Sewing Machine Company, hereinafter styled plaintiff, complains of Joseph H. Cole, George N. Cole, O. H. Jewell, and A. Showers, defendants herein, and for cause of action alleges:

1. That plaintiff is, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, and is and was engaged in the manufacture and sale of the Remington sewing machines, so called.

2. That on or about the first day of January, A. D. 1875, the defendants, A. Showers, O. H. Jewell, and George N. Cole, entered into and formed a copartnership under the style of Showers, Jewell & Cole, for the purpose of buying and selling the aforesaid Remington sewing machines in the State of California and elsewhere.

3. That after the formation of such copartnership the plaintiff entered into an agreement with the said Showers, Jewell & Cole, as partners as aforesaid, whereby the plaintiff agreed among other things to sell to said firm only in the States of California and Oregon its said Remington sewing machines, at certain agreed rates, and upon certain conditions, and the said firm of Showers, Jewell & Cole did agree with the plaintiff among other things to maintain and keep open a store in San Francisco, California, for the sale of said machines, and to pay the plaintiff certain agreed rates for all such machines sold and delivered to them by the plaintiff.

4. That as a condition precedent to the aforesaid agreement between plaintiff and the said firm of Showers, Jewell & Cole, the plaintiff did acquire and exact from each and every member of said firm a bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars, with good and sufficient surety, and conditioned that if said Showers, Jewell & Cole should from time to time, and at all times, as the same should become due and payable, pay and satisfy all dues, demands, or any balances, which, under their aforesaid agreement, might become due to the plaintiff, or in default thereof, that said member would pay to the plaintiff his one third part or proportion of any such indebtedness, then the obligation to be void, otherwise in full force and effect.

5. That pursuant to such condition the said defendant, George N. Cole, as one of the said firm of Showers, Jewell & Cole, did, on the tenth day of February, A. D. 1875, make, execute, and deliver to plaintiff his certain bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars, with the defendant, Joseph H. Cole, as surety thereon, and of which the following is a copy, to wit: "Know all men by these presents, that I, George N. Cole, of Stockton, in California, as principal, and Joseph H. Cole, of O'Neal Township, California, as surety, are firmly bound and obliged unto E. Remington & Sons, of Ilion, New York, a firm duly established and doing business under said name, in the full and just sum of ten thousand dollars, the which sum, well and truly to be paid to them, said E. Remington & Sons, or the survivor or survivors of them or their assigns, or representatives of them, we jointly and severally bind and oblige ourselves, and our several heirs, representatives, and assigns, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seals, and dated this tenth day of February, A. D. 1875. The condition of this obligation is such that, whereas, on the first day of January, 1875, the said George N. Cole became an equal copartner with A. Showers and O. H. Jewell in the business of selling and dealing in the sale and disposition of the Remington sewing machines, a machine, the patent of which is owned by E. Remington & Sons, and transacting said business under the firm name of Showers, Jewell &

Cole, which said firm have entered into an arrangement or agreement to and with said E. Remington & Sons for the supplying of said sewing machines to said firm, for the purpose of sale and the carrying on of their said business. Now, therefore, if the said Showers, Jewell & Cole shall from time to time, and at all times, as the same shall become due and payable, pay and satisfy all dues, demands, or any balances, which, under their said arrangement, agreement, or understanding, as to the terms of dealing, may be or become due, owing and payable to said E. Remington & Sons for supplies and machines as aforesaid, or in default thereof, the said George N. Cole shall well and truly pay or cause to be paid or settled to the satisfaction of said E. Remington & Sons his one third part or proportion of any such due, indebtedness, or balance, then this obligation shall be void and of no effect, otherwise be and remain in full force and virtue. Sealed with our seals, and delivered in presence of William Graham. GEORGE N. COLE, J. H. COLE."

6. That by mistake and inadvertence, the name of E. Remington & Sons was inserted in said bond instead of that of the Remington Sewing Machine Company, though the said bond was given, and intended to be given by said defendants, George N. Cole and J. H. Cole, to said Remington Sewing Machine Company, the plaintiff herein, and was by them to this plaintiff delivered, and the plaintiff accepted the same without noticing said mistake; and the said defendants, George N. Cole and Joseph H. Cole, thereby covenanted with the plaintiff, under their hands and seals, to pay to the plaintiff the sum of ten thousand dollars upon the conditions therein mentioned; that in order to make said bond conform to the actual intentions of the parties thereto, it is necessary that the name of "E. Remington & Sons," wherever occurring therein, should be changed to the words "The Remington Sewing Machine Company," and also the words "of Ilion, New York, a firm duly established and doing business under said name," after the words "E. Remington & Sons," first occurring in said bond, be changed to "of Ilion, New York, a corporation duly established and doing business under said name."

7. That on or about the — day of May, A. D. 1876, the said firm of Showers, Jewell & Cole was dissolved by mutual consent; and upon a settlement thereafter had by said firm and the members thereof with the plaintiff, it was found that the said firm was indebted to plaintiff in the sum total of nine thousand seven hundred and one dollars and fifty-five cents, of which amount, by the terms and conditions of said bond, the defendant, Joseph H. Cole, became and was liable to pay to plaintiff the full sum of three thousand two hundred and thirty-three dollars and eighty-five cents; that since said settlement the defendants, Showers and Jewell, have paid to plaintiff on account of said indebtedness the sum of six thousand five hundred and eight dollars and thirty-four cents, and there is now owing and unpaid to plaintiff thereon the sum of three thousand one hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty-one cents. That the defendants, George N. Cole and Joseph H. Cole, have paid no part of said sum of nine thousand seven hundred and one dollars and fifty-five cents, nor has either of them; and there is now owing to plaintiff from said George N. Cole and Joseph H. Cole, on account of said indebtedness and said bond, the sum of three thousand one hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty-one cents, which became due and payable on August 1, 1877. That the plaintiff has demanded payment of said sum of three thousand one hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty-one cents from each and all of said defendants, but they have each and all neglected and refused to pay the same.

Wherefore plaintiff prays the judgment of this Court: 1. That the bond set forth in count fifth of this complaint herein may be reformed in the particulars set forth in said complaint, and so it may be taken and construed to run to the Remington Sewing Machine Company, the plaintiff herein. 2. That plaintiff have and recover from the defendants herein the sum of three thousand one hundred and ninety-three dollars and twenty-one cents, with interest thereon from August 1, 1877, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and costs of suits, and for such other and further relief herein as the plaintiff may be entitled to.

The defendants Showers and Jewell demurred to the complaint.

The defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole also demurred, and moved a change of the place of trial, which was denied, August 30, 1878, by the District Court. Afterwards the demurrer of the defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole was overruled, and the action was dismissed by the plaintiff as to the defendants Showers and Jewell. The defendants Joseph H. and George N. Cole thereafter answered the complaint. On the fourteenth day of January, A. D. 1880, the defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole, without previously asking leave of the Court so to do, made a second motion for change of the place of trial, which was heard and denied by the Superior Court. Both motions were made upon the ground that the defendants Joseph H. Cole and George N. Cole were residents of the County of San Joaquin. A bill of exceptions was filed, and this appeal taken.

J. H. Budd, for Appellants.

The complaint shows a cause of action which must be tried in the county where the defendants resided at the commencement of the action, if duly demanded in writing by the defendants. (Code Civil Procedure, §§ 395, 396.) The language of Section 395 of the Code is imperative on this point. The following are its provisions, viz.: In all other cases the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, resided at the commencement of the action.

The appellants resided at the commencement of the action in the County of San Joaquin, and filed their affidavits showing that fact, and an affidavit of merits, and demanded in writing that the trial be had in the proper county. This was at the time they appeared in the action. The right of appellants to have the action tried in the county of their residence is given by the Code, and can only be waived as provided by Section 396 of the Code; and if not so waived, the Court in which the action is brought has no jurisdiction to try the action.

When, therefore, the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the action as to Jewell and Shower, two persons named as defendants in the complaint, the right of the appellants arose, under the Code, to have the action tried in the county of their residence, unless they had waived that right by failure to file an affidavit of merits, and demand in writing a trial of the action in the county of their residence at the commencement of the action. There was no such waiver, and the Court in which the action was brought, had, after such dismissal, no jurisdiction to try the action unless with appellant's consent. And the subsequent affidavit of merits and of residence, and demand in writing by defendants, showed they did not consent to the trial of the action in the Court in San Francisco, but insisted on their statutory right to have the action tried in the County of San Joaquin, the county of their residence. To state the matter syllogistically: in all cases of actions on contracts, the defendants have the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence at the commencement of the action, unless they waive that right by failure to file an affidavit of merits, and to demand in writing, at the time they appeared in the action, that the trial of the action be had in that county.

This is an action on contract, and the appellants, when they appeared in the action, filed the proper affidavit of merits and of their residence in San Joaquin County, at the commencement of the action, and demanded in writing that the action be tried in that county. Therefore the appellants have the right to have this action tried in that county. It is urged by the counsel for defendant, that appellants should have appealed from the order of the District Court, denying their first application to change the place of trial. Such appeal would have been frivolous. The order of the District Court was properly made on the facts then existing. The statutory right of appellants to have the action tried in the county of their residence had not then arisen. Appellants took the prescribed statutory steps to prevent a waiver of such right when it should arise, and when it did arise under the provisions of the Code, insisted on that right.

E. S. Pillsbury, for Respondent.

The first motion for change of place of trial was properly denied, because all the defendants did not join in the motion, and no reason was assigned by the moving parties for such failure. (Pieper v. Centinela Land Co., 56 Cal. 173, and cases therein cited.) The motion having been made upon the same ground as the first, viz., residence in San Joaquin County, the decision of the first motion became the law on all points involved therein, and obligatory upon the Court and parties. The remedy was by appeal. (Lang v. Specht, 7 P. C. L. J. 238.) If the remedy was not by appeal, the second application for change of venue was properly denied, because not made at the time the defendants appeared and demurred. They could not move after filing their demurrer. It was a right which could be waived. (Pearkes v. Freer, 9 Cal. 642; Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 245.) "A defendant who demurs to a complaint without answering must demand a transfer, if he claim it on the ground that the proper county is not designated before or when he demurs." (Cook v. Pendergast, 8 P. C. L. J. 1006.)

Ross, J.:

If the complaint counted alone on the bond executed by Joseph H. and George N. Cole, there was no cause of action stated against Jewell or Showers, and they were improperly made parties. In that view, the Coles were entitled to a change of the place of trial, and their motion in that behalf made in 1877, and denied August 30, 1878, ought to have been granted, notwithstanding Jewell and Showers then remained parties of record. From the order made refusing a change of venue the parties aggrieved were entitled to appeal, and that was their remedy. If, on the other hand, the complaint contained a cause of action against Jewell and Showers, the order made August 30, 1878, was rightly made, for they did not join in the motion for a change of the place of trial, but on the contrary, filed a demurrer, without objection, on that ground. If there was a cause of action stated against them, they had as much right to have it tried in the City and County of San Francisco, where the action was commenced, as their co-defendants had to have it tried in the county of their residence. In either event, we do not perceive how the subsequent dismissal of the action as against Jewell and Showers could operate to confer on the other defendants the right contended for by them. That right is to be determined by the condition of things existing at the time the parties claiming it first appeared in the action.

Order affirmed.

McKINSTRY and McKee, JJ., and MORRISON, C. J., concurred.

SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting:

I dissent. This is one of the actions which the Code declares "must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action." (C. C. P. 395.) Before the action was dismissed as to any of the defendants, some of them resided in San Francisco and some of them in San Joaquin County. After the dismissal of the action as to some of them, the remaining ones resided in San Joaquin. They had a right to have the action tried in that county, and if they did not waive that right, the Court erred in denying their application to have the place of trial changed from San Francisco to San Joaquin. The right might have been waived by appearing and answering or demurring without filing an affidavit of merits and demanding "in writing that the trial be had in the proper county." (Id. 396.)

The appellants, on their first appearance, as the sole defendants in the action, and at the time of filing their answer, did file an affidavit of merits and a demand "in writing that the trial be had in the proper county." Before that, either San Francisco or San Joaquin was the proper county. Now it could never have been the intention of the Legislature that a plaintiff, by improperly joining persons who resided in the same county with himself, against whom his complaint showed that he had no cause of action, with persons residing in another county against whom he did allege a cause of action as defendants, could defeat the right of the real defendants to have the action tried in the proper county, particularly when, as in this case, the action is dismissed as to the defendants residing in the same county with himself before the filing of the answer. Whenever the attention of the Legislature is manifest it must prevail in the construction of statutes. The object of the Legislature was to prevent the trial of actions in counties other than those in which the defendants resided, unless they waived that right. I do not think that the Courts should sanction a palpable evasion of such a statute.

MYRIOK, J., concurred with Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN.

[No. 8,482. — In Bank.]

December 12, 1882.

H. F. NEHRBAS v. THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

WHEN QUESTIONS OF NEGLIGENCE TO BE LEFT TO JURY.— Action by the father to recover damages for loss of five children, ranging from five to sixteen years of age, killed in a collision with a train belonging to defendant. The children killed were returning home from a May-day picnic, in a light wagon drawn by one gentle horse. The oldest—a girl of sixteen—was driving. She was acquainted with the highway over which she was passing and with the point at which it was crossed by the railroad track. Several persons in vehicles preceded her on the highway, and had crossed the railroad, the nearest one being some four hundred feet in advance; and she was followed by a boy thirteen years old, at a considerable distance in the rear. On the railroad, about three hundred and thirty-five feet from the point of crossing, was a covered bridge. On either side of the railroad, between the bridge and its intersection with the highway, were a number of eucalyptus trees planted by the defendant, and which had attained such size, as, according to some of the testimony in the case, prevented—a connection with some of the neighboring orchards—an approaching train from being seen by those traveling the highway, until the traveler should reach a point very close to the railroad track. There was also evidence going to show that at the time of the accident the train was slightly behind time, and was running at the rate of from thirty-three to thirty-five miles per hour, whereas the rate at which the trains usually ran at that point was from twenty-five to thirty miles an hour. Further, there was some evidence tending to show that the bell was not rung nor the whistle blown.

Held: 1. This evidence, especially that relating to the increased speed, under the circumstances appearing, tended to show negligence on the part of the defendant, and it was for the jury to pass upon the effect of this testimony: 2. The evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict of the jury against the defendant on the question of the defendant's negligence.

1d.—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.—If it clearly appears from the undisputed facts, judged of in the light of that common knowledge and experience of which Courts are bound to take notice, that a party has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger, the question of negligence is one of law, to be decided by the Court. In all other cases the question must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

Held: In the present case the question of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased children was properly submitted to the jury, and there exists no valid reason for disturbing the finding of the jury on this point against the defendant.

RULE OF DAMAGES.—In this action under the law of this State the jury was not limited in assessing the plaintiff's damages to his actual pecuniary injury sustained by him by reason of the loss of services of his children.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Alameda. GREENE, J.

Action for damages caused through the negligence of the defendant. Upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony in the Court below the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. The defendant offered no testimony. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of ten thousand eight hundred dollars. The defendant, without moving for a new trial in the Court below, prepared a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision in bank a petition for rehearing was presented and denied.

Henry Vrooman and W. H. L. Barnes, for Appellant.

The damages were excessive and contrary to law. (Sedgwick on Measure of Damages, vol. ii., p. 537.) The author says: "Where there is a prospective pecuniary loss, resulting from the death, damages may be recovered in compensation for such loss. It may be difficult, from the nature of the case, to lay down more than a general rule to govern the jury in their award of prospective damages. There should be, at least, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the life of the deceased to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

"Definite instructions should be given to the jury as to the true measure of damages under the statute, although much must be left, it is said, to their sound discretion. The rule on the proper measure of damages in this class of cases is nowhere better stated than by Sharswood, J., in Penn. R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. St. 335, where the learned Judge says: 'After an attentive examination and review of all the cases which have heretofore been decided, we are of opinion that the proper measure of damages is the pecuniary loss suffered by the parties entitled to the sum to be recovered (in this instance the children of the deceased), without any solatium for distress of mind, and that loss is what the deceased would have probably earned by his intellectual or bodily labor in his business or profession during the residue of his lifetime, and which would have gone for the benefit of his children, taking into consideration his age, ability, and disposition to labor, and his habits of living and expenditure.'

"As to the future services of minors, damages under this statute may also be recovered for the pecuniary loss, present or prospective, resulting from the death of minors. But it should be made to appear to the jury that there is, at least, a reasonable expectation that the services of the child will be of pecuniary value to the plaintiff."

In Oldfield v. The N. Y. & H. R. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 310, this language was used by Judge Wright: "Since the jury must be satisfied by proof of the probability of actual loss resulting to the plaintiff from the death of the minor, the condition of the parents, the occupation of the father, etc., are admissible in evidence in this class of cases, when not in others, under the statute, to enable the jury to determine the actual loss which will, in all probability, result from the death of a child." (Citing Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 88 Wis. 613; Barley v. Chicago & Alton R. R., 4 Biss. 430; Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169.)

"But the damages must be limited to the minority of the child. It is the pecuniary value of the services of the boy during his minority that can be recovered." (Citing Caldwell v. Brown, 53 Pa. St. 453; State of Maryland v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 24 Md. 84; Penn. R. R. Co. v. Kelly, 31 Pa. St. 372; Penn. R. R. Co. v. Zebe, 33 Pa. St. 318; Telfer, Adm'r, v. N. B. R. Co., 30 N. J. L. 188.)

"The expense of providing for the child, had he lived, should be estimated and deducted from the estimated earnings of the child. Says Van Dyke, J., in the case last above cited: "The action is the creation of the statute." In the same action the Court says the common law gives no action to a father sustaining such an injury. It is given by the statute. The language of the Act upon the subject of the damages is: "The jury may give such damages as they shall deem fair and just with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting to the wife and next of kin of such deceased person." "It is liable to great abuse, and the Court should see that every verdict which is rendered contrary to it should be set aside. It is simply an action to recover, in dollars and cents, a compensation for the loss and damages which have actually been sustained." In this case there were two boys, one thirteen and one seventeen years of age, who were driving in a wagon; got on a crossing, were struck by a passing locomotive, and instantly killed.

"As the father of his children, the plaintiff was entitled to their services until they should arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and what those services might reasonably have been expected to be worth, he was entitled to recover, and nothing more, unless it be expenses growing out of the injuries, subject to the burdens and incumbrances which that relationship imposed upon him. Where, however, as in Iowa; the statute provides that the action shall be in favor of the 'estate of the deceased,' it is held that the damages are not limited by the minority of the child."

In Potter, Adm. etc., v. The Chicago & N. W. R. R. Co., 21 Wis. 377, it is said: "The weight of authority is that the jury may take into account the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life beyond the minority. But this does not seem to be correct. As was said in Bannon v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 24 Md. 117: 'the chances of survivorship, his ability and willingness to support others, are matters too vague to enter into an estimate of damages merely compensatory.'"

In Telfer v. The Northern R. R. Co., the Court further says: "It is insisted also that the damages in these cases are excessive." [I will remark here that these actions were brought, as probably they strictly should have been brought, separately for each one, and were, by stipulation, consolidated and tried together. In this case, by agreement, the cases of all the children were tried in one action, and we make no point, exception, or objection to what would otherwise be an improper joinder of several causes of action.] "In the case of David, they are assessed at nine hundred and thirty-six dollars; and in the case of William at one thousand and fifty-six dollars. In the view which I have taken of the cases, it is not necessary to examine this part of them; but the question presented is one of importance, and deserves the consideration of the Court, either now or at some other time. The jury seem to have been left pretty much to their own conclusions in the matter, as there was but little if any evidence to throw light on the subject beyond the fact of the relationship between the father and his children; and it may be doubted if they could have reached the conclusions which they did, if they had been governed by correct legal principles.

"The action is the creation of the statute; and it is needless to say that it must conform strictly to it. It is liable to great abuse; and the Court should see that every verdict which is rendered contrary to it, should be set aside. It is simply an action to recover in dollars and cents, a compensation for the loss and damages which have actually been sustained. As the father of his children, the plaintiff was entitled to their services until they should arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and what those services might reasonably have been expected to be worth, he was entitled to recover, and nothing more, unless it be expenses growing out of the injuries, subject to the burdens and incumbrances which that relationship imposed upon him. Nothing can be allowed for the mental anguish which, as a parent, he is supposed to have suffered. Nothing for the satisfaction and comfort of having his sons—nothing for the loss of their society and associations.

"The damages in the case of William are fixed at one thousand and fifty-six dollars. He was over thirteen years of age, and had something over seven years to serve his father. There is an allowance, then, of about one hundred and fifty dollars per year on an average. This is about what the services of a full-grown man would be worth in the business in which the plaintiff was engaged, when boarded, provided he should work faithfully the whole of that time. If this is the principle upon which the jury proceeded, they were unquestionably wrong; for as the plaintiff was bound not only to feed but to properly clothe and educate his son, and to take care of him if sick, pay his physician's bills, etc., it may well be doubted whether his services would have been worth any more than his board, clothing, education, and other incidentals, previous to his arriving at the age of eighteen years.

"At all events, these things should have been taken into consideration by the jury, and proper deductions made on account of them, as well as for the days of idleness, of absence, and of pleasure incident to such relationship and likely to intervene. The jury seem, too, to have gone on the supposition that William would remain in sound health, and serve faithfully during every day of the time; whereas, they were bound to consider the probability, that through accidents, sickness, and the like, he might be unable, possibly for a considerable portion of the time, to perform service at all, when he would be an expense rather than an advantage. Then, too, they seem to have taken it for granted that he was certainly going to live through the whole period, and his life, during the whole of that time, the defendants are made to insure; whereas, it was possible he might die the next day, when his services, of course, would have ceased. We may be quite willing to bind ourselves to pay a man one thousand and fifty dollars for seven years' service, if we can certainly have that service secured to us, when we would not be willing to pay half that sum if we are to take all the risk of his sickness, accident, and death in the mean time. These things, too, should have been taken into consideration and allowed for; and if they had been, all of them, it seems difficult to see how the jury could properly have calculated the damages at one thousand and fifty-six dollars. The same principles and rules apply, of course, to the case of David; and if this were the only reason on which we are asked to set the verdict aside, I should feel constrained to yield to it, believing, as I do, that the jury must have proceeded upon erroneous principles in this respect in reaching their conclusions."

Judge Elmer, concurring, says: "I am also of opinion that the damages were excessive. The jury had no legal right to give more than the actual pecuniary injury to the plaintiff, the father and next of kin of the persons killed, resulting from their death. In this case there was little or no difficulty in arriving at a correct result. The boys were of the ages of thirteen and fifteen years, so that the father was entitled to fourteen years' service from them before they became of full age. The true rule for measuring his injury was the cost of procuring equivalent help from others, whose clothing and other necessities should be furnished by him; to which might perhaps be added reasonable funeral charges, beyond what was expressly contributed for that purpose. Upon the most liberal computation, these expenses could not have amounted to anything like the sum awarded by the jury. Verdict set aside." (See Karr v. Parks, 44 Cal. 46; Sykes v. Lawlor, 49 id. 286; Durkee v. C. P. R. Co., 56 id. 388; Beeson v. G. M. G. M. Co., 57 id. 20.)

In the Durkee Case, Chief Justice Morrison, in passing upon the question involved, cites O. & M. R. R. Co. v. Tindall, which was an action to recover damages for the loss of Daniel Tindall, a minor, killed by a locomotive engine of the company, as follows: "The third question relates to damages. The Court instructed the jury that, in estimating damages, they might take into consideration the actual pecuniary loss to the plaintiff, occasioned by the death of the son, and the services; and also, such other circumstances as have injuriously afflicted the plaintiff in person, in peace of mind, and in happiness." The Court says this instruction was erroneous, citing Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432, where the statute is similar to that of California. Indeed, all these statutes are founded upon the Act of Lord Carnpbell. "The statute of New York," says the Court, "under which the foregoing decision was made, authorized the jury to give such damages as they deem fair and just, with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin to the deceased person."

The children of the plaintiff were aged as follows: Christine, a girl, aged sixteen years; Katie, a girl, aged fourteen years; John, a boy, aged ten years; Frank, a boy, aged eight years; Lillian, a girl, aged five years. It is impossible to say what, if any, basis was assumed by the jury in arriving at a verdict of ten thousand eight hundred dollars as the total damages of the plaintiff.

If they equally apportioned the damages among the children, they allowed two thousand dollars for each child, as the value of the prospective services of each, without reference to disparity of age or difference in sex. If they found the years of service to which each was bound to the parent, the result would be as follows: Christine, two years, two thousand dollars; Katie, four years, two thousand dollars; John, eleven years, two thousand dollars; Frank, thirteen years, two thousand dollars; Lillian, thirteen years, two thousand dollars; total, forty-three years, ten thousand dollars. Dividing ten thousand dollars by forty-three years, we have again the yearly value of all their services, equal to, say, two hundred and thirty-two dollars and fifty cents per annum, without any deductions whatever for board, clothing, education, illness, or any incidental expense whatever, or any regard to the near emancipation of some of the children and the infancy of others.

If the cases cited state the law, the verdict of the jury was excessive and contrary to law. It is evident there was no calculation about the matter. The jury made the damages as large as they dared. But in view of the intimation of the Court that a verdict based upon sympathy, and not reasonable calculation of values, would be set aside, they may have been somewhat restrained. However this may have been, the verdict was evidently not in accordance with the law.

W. W. Foote and A. A. Moore, for Respondent.

The rule in cases of this character, as we understand it, is perfectly plain, and is supported by an unbroken current of authority. "There being some proof of negligence, the Supreme Court will not review the verdict." (Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 168.) "In an action for damages for injury caused by negligence, a nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence should only be granted when, giving the plaintiff the benefit of all controverted questions, it is apparent to the Court that a verdict in his favor must necessarily be set aside." (Schierhold v. N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 40 id. 447.) And in the case of Siegel v. Eisen, 41 id. 109, the same doctrine is affirmed. "The question whether the collision by which the injury was caused could have been avoided by proper care, is a question of fact for the jury." This was the precise question at issue in the case at bar, and the verdict of the jury decided it adversely to the defendant.

In the case of Fernandes v. The Sacramento City Railway Co., 52 Cal. 52, our Court uses the language of another Court with approval. "Ordinarily, however, it is to be settled as a question of fact in each case as it arises, upon a consideration of all the circumstances in connection with the ordinary conduct and motives of men, applying as the measure of ordinary care the rule that it must be such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger. When the circumstances under which the plaintiff acts are complicated, and the general knowledge and experience of men do not at once condemn his conduct as careless, it is plainly to be submitted to the jury. What is ordinary care in such cases, even though the facts are undisputed, is peculiarly a question of fact to be determined by the jury under proper instructions. It is the judgment and experience of the jury, and not of the Judge, which is to be appealed to." In the same case our Supreme Court continues thus: "We think these cases, and many others of like import which might be cited, state the rule correctly; and the conclusion to be drawn from them is, that if it clearly appears from the undisputed facts, judged of in the light of that common knowledge and experience of which Courts are bound to take notice, that a party has not exercised 'such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger,' negligence in such a case is a question of law to be decided by the Court. In all other cases the question must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions."

In support of these views we refer also to the late work of Mr. Field on the law of damages, who, at page 519, states the rule to be that "to justify a nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence, the evidence against the plaintiff should be so clear as to leave no room to doubt; and all material facts must be conceded or established beyond controversy." The rule we have announced is also supported by the following recent adjudications: Johnson v. Bruner, 61 Pa. St. 58; Quirk v. Holt, 99 Mass. 164; B. C. P. R. Co. v. Wilkinson, 30 Md. 226; Barton v. St. L. & I. M. R. R. Co., 52 Mo. 253.

Later cases of our own Court announce the same doctrine. (Durkee v. C. P. R. R. Co., 56 Cal. 388; Jamison v. S. J. & S. C. R. R. Co., 55 id. 593.) And in all the other States the doctrine is the same — each case is to be governed by its own particular facts. As has been well said by our own jurists: "Negligence is never absolute or intrinsic, but is always relative to some circumstances of time, place, or person." This being the law, it is only necessary to examine into the facts of this case, to see that the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

The first witness called for the plaintiff, H. F. Nehrbas, the father of the children, testified in a clear and distinct manner as to the facts preceding the accident. His children, the eldest sixteen years old, left home in the morning, driving a gentle horse, for the laudable purpose of attending a May-day picnic. They were acquainted with the road, and counsel for the defendant claims that this circumstance imposed upon them an additional degree of care. This is not the law. The mere fact that a traveler is familiar with the road, and knows of the existence of defects therein, will not impose upon him the obligation to use more than ordinary care in driving it. Such knowledge is merely a circumstance. * * * * (Shear. and Red. on Neg. 492, and cases cited in note.) Besides, these children were infants, and not legally held to as high a degree of care as grown people. (Schierhold Case.)

Counsel for appellant also claims, in his specifications of errors, that there were other acts done or omitted by these children, which in law amounted to contributory negligence. An examination of the transcript will disclose no single act of the kind, and, as we understand the law, the fact of contributory negligence is a defense to be proved by the defendant, and its absence need neither be pleaded nor proved in the first instance by the plaintiff. (Robinson v. Western P. R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 409; McQuilken v. C. P. R. R., 50 id. 7.)

On the other hand, negligence is not to be presumed against the railroad company, but must be proven. We think the admitted and proved facts in this case show negligence of the grossest kind. In the first place, the railroad company, in constructing its road over and across the ancient and public highway, under authority of the license conferred by Section 5 of the Act of the Legislature conferring such rights, did not comply with the provisions of said Act, and it did not comply with the provisions of Section 19 of said Act. (Statutes 1861, p. 615, §§ 5, 19.) They did not restore the highway to as safe a condition as it was before, and this was a fact from which the jury were at liberty to infer negligence. "Where the track of a railroad crosses a turnpike, care and caution which the company and parties passing upon the highway should use are mutual. Where the view is obstructed, so that parties crossing the railroad can not see an approaching train, the exercise of greater care and caution is required by both sides. Those in charge of the train should approach the crossing at a less rate of speed, and use increased diligence to give warning of its approach; and neglect in these particulars, is sufficient to fix a liability for an attending injury upon the company." (Louisville C. & L. R. R. Co. v Goetz's Adm'r, C. of Appeals, Ky., 12 Rep. 616.)

The evidence showed conclusively, and it was not contradicted, that it was an act of gross negligence for the railroad company to have planted double rows of trees on both sides of its right of way, so that the view of both employees of the road and of travelers approaching the crossing should be obstructed. "Both parties are, however, equally bound to use ordinary care. For this purpose, it is the duty of the engineer to keep watch for travelers, to give signals, etc., and also to approach a crossing which he knows to be continually thronged with travelers, and unprotected by the company, at such a rate of speed as will enable him to check the train if necessary." (See also, Indianapolis & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 78 Ill. 112; Mackay v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 75.)

Mr. Justice McKinstry, speaking for the Court, in the Robinson Case, before cited, uses this significant language, with reference to the conduct of persons in the immediate presence of dangers: "We attach little consequence to her conduct after the train began to move. Startled and alarmed, as she doubtless was, by the immediate peril of her position, it would be asking more than should be required of an ordinarily prudent and reasonable person to demand that she should exercise the soundest discretion in her efforts to escape." So was it with these little children. First seeing or hearing the train at the moment when they were within a few feet of the track, their view obstructed by the bridge and trees, and the sound of the approaching train deadened by the same causes, it is idle to claim that they did not attempt to save themselves from a peril to prevent which would have been impossible. To hold such a doctrine, would be in effect to say that a traveler who was injured crossing a railway upon a public highway could never recover damages. The case of Richardson v. N. Y. Central R. R., 45 N. Y.

846, and the case of Ernst v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 35 id. 9, are cases to which we invite the particular attention of the Court and opposing counsel.

Appellant claims that the verdict is excessive and contrary to the law as given to the jury by the Court. In this State, under Sections 376 and 377, it is provided that "in every action under this and the preceding section such damages may be given as under all the circumstances of the case may be just." A verdict should not be set aside unless outrageously excessive.

Field, in his work on damages, thus clearly states the rule: "The power of the Court to set aside verdicts, and grant new trials, should be exercised only where it is apparent from the amount of the verdict or otherwise, that the jury were influenced by passion, prejudice, corruption, or an evident mistake of the law or the facts, or that there was a palpable error in computation." This doctrine is well expressed by Justice Wilde, who remarks: "In all cases where there is no rule of law regulating the assessment of damages, and the amount does not depend upon computation, the judgment of the jury, and not the opinion of the Court, is to govern, unless the damages are so excessive as to warrant the belief that the jury must have been influenced by partiality or prejudice, or have been misled by some mistaken views of the merits of the case." Under the instructions in this case, much was left to the unbiased discretion of the jury, and certainly no Court can say, upon the principle of compensatory damages merely, that the verdict was outrageous or at all excessive. The case of Myers v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 215, decided under the statutes of this State, as they stood in 1862, is an instructive case upon this point.

Ross, J.:

Except in one aspect of the case we need not allude to the pathetic side of the accident which in an instant brought death to five children, the oldest of whom was but sixteen and the youngest but five years of age. The action is by the father against the Railroad Company for damages for the loss of his children. If there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, of course the plaintiff can not recover. And even if there was great negligence on its part, yet if the accident was brought about in part by a want of ordinary care on the part of the deceased, a like result must follow.

The first inquiry, therefore, is: Is there any evidence going to show negligence on the part of the defendant?

The accident occurred in the afternoon of a lovely day in May. The children killed were returning home from a May-day picnic, in a light wagon drawn by one gentle horse. The oldest — a girl of sixteen — was driving. She was acquainted with the highway over which she was passing and with the point at which it was crossed by the railroad track. Several persons in vehicles preceded her on the highway, and had crossed the railroad, the nearest one — Meeks — being some 400 feet in advance; and she was followed by a boy thirteen years old, at a considerable distance in the rear. On the railroad, about 335 feet from the point of crossing, was a covered bridge. On either side of the railroad, between the bridge and its intersection with the highway, were a number of eucalyptus trees planted by the defendant, and which had attained such size as, according to some of the testimony in the case, prevented — in connection with some neighboring orchards — an approaching train from being seen by those traveling the highway, until the driver should reach a point very close to the railroad track. There is also evidence going to show that at the time of the accident the train was slightly behind time and was running at the rate of from 33 to 35 miles per hour, whereas the rate at which the trains usually ran at that point was from 25 to 30 miles an hour. Further, there was some evidence tending to show that the bell was not rung nor the whistle blown. In the recent case of Kellogg v. N. Y. C. & Hudson R. R. Co., reported in 79 N. Y. 72, the only negligence on the part of the defendant submitted to the jury, was its omission to ring the bell at the crossing, and the Court of Appeals held in that case, that while there was a great preponderance of evidence that the bell was rung, the Court could not say that there was not some conflict in the evidence upon that question proper for submission to the jury. "There was some evidence," said the Court, "tending to show the bell was not rung, and we can not say as matter of law that the jury was bound to disregard it."

In the case before us, the engineer and fireman of the locomotive were on the stand as witnesses, and neither of them was asked as to whether the bell was rung or the whistle blown. The engineer testified that when he first saw the children they were within about ten feet of the railroad track and the train was between the bridge and the crossing; that he at once put on the air-brake, but to stop the train was out of the question. The boy spoken of, who appears, from his testimony as reported in the record, to be a bright lad, testified that from the position he occupied on the highway he heard the rumble of the train as it passed through the covered bridge, but that he did not hear the bell nor the whistle; that he was in a position where he could have heard them, and that he was in the habit of hearing them at that point, having occasion frequently to pass there; while, on the other hand, the witness Meeks testified that from his position he heard both the bell and the whistle.

It was for the jury to pass upon the effect of this testimony. Besides the increased speed under the circumstances appearing, certainly tended to show negligence on the part of the defendant.

It was held, in the case of the Continental Improvement Company v. Stead, 95 U. S. 163, that "where the view is obstructed so that parties crossing the railroad could not see an approaching train, the exercise of greater care and caution was required on both sides. Those in charge of the train should approach the crossing at a less rate of speed, and use increased diligence to give warning of its approach." And in the case of the Louisville C. and L. Railroad Company v. Goetz's Administratrix, decided by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, September 13, 1881, the crossing of a turnpike by the railroad "on a descending grade, running thirty miles or more an hour, with no other signal or warning than a whistle within seventy yards of the crossing, to warn those traveling on the turnpike of its approach," was of itself held culpable negligence. (12 Reporter, 618.)

Clearly, we would not be justified in holding that the testimony in the case now here was not such as entitled the plaintiff to have it submitted to the jury, or that, being so submitted, it is not sufficient to support the verdict of the jury finding negligence on the part of the defendant.

Next, was there such contributory negligence on the part of the deceased as precludes a recovery by the plaintiff?

On this branch of the case the law is: "If it clearly appears from the undisputed facts, judged of in the light of that common knowledge and experience of which Courts are bound to take notice, that a party has not exercised such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger, the question of negligence is one of law, to be decided by the Court. In all other cases the question must be submitted to the jury under proper instructions." (Fernandes v. Sacramento City Railway Co., 52 Cal. 52, and the numerous authorities there cited.)

This being the law, we are of opinion that the present case was properly submitted to the jury, and that there is no valid reason for disturbing their finding that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the deceased.

It has already been decided here that contributory negligence on the part of the injured party, is a matter of defense, to be proved affirmatively by the defendant, unless it can be inferred from circumstances proved by the plaintiff. (Robinson v. W. P. R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 426, and authorities there cited.)

A part of the circumstances in the present case have already been detailed. It has been seen that the children were preceded a considerable distance on the highway by the witness Meeks. Some distance ahead of him was "Smalley's stage," in which were a number of people. As Meeks approached the railroad track he noticed that the passengers in the stage were waving their hats and handkerchiefs at him, but he did not understand why. As he crossed the track he looked down it and saw the train at a distance, as he supposes, of from 1,500 to 2,000 feet beyond the bridge. Meeks, who was driving a good team, at a good road gait, passed the railroad track, and, observing that the passengers in the stage continued to wave their hats and handkerchiefs, stopped and looked back to see if there was not some one behind him to whom they were waving, and saw the wagon, in which were the children, coming up the grade that leads up to the track at the crossing. Meeks further testified that when the children got close to the track they seemed to have discovered the train and to urge the horse on, and that the horse, as the train approached, swerved to the left, and a moment after he saw the horse in the air.

It will be borne in mind that the testimony went to show that because of intervening trees, those traveling along the highway in the direction the children were going, could not see an approaching train until they had reached a point very near the railroad track. A part of the trees that thus obscured the view, were planted and permitted to grow by the defendant along its track, and within its right of way. At the time of the accident, according to the testimony of Meeks, a wind was blowing, which caused the trees to rustle; and this, it may be, prevented the children—who were much nearer the railroad track and consequently much nearer the trees, than were Meeks or the boy—from hearing the rumbling of the train, while both Meeks and the boy did hear it, according to their testimony. It is not to be presumed that the girl who was driving, recklessly or carelessly, imperiled her own life and the lives of her younger brothers and sisters.

And from the testimony of the engineer of the locomotive, as well as from that of Meeks and the boy, it is quite certain that the children must have been dangerously near the track before they were made aware of the approach of the train. The engineer, according to his testimony, was in the cab and on the lookout. When he first saw them they were within about ten feet of the track; and as he saw the horse before he saw the children, it is not probable if possible that they could have seen the train until they reached a point dangerous in the extreme. The engineer further testified that the horse was on a trot when he first saw him, stopped when within about five feet of the track, turned his head to the driver's left, and then started on again, when the crash came. As the train was running at a rapid rate and was between the bridge and the crossing when the horse was first discovered, of course all of this could have taken at most but a few seconds of time. It is by no means clear that the children could have escaped by the exercise of the utmost coolness and discretion. But in such cases, such a degree of care is never required of those traveling a highway. Certainly these children were not bound to exercise more care than a prudent man approaching such a place would ordinarily exercise for his protection. (Authorities supra, and Schierhold v. N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 40 Cal. 447; Richardson v. N. Y. Central R. R., 45 N. Y. 846; Ernst v. Hudson R. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 9.) There is no proof that they were heedless, and under all the circumstances surrounding the accident, we think it was for the jury to determine whether they exercised that care which the law required of them.

There only remains to be considered whether the damages awarded the plaintiff by the jury — ten thousand eight hundred dollars — are excessive.

It is not claimed by the learned counsel for the appellant that this is so, unless the law be, as claimed by him, that the jury was limited to the actual pecuniary injury sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the loss of the services of his children. Such is not the law in this State. (Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 376 and 377; Beeson v. Green Mountain G. M. Co., 57 Cal. 20; Cook v. Clay-street Hill Co., 9 Pac. C. L. J. 605.)

In view of the rule of damages prevailing here, we can not be reasonably expected to hold that for such a loss as the plaintiff in this case sustained, the amount awarded him by the jury was excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

JACOB A. MORENHAUT ET AL. v. THOMAS BELL
ET AL.

LAW OF THE CASE — FORMER APPEAL — FINDING SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE. —

On a former appeal in this case, reported in 42 Cal. 591, it was held that upon the execution of the deed from Montenegro to Forbes, August 7, 1848, all the title that M. then held to the premises described in it passed to and vested absolutely in F.

Held: Conceding that under the Mexican law the sale might have been rescinded after the execution of said deed, the finding of the Court below that it was not rescinded is sustained by the evidence.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, denying a motion for a new trial. MORRISON, J.

Action to declare a trust in real estate to compel conveyances, etc. The action was originally brought August 21, 1866, and upon the trial had, judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs. The defendants appealed to the former Supreme Court of this State, and at the January term, 1872, thereof, the judgment was reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial. (See Morenhaut et al. v. Barron, 42 Cal. 591.) The pleadings having been amended, the case was again tried in the Court below, and judgment entered April 19, 1878, in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, and this motion having been denied, they took this appeal on the twenty-sixth day of June, 1879. After the decision in bank, a petition for rehearing was presented by the appellants and denied by the Court.

B. S. Brooks, James A. Waymire, and Frederic Hall, for Appellants.

Cope & Boyd, Wilson & Wilson, and James Wheeler, for Respondents.

J. P. Hoge, B. S. Brooks, James A. Waymire, and Frederic Hall, for Appellants, on petition for rehearing.

Appellants respectfully ask for a rehearing. The decision of the Supreme Court is placed solely upon the ground that the Court below found as a fact that the sale was not rescinded. The question was not one of fact. It is not a case of conflict of testimony. The eminent counsel who have at different periods of the history of this case discussed it, have unanimously treated the question as one of law and not of fact. There is no conflict in the testimony. The solution of the question depends upon the written documents presented, and they are to be interpreted by the Court. (Carpentier v. Thirston, 24 Cal. 268; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 id. 220; Chenery v. Palmer, 6 id. 119; Bruck v. Tucker, 32 id. 427, 430.)

The opinion of the Court assumes that upon the former appeal (Morenhaut v. Barron, 42 Cal. 591), it was decided that the instrument of August 7, 1848, was an absolute conveyance to Forbes of all the title vested in Montenegro. The Judge who delivered the opinion upon that appeal refers to the instrument as a "deed," and a portion of the language he uses would indicate that he regarded it as an ordinary common law deed. But it is clear, from the whole opinion, that the construction of the document was not a question before the Court. The Court there decides nothing as to the merits of the case. It was simply held that the District Court erred in finding certain facts that were not pleaded, and therefore not in issue, viz., the facts "that there was an agreement contemporaneous with the execution of the deed, by which Forbes had the right to rescind the sale; and that he exercised that right and rescinded the sale."

The Court said that these facts were not put in issue by the pleadings. A finding in regard to them was "useless and idle." For the same reason—because there was no issue on the subject—the instrument of August 7, 1848, was erroneously admitted in evidence. It was not properly before the District Court, nor before the Supreme Court. Therefore it could not be construed by either so as to make the construction a part of the law of the case. Hence, we contend that its construction is still an open question, and we insist that it can not be construed as an absolute conveyance, because it is admitted by the pleadings, and appears from the evidence, without contradiction, that Forbes failed and refused to pay a part of the purchase money.

The Court:

Upon the execution of the deed of Montenegro to Forbes, August 7, 1848, "all the title that Montenegro then held" to the premises described in it, "passed to and vested absolutely in Forbes." (Morenhaut v. Barron, 42 Cal. 591.)

The only question that is open for our consideration and determination on this appeal is whether the sale from Montenegro to Forbes was subsequently rescinded. Conceding that under the Mexican law such sale might have been rescinded, after the execution of said deed, the Court below found as a fact that it was not, and we think that the findings of the Court upon that and all the other issues were justified by the evidence.

Judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial affirmed.

MYRIOK, J., expressed no opinion.

ISIDOR DANIELWITZ v. ANN SHEPPARD ET AL.

CONTRACT AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY — CONTRACT BY ADMINISTRATRIX OR BY HEIR OF DECEASED PERSON AS TO COMMISSIONS OF BROKER — ADMINISTRATION — ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS. — The defendant Ann Sheppard, as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, under an order of the Court, sold real property belonging to the estate for the sum of $28,500, and reported the sale to the Court for confirmation. Pending the proceedings for confirmation the administratrix and her co-defendant, Jennie Sheppard, an heir of deceased, made the following agreement in writing: "San Francisco, April 28, 1877. We hereby agree and promise to pay Isidor Danielwitz all the money in excess or over and above the sum of twenty-nine thousand and five hundred dollars ($29,500), United States gold coin, for his services in the way of a commission for obtaining a purchaser for property sold on the sixteenth day of April, 1877, by order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, belonging to the estate of John R. T. M. Sheppard, deceased. Said purchaser shall pay the sum of $31,350 gold coin or more; said sum being an advance of ten per cent. or more, as provided by law for said property so sold; the essence of this agreement being the payment to said Isidor Danielwitz of all sum or sums of money obtained or bid for such property sold as hereinafter described in excess of the sum of $29,500, gold coin, irrespective of what said excess may be as the payment to him, said Danielwitz, in the procuring of said purchaser. Said property is described as follows: [Here follows the description of the property described in the complaint.] This agreement being made with said Danielwitz in good faith, and which we promise faithfully to carry out as hereinbefore stated. Ann Sheppard, Administratrix of the estate of J. R. T. M. Sheppard, deceased. Jennie Sheppard, Heir. Witnessed by R. B. Turner." Afterwards, to wit, on the thirtieth of April, 1877, the plaintiff procured one Corcoran to bid, in writing, for the property,

the sum of $31,500. On the same day one McLaren put in an advance bid of $34,500, and on the first of May following, Cortcoran bid the sum of $37,000, for which last named sum the property was sold and confirmed to him; and he thereupon paid to the estate that sum and received the administratrix's deed. The action was brought against the defendants, "as heirs of the estate," to recover the difference between $29,500 and $37,500. Held: Even if the agreement be treated as the individual contract of Ann and Jennie Sheppard, it is contrary to the provisions of statute, against the policy of the law, and is invalid.

APPEAL by defendants from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. WILSON, J.

Action on contract. The Court below found that the contract was executed by the defendants, as heirs of the estate, and not in any representative capacity, and that it was so understood and agreed at the time of its execution. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of two thousand three hundred and twenty-nine dollars and forty-seven cents, being the difference between the sum of twenty-nine thousand five hundred dollars, and the original bid of McLaren and interest thereon. Both the plaintiff and the defendants appealed. For the report of the case on the plaintiff's appeal see Danielwitz v. Sheppard, No. 7,984, opinion filed December 12, 1882, post, 342. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Tully R. Wise, for appellant.

Eugene N. Deuprey and W. M. Pierson, for Respondent.

THE COURT:

J. R. T. M. Sheppard died in the City and County of San Francisco, leaving certain real estate therein. His widow, Ann Sheppard, was appointed administratrix of his estate, and afterwards obtained an order directing certain of the real estate to be sold. One Regan bid therefor the sum of twenty-eight thousand five hundred dollars, which bid was accepted by the administratrix, who made return of the sale with an application on her part to the Court for confirmation thereof.

An existing statute declared: "Upon the hearing, the Court must examine the return and witnesses in relation to the same, and if the proceedings were unfair, or the sum bid disproportionate to the value, and if it appear that a sum exceeding such bid at least ten per cent., exclusive of the expenses of a new sale, may be obtained, the Court may vacate the sale and direct another to be had, of which notice must be given, and the sale in all respects conducted as if no previous sale had taken place; if an offer of ten per cent. more in amount than that named in the return be made to the Court in writing, by a responsible person, it is in the discretion of the Court to accept such offer and confirm the sale to such person or to order a new sale." In this condition of fact and law the following agreement in writing was entered into:

"SAN FRANCISCO, April 28, 1877.

"We hereby agree and promise to pay Isidor Danielwitz all the money in excess or over and above the sum of twenty-nine thousand and five hundred dollars, United States gold coin, for his services in the way of a commission for obtaining a purchaser for property sold on the sixteenth day of April, 1877, by order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, belonging to the estate of John R. T. M. Sheppard, deceased. Said purchaser shall pay the sum of thirty-one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars, gold coin, or more; said sum being an advance of ten per cent., or more, as provided by law for said property so sold; the essence of this agreement being the payment to said Isidor Danielwitz of all sum or sums of money obtained or bid for such property sold as hereinafter described, in excess of the sum of twenty-nine thousand five hundred dollars, gold coin, irrespective of what said excess may be as the payment to him, said Danielwitz, in the procuring of such purchaser. Said property is described as follows: [Here follows the description of the property described in the complaint.] This agreement being made with said Danielwitz in good faith, and which we promise faithfully to carry out as hereinbefore stated.

"ANN SHEPPARD,

"Administratrix of the estate of J. R. T. M. Sheppard, deceased.

"JENNIE SHEPPARD, Heir.

"Witnessed by R. B. Turner."

Afterwards, to wit, on the thirtieth day of April, 1877, the plaintiff procured one Corcoran to bid, in writing, for the property, the sum of thirty-one thousand five hundred dollars. On the same day one McLeran put in an advance bid of thirty-four thousand five hundred dollars, and on the first of May following, Corcoran bid the sum of thirty-seven thousand dollars, for which last-named sum the property was sold and confirmed to him; and he thereupon paid to the estate that sum, and received the administratrix's deed.

The plaintiff claims that, by virtue of the agreement above set forth, he is entitled to the difference between the sum of twenty-nine thousand five hundred dollars and the sum of thirty-seven thousand dollars, for which the property was sold to Corcoran; and he brought this action against Ann Sheppard and Jennie Sheppard, as "heirs of the estate" of J. R. T. M. Sheppard, deceased, to recover that difference.

Even if the agreement be treated as the individual contract of Ann and Jennie Sheppard, it is invalid. Neither of them had any power so to dispose of the proceeds of sale of the real property of the deceased Sheppard. That property could only be sold in the manner pointed out by statute, and all the money derived from its sale became assets of the estate, and subject to disposition only in accordance with law. The disposition contemplated by the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced in this action, of a portion of those proceeds, is unauthorized by any provision of the statute, and contrary to the policy of the law.

Judgment and order reversed.

S. L. DEWEY v. FRANK BROS. & CO.

SURPRISE AS GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL. — The plaintiff on the trial testified that A. S. Frank, an agent of defendants, gave to him before the commencement of the action, an account stated, showing a balance in favor of the plaintiff and then and there promised that the defendants would pay it. A. S. Frank at the time of the trial was absent from the State. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial on, among other grounds, that they were taken by surprise by this testimony of the plaintiff. The Court below granted the motion on the ground of surprise, and the plaintiff appealed.

Held: The defendants were informed at the commencement of the suit, March 10, 1880, that the action was brought to recover a balance alleged to be due on an account stated. They knew before that day that their agent, Mr. A. S. Frank, had been sent by them to the plaintiff to make some adjustment of the affairs between them and the plaintiff. They knew that the mission of A. S. Frank and its result might be of importance, and might be used by plaintiff in making out his case. They had at the trial on the eighteenth of December, 1880, the testimony of the plaintiff as to the result of the mission, and made no motion for a continuance, nor expressed any surprise other than such as would arise from evidence contrary to their own version of the facts. The case was then argued and submitted, and decided February 28, 1881. Not till after the decision did they present the view of surprise; there was no surprise in its legal meaning, and the order granting a new trial on that ground is erroneous.

FINDINGS — HOW FAR CONCLUSIVE ON APPEAL FROM ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL. — If a new trial be granted by the Court below on a stated ground, and an appeal be taken from the order to the Supreme Court, the Appellate Court, in searching for other grounds for sustaining the order, must take the findings, so far as there is any evidence to support them as true, on all questions of fact found thereby.

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles granting a new trial. HOWARD, J.

Action on account stated. On the trial the plaintiff testified that before the commencement of the action, one A. S. Frank, an agent of the defendants, presented to him at Los Angeles an account stated between the defendants and the plaintiff showing an indebtedness from defendants to him, the plaintiff, and then and there promised that the defendants would pay it. A. S. Frank at the time of the trial was absent from the State. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial on, among other grounds, "surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." On the hearing of the motion the affidavit of A. S. Frank was offered and considered. In it he denied that the account was ever intended as an account stated, or that he ever promised the plaintiff that the defendants would pay the plaintiff any sum whatever, and deposed that instead of the defendants owing the plaintiff, he, the plaintiff, owed the defendants a large balance, and at the time referred to the plaintiff promised and endeavored to close the account by giving his note with other security to the defendants. The Court below granted the motion of defendants for a new trial, basing its action on the ground of the surprise claimed. This case on appeal was first heard in Department Two of this Court. As the decision of the Department is referred to in the opinion of the Court in bank, the opinion in Department is here given "in extenso."

"In this cause judgment passed for plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial on several grounds, among which was surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, and errors of law, occurring at the trial and excepted to by the defendants. This motion was granted on the ground of surprise. The plaintiff appeals from this order.

"We have examined the questions as to surprise, and are of opinion that there was no surprise in its legal meaning. The Court was not then justified in the exercise of a proper discretion in granting a new trial.

"If the order could be sustained on any of the other grounds on which defendants moved, we would affirm it. We have examined them, and do not think they justify an affirmance of the order. It is proper to add that as to the failure of the Court below to rule on the admissibility of certain correspondence offered by defendants and objected to by plaintiff, the ruling on which was reserved by the Court until the evidence was closed, we are of opinion that the point is not before us for decision. This was an irregularity in the proceedings of the Court, and the defendants did not move on that ground. It seems to have been treated as an error of law. If it is an error of law it could only be brought before the Court on affidavit. (C. C. P., § 658.) It was not, however, an error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the moving party, for the record shows no exception.

"The order is reversed and the cause remanded."

Brunson & Wells, for Appellant.

The counter-affidavit of plaintiff states facts not denied, by which it appears that six months before the commencement of this action, defendants were, by plaintiff's attorneys, fully advised of the nature of the action, of the acts of their agents in stating the account, etc.

The suit was commenced March 9, 1880, and from the allegations of the complaint, defendants were informed that we had an account which we relied upon as a stated account. If they wanted further information it was available under the provisions of Section 1000, C. C. P., but as appears by their affidavit they "knew the facts of the case." The showing is not sufficient to warrant the action of the Court. A party can not move for a new trial on ground not distinctly made at the trial. If surprised, he should have asked for a continuance at the time. He will not be allowed to speculate on the chance of a favorable decision on other points, and if he fails on them, fall back on his motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise. (Schellhous v. Ball, 29 Cal. 608; Delmas

v. Martin, 39 id. 555, 557, and 558; Ames v. Howard, 1 Sumn. 482; Carr v. Gale, 1 Curt. C. C. 384.)

A party can not be surprised by the other making good, by proof, a fact distinctly put in issue by the pleadings. (Armstrong v. Davis, 41 Cal. 499.) Surprise at the testimony of a witness called by the adverse party, is no ground for a new trial, it not appearing that the party against whom the new testimony was given had been misled by previous statements of the witness as to what he would testify. (Taylor v. Cal. Stage Co., 6 id. 228; Live Yankee Co. v. Oregon Co., 7 id. 40.)

In this case our verified complaint gave defendants notice of our testimony. When a party defendant is taken by surprise by the testimony of a witness produced by the opposite party before the close of the trial, and knows of a witness who resides out of the State by whom he can contradict the witness whose testimony surprises him, he should move for a continuance at once in order to take the deposition of the witness who resides out of the State, and not wait to move for a new trial on the ground of surprise. (Ferrer v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., 47 Cal. 418; 38 id. 456.)

Glassell & Smith and Warren Olney, for Respondents.

A motion for a new trial is a motion addressed to the sound legal discretion of the Court, and the Appellate Court will interfere only in case of a plain abuse of such discretion. (Moulton v. Holmes, 7 P. C. L. J. 228; Hall v. Bark Emily Banning, 33 Cal. 525, and cases cited; Quinn v. Kenyon, 22 id. 82; Peters v. Foss, 16 id. 357; Drake v. Palmer, 2 id. 181; O'Brien v. Brady, 23 id. 243; Hastings v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 10 id. 341; Harston's Practice, § 657, page 290, and cases cited.)

In this case (assuming—as we must assume—that the Court below believed the affidavits of the Franks), it appeared that the plaintiff had won his case by a deliberately false statement upon the very point in issue, which could not be contradicted on account of the absence of A. S. Frank from the State. A motion for a continuance would have been of no avail because, owing to the absence of A. S. Frank, the defendant was not prepared to make an affidavit as to what his testimony would be. (Rodriguez v. Comstock, 24 Cal. 88.)

The objection that a motion for a continuance was not made, like all others, is addressed to the sound discretion of the Court. (Moore v. Los Angeles Infirmary, 49 Cal. 669.) And "cases may and do arise in which it ought not to be enforced." (Delmas v. Martin, 39 Cal. 558.)

THE COURT:

This case was heard in Department Two of this Court, and a decision was rendered July 28, 1882. (9 Pac. C. L. J. 813.) Subsequently a hearing by the Court in bank was granted, which hearing has been had. We have examined the transcript and the points made, and are satisfied with the decision of the Department. As the new trial was granted on the ground of surprise, we must take the findings, so far as there is evidence to support them, as true on all questions of fact found thereby. Where a new trial is granted upon a stated ground, we can not, in searching for other grounds for sustaining the order, consider the facts as other than found, if there be evidence to support the findings. Otherwise, we should be speculating upon what might have been the decision as to the facts rather than relying upon what was the decision. As stated in the opinion of the Department, there was no surprise in its legal meaning for which a new trial should have been granted. The defendants were informed at the commencement of the suit, March 10, 1880, that the action was brought to recover a balance alleged to be due on an account stated. They knew before that day that their agent, Mr. A. S. Frank, had been sent by them to the plaintiff to make some adjustment of the affairs between them and the plaintiff. They knew that the mission of A. S. Frank and its result might be of importance, and might be used by plaintiff in making out his case. They had at the trial on the eighteenth of December, 1880, the testimony of the plaintiff as to the result of the mission, and made no motion for a continuance, nor expressed any surprise other than such as would arise from evidence contrary to their own version of the facts. The case was then argued and submitted, and decided February 28, 1881. Not till after the decision did they present the view of surprise; and we think it was then disappointment rather than surprise; therefore, the Department was correct in saying there was no surprise in its legal meaning. See Section 657, C. C. P.: "Surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against."

The order is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

ALVINZA HAYWARD v. GEORGE E. ROGERS.

RIGHT OF PLEDGER OF MINING STOCK AS AGAINST PLEDGOR — ASSUMPSIT —

INSTRUCTIONS. — Action to recover a balance alleged to be due on a promissory note and for moneys laid out and advanced for the benefit of defendant. Answer alleging payment by means of a sale by plaintiff of shares of stock of defendant held as security, leaving a balance due defendant and cross-complaint therefor. Rogers, the defendant, contended that Hayward, plaintiff, held a certain number of shares of Savage mining stock as security for money advanced by him to Rogers, and that Hayward, without his knowledge, sold the stock; that afterwards, and while he was ignorant of such sale, Hayward procured a power of attorney from him to sell said stock, and then sold of the stock of the same mining company the same number of shares that he, Hayward, held prior to said first sale as security for his said advances; that Hayward accounted to him for the sum realized on the sale of the stock last sold only, which was much less than the sum realized on the sale of the stock first sold, and which stock, first sold, R. contended was the stock which H. had as such security. On the other hand the plaintiff contended that he constantly held the identical stock certificates which he took as security from the time when he received them up to the time when he admitted he sold them, or that if he did not during all of such time have the identical stock certificates in his possession, that he did, during all of such time, have other stock certificates of the same mining company for the same number of shares, which, during all of such time, he was able, ready, and willing to deliver to the defendant upon his paying the sum for which said certificates were held as security.

Held: Taking the defendant's version of the transaction as correct, and the fact that it is not charged in the cross-complaint that he, the defendant, was induced to do what he did, by reason of any representations of the plaintiff as to the condition of the mine, or the then present or prospective value of the stock, or in regard to the quantity of it which other persons were selling, the Court did not err in sustaining objections of the plaintiff to the introduction of evidence of what plaintiff said to the defendant in regard to those subjects.

Held, further: The Court did not err in allowing the witness Peart (business manager of the plaintiff) to be asked how much stock Hayward carried for Rogers between certain dates. Peart was better qualified to answer that question than any other witness, including Hayward himself.

Held: further: As to this question to the witness Peart, appellant's counsel seems to have assumed that the answer of the witness would contradict all the evidence to which the objections referred. But as the trial Court could not have anticipated the answer of the witness, there was no error in overruling the objections to the question. No motion was made to strike out the answer; and according to the evidence there is no such contradiction.

Id.—The evidence as to the number of shares of stock that Hayward was carrying for persons other than Rogers, and as to the contents of the letter which Rogers wrote to Hayward, may not have been relevant to any issue in the case, but if error there was in overruling the objections to it, it was error without injury.

CONVERSION OF MINING STOCK BY PLEDGER.—Upon the main issue in the case, the Court charged the jury as follows: "If you find that Hayward had sold the 690 shares before the execution of the power; that, you remember, was July 13th; and had been ready, able, and willing to transfer to Rogers an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company by a proper and valid certificate, then and in that case it was not material that these facts should be imparted to Rogers at the time he executed the power of attorney, and the power was a valid and binding one. It was not material to tell him that, for the reason that that was a thing that Hayward had a right to do anyway, and the law says, that he was selling his own stock, and not Rogers' stock, provided he was all the time able, ready, and willing to respond to Rogers, in case he should come and demand his stock. And if you find that Hayward had sold the identical 690 shares, and that he was not at the time of such sales able, willing, and ready to deliver to Rogers a similar number of shares, then, and in that case, the suppression of those facts operated as a fraud upon Rogers and destroyed the force and effect of the power of attorney, there being nothing for the power to operate upon."

Held: This was a correct and sufficiently clear exposition of the law applicable to that issue, and it obviated the necessity of the Court's giving any other or further instructions upon it. Therefore the refusal of the Court to give the instructions asked on the points covered by the instruction given, is not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment.

WHEN JURY MAY NOT DISREGARD EVIDENCE OF WITNESS.—The Court also charged the jury as follows: "When facts are testified to by witnesses who are not impeached, and there is no inherent improbability in the statement, the jury are bound to take that evidence as proving the particular fact; and the jury have no right capriciously to disregard evidence where it is not controverted and the character of the witnesses is good, and the story is probable."

Held: Though there should be no necessity for such an instruction, still as a matter of law the instruction is correct.

JUDGMENT MODIFIED TO CORRESPOND WITH VERDICT.—The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $295,345.38, and the judgment was entered for the sum of $305,650.95.

Held: The judgment should be modified so as to correspond with the verdict of the jury.

APPEAL by the defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Nineteenth Judicial District of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco. WHEELER, J.

Action on promissory note, and on account of moneys laid out and advanced for benefit of defendant. The complaint was filed February 25, 1876. An amended complaint was filed September 8, 1876, and prays judgment against defendant for the sum of $80,000, and interest thereon at one per cent. per month, compounded monthly, from June 4, 1872, to December 2, 1872; and from that date on $20,278.44, alleged to be due on a promissory note of defendant to plaintiff, executed June 4, 1872; and for the sum of $179,201.56, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from April 14, 1874, for moneys paid out and advanced by plaintiff for benefit of defendant, and costs of suit. The defendant, on the twentieth day of July, A. D. 1876, filed his original answer and cross-complaint, which pleadings of the defendant were twice amended. The defendant set up payment of the indebtedness and the stock transactions between himself and the plaintiff, referred to in the opinion of the Court and also in the instructions given and refused, hereinafter set forth. The plaintiff answered and denied the cross-complaint. On the trial of the action, the Court instructed the jury as follows:

"Gentlemen of the jury: This case, which is about now drawing to a close, as you have observed, is one involving a large amount, not only when viewed from the standpoint of the plaintiff's claim, but also when we consider the cross-bill or cross-complaint that the defendant makes. This, the magnitude of the case, at first almost startles the jury and the Court; but that should simply amount to this, to insure upon the part of the jury a very careful consideration of the evidence, and also a careful attention to what the Court may declare to you to be the law of the case; for with the law the jury have nothing to do, nor has the Court. We take it from writers upon the subjects and also from the declaration and interpretation of the law as laid down by the higher Courts of the land; and where our own Supreme Court has laid down the law in a given case, that becomes binding upon this Court, and it follows that it is the duty of this Court, in administering the law in cases where it has been settled in the Supreme Court, to state it to you as that Court has declared; and it is your duty, without any regard to any affections or sympathy or any other motives that may control you, to pay strict attention to that law, and to shape your verdict accordingly.

"This case briefly stated, is an action on the part of Hayward, the plaintiff, to recover from the defendant a balance alleged to be due for moneys laid out and advanced for the benefit of the defendant, and at his request; the sum that it is shown that he advanced, is $267,667.25; this includes the assessments that were paid by him from time to time upon the stock that he held for Mr. Rogers; concerning this gross amount there seems to be no difference of opinion; there seems to be no contest here in the case; Hayward then gave Rogers credit for the amount of $68,000, and odd dollars, which grew out of the sales which he alleges he made, in November, 1872, of something about $55,000, and also the sale of April 14, 1874, for $12,000. Those two sums added together making an aggregate of $68,000, which the plaintiff deducts from his $267,000, which he had advanced, leaving a balance of $199,591.87. Upon that sum the plaintiff claims interest according to various rates, as expressed in different promissory notes and so forth, and claims that now there is a grand total of $295,349.38.

"The computation of the interest has been made in your presence, and I do not understand that there is any controversy upon that subject — relying, I suppose, upon the familiar rule that figures do not lie; and I believe the respective attorneys for the parties do not disagree upon that computation. Then it stands thus, gentlemen, that if the defense that is set up in this case, if you should determine that it amounts to nothing under the law and the evidence, then your verdict would necessarily be for the plaintiff in that sum, two hundred and ninety-eight thousand dollars, or thereabouts, and if there were no counter-claim set up by the defendant, the case would be made plain, and that would be the result, and that would necessarily be your verdict, for when facts are testified to by witnesses who are not impeached, and there is no inherent improbability in the statement, the jury are bound to take that evidence as proving the particular fact; and the jury have no right capriciously to disregard evidence where it is not controverted and the character of the witnesses is good and the story is probable.

"But under this case thus made out the defendant claims that between April 21 and May 14, 1872, the plaintiff sold of his stock five hundred and seventy shares, for the aggregate sum of three hundred and eighty-seven thousand six hundred dollars; that between July 6th and July 13th; and July 13th is a point in the case, that being the day on which the power of attorney was executed; he claims that between July 6th and July 13th the plaintiff sold one hundred and twenty shares more, for which he realized twenty-four thousand dollars, and that on April 14, 1874, he sold one hundred and ninety shares more, that is what is called the Hall stock, for the sum of twelve thousand and odd dollars, thus making an aggregate of receipts of four hundred and twenty-three thousand seven hundred and seventy-six dollars. Of course, if this claim should prevail, it would result in a verdict in favor of the defendant; after deducting or making the proper allowances for interest and so forth, I believe the attorney for the defendant claims it would aggregate now about two hundred thousand dollars. Those are the figures in round numbers, so far as the claims of the different parties are concerned.

"Now, as to the transaction itself, it appears from the evidence, that in the spring of 1872, about April 22d, that Hayward took up for Rogers a large amount of stock and 'carried it' for him, as the phrase runs among brokers and business men. The evidence of Rogers is, that there was nothing said about the terms upon which he was to carry it; there was nothing said about the rate of interest, nor about the time when he was to pay Hayward, nor, he says, did he give Hayward any power of sale; on the other hand, Hayward testifies that he made this advance upon the sole and express condition that he was at liberty to deal with the stock as his own, to sell it when and where and as he pleased.

"The evidence upon that point, then, of course, is contradictory; but it is not a material matter, for the reason that if Hayward is chargeable with the sale of the stocks made at high figures in April and May, then Rogers would be entitled to that credit, and Rogers does not repudiate that sale, but in substance ratifies it, and seeks the benefit of the sale for the very plain reason that the stock has never reached so high a figure since. If Hayward had no authority to sell the stock, and he had sold it at low figures at that time, and the stock had since that risen to a higher figure, as a general rule, the pledgor, which is Rogers, could have recovered from the wrongdoer the highest market price of the stock between the day of the sale and the day of trial.

"I charge you, then, that the relation of Hayward and Rogers was that of pledgor and pledgee, and if you find that there was no agreement between them at the time the stock passed into Hayward's hands, authorizing Hayward to sell the stock, then he had no right to sell it without first demanding payment of Rogers and giving him due notice of the sale.

"Now comes the question, gentlemen, as to whether the sale by Hayward of the identical certificates that Rogers left with him was a breach of Rogers' rights. In other words, whether Rogers has the right to claim the high price at which Hayward is alleged to have sold those particular certificates during April and May. The Supreme Court of this State, in a case which arose some years ago, after very elaborate consideration, and in which all of the Judges agreed, and upon a petition for rehearing having been granted and the case heard again, they all agreed again in the first decision, held that one certificate of stock is as good as another; that all shares of stock are alike; and that if the pledgee of the stock, that is Hayward, holds himself at all times ready and able and willing to deliver to the pledgor, upon demand, an equal number of similar shares in the same company, he has the right to do that, and the pledgor is not injured by the fact that the pledgee sold the particular certificates.

"I, therefore, charge you that if you find that Hayward did sell and deliver the identical 690 shares before July 13, 1872, without authority from Rogers, he would not thereby become liable to Rogers beyond nominal damages, if he was at all times ready, able, and willing to transfer to Rogers an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company by a proper and valid certificate. I hope the jury understands this proposition, because it is the leading and important point in this case; and this decision of the Supreme Court, while it did not meet the approbation of the entire profession, is still not a new decision; the same doctrine, precisely, was laid down by Chancellor Kent, more than fifty years ago, in the case where bank stock, of the old United States Bank, had been pledged with a broker of the city of New York; and it stands precisely as if one of you had stored with a warehouseman a hundred bushels of wheat, and he had placed it in with a thousand bushels more of his own, in bulk, not sacked or in barrels, but had been emptied into one vast bin; now, the warehouseman would have the right to go on selling the wheat from that amount in bulk; and, although he might happen to sell the identical hundred bushels you had deposited, it would not be any wrong to you providing he always kept on hand a hundred bushels of wheat of the quality and character, which he was ready to deliver to you on demand. Probably that is all that is necessary to say on that point; but I wish you to clearly understand it, as the case must necessarily turn upon that question.

"I instruct you further, that inasmuch as Rogers never made any demand on the plaintiff for his stock before July 13th, and never directed him to sell any, the plaintiff was at liberty, as he sold stock from time to time from the mass of shares on hand, to credit such sales to such particular account as he pleased; and that doctrine finds analogy in the case where a man is owing you upon two accounts, or upon a note and account, and he meets you and says: 'Here is a hundred dollars towards what I owe you.' You are at liberty to apply it upon the note, or to apply upon the account, as you see fit; if he gives no directions to the contrary, or rather, if he does not specify upon which particular account or indebtedness he intends the money to apply, you can place it to whichever you choose. So in this case, if you find that Hayward had a large amount of Savage stock on hand, and he sold from time to time, he had the right, until a demand was made by some pledgor, or a direction from some pledgor for him to sell, he had the right to credit to such accounts as he pleased during his sales from time to time. Of course, gentlemen, it is for you to determine if these credits were made in good faith, and if they were made about the time of the sales. You will remember that the books were given in evidence, and there were various sales made between April and July 13th, and the balance was made at the end of each month, showing that the 690 shares were always to the credit of Rogers in those statements; it is for you to determine, of course, whether that was a truthful and fair statement of the transaction. If you find that Hayward had sold the 690 shares before the execution of the power, and that at all times from April 22d to July 13th, he had been ready, able, and willing to transfer to Rogers an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company by a proper and valid certificate, then and in that case it was not material that these facts should be imparted to Rogers at the time he executed the power of attorney and the power was a valid and binding one.

"Now upon that point the rule is, that when a man in his senses, in the possession of his faculties, deliberately executes a written agreement, he is presumed to have understood the agreement and is bound by its terms unless there was fraud, or mistake, or surprise, or something of that kind, that unfairly prevented him from knowing what he was doing; as for instance, if a man who is unable to read, signs a document, and it is read to him, but falsely read, a portion is suppressed or something is put in that is not there, in reading, and signs it, he is not bound, because he was imposed upon; or if a man is blind and an instrument is misread to him and he executes it, he is not bound by it. So if there is any suppression or misstatement of a material fact, and through which a party is led innocently to sign an agreement, that amounts to what the law calls a fraud, and he is not bound by it.

"I therefore have charged you that if Hayward — and will read this again now, that you may better understand it: If you find that Hayward had sold the 690 shares before the execution of the power; that, you remember, was July 13th, and had been ready, able, and willing to transfer to Rogers an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company by a proper and valid certificate, then and in that case it was not material that these facts should be imparted to Rogers at the time he executed the power of attorney, and the power was a valid and binding one. It was not material to tell him that, for the reason that that was a thing that Hayward had a right to do anyway, and the law says, that he was selling his own stock, and not Rogers' stock, provided he was all the time able, ready, and willing to respond to Rogers, in case he should come and demand his stock. And if you find that Hayward had sold the identical 690 shares, and that he was not at the time of such sales able, willing, and ready to deliver to Rogers a similar number of shares, then, and in that case, the suppression of those facts operated as a fraud upon Rogers and destroyed the force and effect of the power of attorney, there being nothing for the power to operate upon.

"As to the other defense; the defense that is made to Rogers' cross-bill, namely, the Statute of Limitations. I will simply state that it is conceded that if Rogers knew all of these circumstances more than three years before he filed his cross-bill, then this defense of his is barred by the statute: 'An action must be brought within three years, if it relies on the ground of fraud or mistake; the cause of action in such case is not to be deemed to be accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake.' Now, if Rogers discovered this fraud that he alleges Hayward perpetrated on him more than three years before he filed his cross-complaint in this case, then his action is barred, and you must pay no attention to the defense.

"Actual notice of these facts is not always necessary: 'Notice is, first, actual, which consists in express information of a fact; second, constructive, which is implied by law.' This is the section to which I call your attention now: 'Every person who has actual notice of a circumstance sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, has constructive notice of the fact itself.'

"I have been asked to charge you, that the rendition of the account by Hayward, in August, 1873, showing all these sales, was a circumstance that should be taken into consideration in determining the question as to whether Rogers did have notice of those frauds more than three years before the filing of his cross-bill; and I instruct you, of course, that that is a circumstance that you are at liberty to take into consideration; the evidence being that Hayward rendered him an account of sales in August, 1873, and by that account it appeared that the whole 690 shares was sold after the power of attorney, and in the month of November, 1872, realizing some 55,000 and odd dollars.

"Here are two instructions that I give you at the request of defendant's counsel: 'That when an agent is dealing with the principal, or a trustee with the beneficiary of his trust, it is his bounden duty to see that everything is fair, and that the principal or beneficiary has all the information as to the matters of fact necessary, to show him his precise situation in relation to the business on hand.' Second. 'It is no defense or excuse to the plaintiff, that stockholders have a custom amongst themselves, in the delivery of shares of stock to persons with whom they deal, to deliver any certificate they see fit.' This, of course, was not a transaction between two brokers, and it is clear that Mr. Rogers' rights are not to be determined, nor Mr. Hayward's either, by the rules that this limited and private association, known as the Board of Brokers, have among themselves.

"Now, gentlemen, I have endeavored to state to you plainly the principles upon which this case is to be decided, and you will observe that the case pretty much turns, indeed it does turn, upon the main question: that is, if you find that Hayward sold those shares before July 18th; as to whether he was during all of those times, able, ready, and willing to deliver Mr. Rogers his 690 shares at any time that he might call for them, if he should call and pay Hayward the money he had advanced, if he was ready to respond, then Hayward did precisely what the law says he may do; he sold the stock, and he had a right to sell it, for his own account or for any account that he pleased, so long as he retained the proper number for Rogers, to give him upon demand.

"Now, gentlemen, the law makes you the judges, the exclusive judges, of all matters of fact; and it is for you to determine, wherever there has been a conflict, upon which side the truth lies; and you are to judge from the appearance of men, and you have a right to take into consideration their demeanor upon the witness stand, their interest in the event of the suit, the probabilities of their statements and all of the surrounding circumstances, and to give such verdict, under that evidence, as your consciences and judgments may dictate. The fact that the case is large, should make you careful; but should not deter you from rendering such a verdict as you think the evidence, as given before you, and the law as given you by the Court, will justify.

"Gentlemen, the case is now with you for your consideration."

Among others refused, the following instructions were asked by the defendant, and refused by the Court:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff sold certificates of Savage stock received by him for the defendant, at any time prior to his procurement of the power of attorney produced here, without the authority of the defendant, it makes no difference how much Savage stock the plaintiff had on hand belonging to persons other than himself, or belonging to Hayward & Jones."

"If the jury believe from the evidence, that at the time when the plaintiff procured the power of attorney produced here, he did not communicate, or cause to be communicated to the defendant, that he had sold or otherwise disposed of any of the certificates of Savage stock he had received for the defendant, and that the defendant was then ignorant of the fact that the plaintiff had so sold any of the said certificates, they will not take the said power of attorney further into consideration."

"If it appears from the evidence that the plaintiff, at any time prior to the procurement of the power of attorney produced here, sold without the defendant's consent any certificates of Savage stock received by him for the defendant as security for money loaned the defendant, and that that power was prepared by the plaintiff, or his agent or agents, without any suggestion as to the numbers of and upon the certificates therein described and identifying the same, and that the defendant did not then know that the plaintiff had so sold any of the said certificates, then that power is void."

"If the defendant, when he executed the power of attorney produced on this trial, did not know that the plaintiff had sold any of his certificates of Savage stock, then that power is void."

"It makes no difference as to the validity of the power of attorney produced on this trial, whether the plaintiff or his manager, Peart, knew that the plaintiff had sold any of the certificates of Savage stock belonging to the defendant or not, at the time when that power was procured."

"It makes no difference whether the plaintiff placed as many shares of Savage stock as he had sold of the defendant's in an envelope, or otherwise segregated such a number for the defendant or not, unless the shares so replaced, belonged to the plaintiff."

"If the jury believe from the evidence, that nothing was said as to the plaintiff having power to sell the stock to be delivered him for defendant at the time when the plaintiff agreed to advance him moneys upon the same in April, 1872, and that before the power of attorney produced on this trial was executed, the plaintiff sold any of the certificates of Savage stock received by him for the defendant, and that the defendant did not, at the time he executed said power, know that the plaintiff had sold any of the said certificates, and that, thereafter, there ever was a time when the plaintiff did not have as many shares of Savage stock on hand of his own, then the defendant is entitled to recover of the plaintiff the highest market value of Savage stock at the time or times when the plaintiff so sold the said certificates, or any of them, for as many shares as the plaintiff did not always have and keep on hand."

"If the defendant delivered shares of stock to the plaintiff as collateral security for money loaned, and no further stipulation was made between them, the plaintiff had no right to sell the same or any part of the same, without first demanding the money due him, or, in case of default in payment, without giving notice when and where he would sell the said shares at public auction."

"It is not enough for one who has sold certificates of stock belonging to another, without his consent, to produce and offer the owner an equal number of shares of the same stock, but the party who so sold must have always had on hand of his own that number of shares."

"It is no defense for the plaintiff that his books bore the right number of shares of stock to the credit of the defendant during the time he was responsible to the defendant for that number of shares, but it must appear that the plaintiff had in his possession, or under his absolute control, that number of shares of his own all that time."

The verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff. The defendant took this appeal and brought up the evidence in a bill of exceptions. After the decision in bank a petition for rehearing was presented by the appellant and denied by the Court.

Calhoun Benham, McClure, Dwinelle & Plaisance, and H. K. Moore, for Appellant.

The third assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in telling the jury, as it did, that when facts are testified to by witnesses who are not impeached, and whose statements involve no inherent improbability, the jury are bound to accept them as proved." To tell the jury they were bound to accept the facts referred to as proved, at the point and in the connection when they were so told, evinced partiality.

The fourth assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in allowing a witness to be asked, against the defendant's objection, whether there were other persons or not for whom the plaintiff was carrying stock while he was carrying stock for the defendant." The question was irrelevant. To let the jury know Hayward was carrying stock for others was calculated to mislead them by suggesting that he was thereby able to respond for Rogers' shares with shares of those other persons.

The fifth assignment of error was as follows: "The Court erred in allowing Hayward, when on the stand as a witness, to state, against defendant's objection, the contents of a letter received from the defendant before the suit was brought, asking him for a loan, and expressing, according to the witness, his dissatisfaction with the transaction they had with each other in the Savage stock." The matter elicited was irrelevant, and calculated and intended to hold the defendant up to contempt and prejudice him with the jury.

The sixth assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in allowing Peart, a witness, to be asked, against defendant's objection, how much stock the plaintiff carried for Rogers during the period beginning April 22, 1872, and ending November, 1872." The question involved a conclusion of law. It made the witness judge of what "carrying" was, and the answer that Hayward carried the proper number of shares for Rogers until November, 1872, allowed as it was, formally authorized the jury so to find. It decided the whole case.

The evidence referred to in the seventh and eighth assignments of error was improperly excluded. Those assignments are as follows: "The Court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to prove that the plaintiff, repeatedly, before the break in Savage stock of that year, and after April 22, 1872, told the defendant that the Savage mine was a good mine—was very valuable; that the stock was sure to reach $1,000 a share; that it could not get below $500 a share, as he would take it all rather than it should go below $500 a share."

"The Court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to prove that the plaintiff told the defendant, after April 22, 1872, and before the break in Savage stock of that year, that the Savage mine was very rich, and that the developments in it on certain levels were better than they were in Crown Point, and that the Savage was a better mine than Crown Point, which had been a very rich mine."

The evidence showed Hayward had sold the identical certificates belonging to Rogers, calling for one hundred and twenty-five shares, about the time he received them from Rogers, and if we had been allowed to prove that at that very time he was encouraging Rogers to hold and not to sell, it would have had a tendency to prove he was executing a plan which involved his selling at the same time all the other certificates he got from Rogers.

It is true the fact Hayward talked to Rogers about the mine in such a way as to dissuade him from selling is not alleged as the means employed by Hayward to induce him to believe the stock was still on hand; but it is not necessary to allege in a complaint all the circumstances of fraud, and if the complaint was faulty in not alleging any act Hayward did to conceal the sales he was making, it should have been demurred to on that ground. (Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 Mich. 313, 314.) It is plain for any one to see that Hayward could not have found a better mode of keeping Rogers from thinking he was selling Savage, or that he was selling Rogers' Savage or had already sold it, than to speak in such exalted terms of the wealth of the Savage mine as it was proposed to prove he did. So artful a concealment of those sales combined with so artful a prevention of sales by Rogers would have had the strongest tendency to prove that Hayward's sales were purposely made to defraud Rogers.

But more has been said about this matter than is necessary. This is a case of constructive fraud, and all that is necessary in pleading therefore is to allege the confidential relation, and the unfairness of the transaction, and that it was effected by means of those relations, and then the onus to vindicate the transaction is fixed upon the confidant, and the plaintiff may offer such matter in rebuttal as there may be, if not alleged in the complaint. (Rubidoux v. Parks, 48 Cal. 215; Rhodes v. Bate, 1 L. R. Ch. App. 256.)

The twelfth assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in allowing Peart, a witness for the defendant, to be asked, in rebuttal, whether he did not have six hundred and ninety shares of Savage stock belonging to the plaintiff in his possession, from April 22, 1872, to the time of the sales stated in the account rendered the defendant by the plaintiff, over and above all joint account stock (Hayward & Jones) and all stock held for parties other than defendant, plaintiff himself and Hayward & Jones." The question involved a question of law. The evidence showed incontestably and without conflict, or attempt at conflict, that Hayward sold one hundred and twenty-five shares of the defendant's stock about the end of April, 1872; that is to say, he sold the identical certificates for that many shares which he had received from Rogers.

Assuming that he set apart other certificates for the same quality of stock for Rogers' benefit, it was not for Peart to say they belonged to Rogers. The question sought to elicit testimony contradicting the witness himself and Hayward's books offered by himself.

Peart testified that those books were correct, and Sell, plaintiff's book-keeper, testified that they contained all Hayward's stock transactions, and they showed that Hayward received no Savage from any one but Rogers in the interval between April 21, 1872, and May 1, 1872, during which he sold certificates belonging to Rogers for one hundred and twenty-five shares, if he did not sell all of the certificates belonging to him; and it is a mathematical demonstration that if Rogers' stocks which were sold in that interval were replaced during that interval, it was done with the stocks of the pledgees, or of Hayward & Jones.

The question was deep and astute. It was so framed that, when it was answered in the affirmative, as it indicated to the witness, by its leading character, it was to be, and in fact was, it should appear to be proved that Hayward had always on hand for Rogers equivalent stock of his own until he sold out under the power of attorney, as he claims to have done. But the answer did not so prove. All it did prove was, that Rogers' credit was always kept standing and some other credit diminished whenever any of Rogers' shares were sold, or whenever any certificates from the envelope affected to his use were sold. If some of the stock in Hayward's hands credited to Hayward & Jones, or some of the stock credited to some other person than Rogers, was not put in lieu of certificates taken from Rogers' envelope, there was no effort to make the books and the envelope concur, to show the true status of each account. We know, if Peart told the truth, that some certificates were sold from Rogers' envelope; because he must have put what he got for Rogers in it when he first got them, and because the proof is direct that some of the certificates received from Rogers were sold by Hayward as soon as they were received.

The first instruction asked for by defendant should have been given.

The second instruction asked for by the defendant ought to have been given. It is as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff sold certificates of Savage stock received by him for the defendant, at any time prior to his procurement of the power of attorney produced here, without the authority of the defendant, it makes no difference how much Savage stock the plaintiff had on hand belonging to persons other than himself, or belonging to Hayward & Jones."

There was evidence on the part of the defendant to show that the plaintiff sold some of the certificates delivered to him on the defendant's account, and tending to show he sold all of them, within a few days after he got them, and when they commanded about seven hundred dollars a share, and when he had no stock at all.

And the evidence on behalf of Hayward showed that he had in his possession a great deal of stock belonging (some of it) to persons other than the defendant, and to the firm of Hayward & Jones, of which Hayward was a member. The defendant had no dealings with that firm. The defendant pledged his stock to Hayward, not to Hayward & Jones, and borrowed from him, not from Hayward & Jones. Hayward & Jones could not have been made liable to Rogers. (Adams et al. v. Sturges et al., 55 Ill. 468.) It was contended for Hayward that he could screen himself from liability to the defendant if he had as much stock of persons other than himself in his mere physical possession during the continuance of his liability, as he had sold of Rogers'. Such a position is not law.

Even Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86, requires that the party disposing of the certificate of another shall have as good a one of his own at hand. But Atkins v. Gamble, ut supra, ought not to be followed. It has never commanded the respect of the profession nor of other Courts. (Parsons v. Martin, 11 Gray (Mass.), 111; Morton v. Preston, 18 Mich. 60.) Rogers has no fight with Atkins v. Gamble. It is even authority for him. But overrule it, and every supposed difficulty of his case is leveled.

The third, fourth, fifth, and sixth instructions asked for by defendant should have been given. (Rubidoex v. Parks, 48 Cal. 215.) The insertion of the numbers of certificates in the power of attorney tendered to Rogers at a time when Hayward knew Rogers did not know the numbers the certificates he had pledged to him bore, was a positive act of fraud; but it was enough to invalidate the power anyhow if Rogers executed it while in ignorance — no matter how brought about — that his stock, or any of it, had been already sold.

The twelfth instruction asked for by defendant should have been given. There was evidence tending to prove that the plaintiff held the defendant's stock in pledge pure and simple, and he had therefore no right to sell in the Stock Board of the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco, or without notice; and it was proper the jury should have been told so, and they were not. (Dent v. Holbrook, 4 P. C. L. J. 549; Tully v. Tanager, ut supra; Parsons v. Martin, ut supra; Briggs v. B. & L. R. B. Co., 6 Allen, 252.)

The instruction numbered thirteen and a half should have been given. The evidence showed that the plaintiff had stock belonging to the defendant in pledge, and sold it without authority, and did not keep on hand a single share belonging to himself or anybody else after a given day, and for a very long time before the defendant filed his cross-complaint demanding satisfaction for the conversion, during all which there was no pretense of a defense if the power of attorney was fraudulently obtained.

The evidence showed that the plaintiff never had at any time but 25 shares of Savage of his own, and that even the Hayward & Jones account of Savage stock resulted in Hayward's never getting a share out of it; that the adventure was a dead failure, and resulted in loss. So that if the interest Hayward had in the Hayward & Jones stock was his shield against the defendant, he protected himself with what had no existence at the time nor ever afterwards, by the mere physical possession of stock, none of which ever came to him on settlement with his partner. (Cal. Furniture Co. v. Halsey, ut supra.)

The circumstance that the certificates were indorsed so as to pass title to the holder, if indorsement would have that effect, did not vest the legal title to the certificates in Hayward. He was a mere pledgee of the certificates. He held them by virtue of a lien upon them. Whatever the condition they were in may have been, he had only a lien upon them. He held the legal title quoad third parties; but quoad Rogers he had only a lien. (Wilson v. Little, 2 Coms. (N. Y.) 447; Morton v. Preston, 18 Mich. 69.)

The sixteenth assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in charging the jury, as it did, that the defendant could not recover of the plaintiff, for the conversion of his stock, if he was always ready, able, and willing to replace such as he may have converted, if any, without at the same time informing the jury, as it did not, that to be ready and able in law to replace such stock, was to have as many shares of his own, free and unincumbered, on hand, and under his instant control, as he had so converted, and that to have had shares of third parties in his hands, was not sufficient as a defense as against such conversion."

The instruction is but a repetition of the cardinal error which runs through the case. What has already been said in preceding points sufficiently explains our views in regard to it. It would permit a party who could buy stock in the market to sell his pledge whenever he saw fit, and thus to speculate on his pledgor—which he may not do. The principle of Atkins v. Gamble (42 Cal. 86) is, that shares of stock are intellectual entities unsusceptible of identification, and may therefore be treated as coins not in a bag; but the operation of that principle is carefully guarded by the proviso, that a pledgee shall not speculate upon his pledgor. The proviso, he shall have as many shares of his own on hand when he disposes of his pledgor's as he so disposes of, means nothing else.

The twenty-ninth assignment of error is as follows: "The Court erred in saying to the jury what it did about notice sufficient to put the parties upon inquiry, and omission to make inquiry." The Court instructed the jury on the point of notice as follows: "Actual notice of these facts is not always necessary: 'Notice is, first, actual, which consists in express information of a fact; second, constructive, which is implied by law.'"

"This is the section to which I call your attention now: 'Every person who has actual notice of a circumstance sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, has constructive notice of the fact itself.'"

However good law this may be, it was inapplicable, and calculated to mislead the jury. The case was one in which constructive notice could have no effect. The relation of principal and agent existed, and the principal was not required to pursue any inquiry. He reposed on his agent's fidelity. Before he could be held to have knowledge of the alleged fraud, it should have been proved he had actual knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud. What the Court said relieved the plaintiff of that onus as to proof, when it belonged to the plaintiff and threw it on the defendant. (Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. S. C. Rep., 9 Otto, 578; Sears v. Shafer, 2 Seld. 268; Civil Code of Procedure, § 1869; Shannon v. White, 6 Richards Eq. R., S. C., 96; Basset v. Nosworthy, 2 Leading Cases in Equity, 1; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 210; McLure v. Ashley, 7 Richards Eq. R. 439; 28 Iowa, 66; 30 id. 375; 4 Strobb. 155; Pease v. Barbiers, 10 Cal. 436.)

The judgment must be reversed because it calls for $305,050.95, with interest thereon, and $422.50 costs, when the verdict it recites was $295,345.38.

Estee & Boalt, for Respondent.

There was no fraud even if plaintiff, as the agent, pledgee, or trustee of defendant, had sold the stock of the latter without his consent, if he was at all times ready, able, and willing to turn over on demand an equal quantity of similar stock. The Court below held that the relations of pledgor and pledgee existed between these parties, and upon that opinion was compelled to declare the law as laid down by this Court in Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86.

That decision goes to the merits of this case, and is the law of this case upon the assumed proposition that Hayward, this plaintiff, was the pledgee of the stock in controversy, and the charge of the Court to the jury upon the law of the case, was practically an extract from that decision. So that practically the errors assigned by the defendant to the Court below are errors of this Court, and a favorable consideration thereof would result in overruling that case. The case at bar is much stronger than Atkins v. Gamble.

It was conceded in that case that the plaintiff was the owner of the stock and had himself deposited it with the defendant, who thereupon became the pledgee thereof. And the Court held that although the owner of personal property which has been wrongfully converted is ordinarily entitled to recover his specific property, or its value, and can not be compelled to accept other property of the same kind and equal value in lieu of that which was converted, yet shares of stock in a corporation stand upon a different footing; and if all the shares are of equal value, there can be no reason for preferring one share to another.

Indeed, as the Court remarked, the stockholders in a corporation are the joint owners of the franchise and property of the corporation. Each holder is entitled to an undivided share in the assets and business of the corporation. All stand upon the same footing. This same view was entertained by the Supreme Court in two other cases, viz.: Hawley v. Brumagim, 33 Cal. 394; Hardenbergh v. Bacon, id. 365. Chancellor Kent in the case of Nourse v. Prime, 7 Johns. Ch. 87, was of the same opinion as this Court in Atkins v. Gamble.

The plaintiff in this case was the owner of certain shares of U. S. Bank stock, which he deposited with defendant as collateral for the payment of his note; and if the note was not paid the stock was to be sold, the note paid out of the proceeds, and the balance turned over to the plaintiff. The stock was sold afterwards at a depreciated price, and the sale did not realize enough to pay the debt; so the pledgee brought suit to recover the deficiency.

The pledgor however, filed his bill in equity to enjoin the action at law, on the ground that the pledgees were large operators in stocks, and had mingled his stock with their own and other stocks which they held in trust, in such a manner that they could not be distinguished, and that it was the duty of the defendants to have set apart the pledgor's share in such a manner that they could be identified; and not having done so, they were liable for the highest price at which the stock could have been sold.

The opinion of the Court was adverse to the plaintiff in the equity suit, on the ground that under the contract all that plaintiff could demand was a return of 430 shares of the bank stock; that if he desired to have any specific 430 shares he should have so provided in the contract. The learned Chancellor approves the opinion of Lord Chancellor Parker in Le Croy v. Eastman, 10 Mod. 499, in a similar case, to the effect that the defendant was accountable only for the stock and dividends, and not for the price at which the stock was held. (See also Horton v. Morgan, 6 Duer, 56; Gilpin v. Howell, 5 Penn. St. 42; Allen v. Dykers, 3 Hill, 593.)

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

The principal contention on behalf of Rogers is, that Hayward held a certain number of shares of mining stock as security for money advanced by him to Rogers, and that Hayward, without the knowledge of Rogers, sold said shares of stock, and that afterwards, and while Rogers was uninformed and ignorant of said sale, Hayward procured a power from Rogers to sell said stock, and then sold of the stock of the same mining company the same number of shares that he, Hayward, had held prior to said first sale as security for his said advances to Rogers, and that Hayward accounted to Rogers for the sum realized on the sale of the stock last sold only, which was much less than the sum realized on the sale of the stock first sold, which Rogers contends was the stock which Hayward held as security for his said advances.

On the other side, it is claimed that Hayward constantly held the identical stock certificates which he took as such security from the time when he received them up to the time when he admits that he sold them, or that if he did not, during all of such time, have said identical stock certificates in his possession, that he did, during all of such time, have other stock certificates of the same mining company for the same number of shares, which, during all of such time, he was able, ready, and willing to deliver to Rogers, upon his paying the sum for which said certificates were held as security.

It is to the admission and rejection of evidence, and to the giving and refusing of instructions upon this issue, that most of the exceptions are directed.

The transaction out of which this litigation arose, as narrated by Rogers in his testimony, was as follows:

"I went to Mr. Hayward, and found him alone in his front office. I said to Mr. Hayward that I had two hundred and ten shares of Savage coming in on Monday; that is, it was due Monday — we speak of it as coming in, and I was afraid I would not be able to take care of it, and would sell the stock. * * * I told him that I thought that perhaps, rather than to see that amount of stock thrown on the market, he might assist me in taking care of it. He asked me at what prices the stock was coming in. I told him; and he said: 'Send it to me.' That is, the two hundred and seventy shares. * * * Then, upon his saying, 'Send it to me,' he says: 'By the way, what has become of that two hundred shares Burling was carrying for you?' I says: 'Burling is still carrying it.' He says: 'Order that up and send it to me.' I told him I would do so. That was the end of the conversation. There may have been something said about interest — probably was.

"Q.—Was anything said as to Mr. Hayward's power or authority to sell it? A.—Not a word.

"Q.—What was done in consequence of that arrangement, if anything? A.—The stock was delivered to Mr. Hayward and he paid the money that was spoken of, about $186,000, that he advanced to these different parties for this stock."

In considering the exceptions upon which the appellant relies, we shall assume, as indeed we must, that this is the correct version of that transaction. And in view of that, and the further fact that it is not charged in the cross-complaint of Rogers that he was induced to do what he did by reason of any representations of Hayward as to the condition of the mine, or the then present or prospective value of the stock, or in regard to the quantity of it which Woods & Freeborn, or any other person or persons, were selling, we do not think that the Court erred in sustaining the objections of respondent to the introduction of evidence of what Hayward said to Rogers in regard to those subjects.

Nor do we think that the Court erred in allowing the witness Peart to be asked how much stock Hayward carried for Rogers from April 22, 1872, to November, 1872. According to the testimony of a majority of the witnesses, Peart was better qualified to answer that question than any other witness, including Hayward himself. When this question was asked, appellant's counsel said: "I understand that question to be an offer to contradict their own witness, to contradict Mr. Hayward's books and Mr. Peart himself. I object to it as incompetent." Appellant's counsel seem to have assumed that the answer of the witness would contradict all the evidence to which the objection referred. But we are unable to see how the Court could have anticipated the answer of the witness, and if it could not, there was no error in overruling the objection. After the witness had answered the question, no motion was made to strike the answer out, and the Court, therefore, had no opportunity, after being sufficiently advised, to decide whether or not the witness had contradicted the evidence referred to. And according to our understanding of the evidence, there is no such contradiction.

The evidence as to the number of shares of stock that Hayward was carrying for persons other than Rogers, and as to the contents of the letter which Rogers wrote to Hayward, may not have been relevant to any issue in the case, but as we can not conceive how the appellant could possibly be prejudiced by it, the error, if error there was in overruling the objections to it, must be disregarded.

Upon the main issue in the case the Court charge the jury as follows: "If you find that Hayward had sold the 690 shares before the execution of the power; that you remember was July 18th; and had been ready, able, and willing to transfer to Rogers an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company by a proper and valid certificate, then and in that case it was not material that these facts should be imparted to Rogers at the time he executed the power of attorney, and the power was a valid and binding one. It was not material to tell him that, for the reason that that was a thing that Hayward had a right to do anyway, and the law says, that he was selling his own stock, and not Rogers' stock, provided he was all the time able, ready, and willing to respond to Rogers, in case he should come and demand his stock. And if you find that Hayward had sold the identical 690 shares, and that he was not at the time of such sales able, willing, and ready to deliver to Rogers a similar number of shares, then, and in that case, the suppression of those facts operated as a fraud upon Rogers, and destroyed the force and effect of the power of attorney, there being nothing for the power to operate upon." This, in our opinion, was a correct and sufficiently clear exposition of the law applicable to that issue, and it obviated the necessity of the Court's giving any other or further instructions upon it. Therefore the refusal of the Court to give the instructions asked on the points covered by the instruction given, is not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment.

The charge of the Court as to what would constitute a bar to Rogers' right of action against Hayward, appears to us to be substantially correct. Another portion of the charge to which exception was taken, reads as follows: "When facts are testified to by witnesses who are not impeached, and there is no inherent improbability in the statement, the jury are bound to take that evidence as proving the particular fact; and the jury have no right capriciously to disregard evidence where it is not controverted and the character of the witnesses is good, and the story is probable."

There ought to be no necessity for giving such an instruction to a jury. A juror who required to be so instructed would be utterly unfit for the position. But as a matter of law we think the instruction was correct, and, so far as we can see, it was as favorable to one side as it was to the other.

We do not think that the judgment should be reversed; but it must be modified. The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $295,345.38 and the judgment was entered for the sum of $305,050.95.

It is therefore ordered that this cause be remanded to the Court below with directions to so modify the judgment as to make it correspond with the verdict of the jury; and, when so modified, it is hereby affirmed.

Ross, J., concurring:

The plaintiff was justified in acting in accordance with the views expressed by this Court in the case of Atkins v. Gamble, 42 Cal. 86. It matters not whether those views accord with our own notion as to what the law ought to be. That case was the law when the transactions in question occurred, and has remained so ever since. Whatever certificates of stock the plaintiff sold, of those received by him on account of the defendant, were replaced by him with like certificates prior to the execution of the power of attorney from defendant to plaintiff. At the time the power of attorney was drawn the defendant was present with the plaintiff's agent, the certificates of stock were produced, and from them the attorney obtained the number of the certificates and the number of shares, and drew a power of attorney, which the defendant executed, authorizing the plaintiff to sell them; and this he did.

JOHN T. CAREY v. WILLIAM K. BROWN.

ACTION OF EJECTMENT.— Defendant formerly owned the premises, and to secure an indebtedness, executed a deed of trust, in which it was provided that in default of payment and in the event of a sale, the recitals in any deed executed by the trustees should be conclusive evidence of such default, or the application of the creditor for the sale of the property, and of the publication of the notice of sale.

Held: In the absence of fraud, the defendant is concluded by the recitals in a deed which was executed by the trustees.

1d. — INNOCENT PURCHASER AT TRUSTEE'S SALE.— One of the trustees became the owner, by assignment, of the note, the payment of which the deed of trust was given to secure, but the purchaser at the sale had no notice of this, and believed that the sale was regularly made for the benefit of the payee of the note.

Held: The purchaser's title to the property was not affected by the fact that one of the trustees had purchased the note.

PAYMENT BY CHECK.— The purchaser paid for the property with a check, instead of gold coin, as provided in the deed of trust.

Held: As the money was actually paid on the check, defendant's objection to the sale was not well taken.

REFUSAL TO ALLOW IMMATERIAL AMENDMENT.— It is not error, if the Court refuses to allow an immaterial amendment to a pleading.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. CLARK, J.

Action in ejectment. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court. After the decision in department, a petition for a hearing in bank was presented, and denied.

Freeman & Bates, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.:

On the sixteenth day of June, 1880, the defendant was indebted to one P. Bohl in the sum of seven hundred dollars, as was evidenced by a promissory note of that date, and for that amount, payable in six months, and to secure such indebtedness, the defendant executed a deed of trust to W. A. Fountain and A. Leonard on the certain lots of land in controversy, situated in the City of Sacramento. The deed of trust authorized the trustees therein named to sell the property in case defendant failed to pay the note when due, and provided that in the event of a sale, the recitals in any deed executed by the trustees, of default on the part of the defendant to pay the note, and of the application of the payee of the note for the sale of the premises, and of publication of the notice of sale required by the trust deed, should be conclusive evidence of the facts recited. The language is: "Any such deed or deeds, with such recitals, therein, shall be effectual and conclusive against said party of the first part (the defendant herein), his heirs, assigns, and all other persons; and the receipt for the purchase money contained in any deeds executed to the purchaser, shall be a sufficient discharge to such purchaser from all obligation to see to the proper application of the purchase money according to the trusts aforesaid."

The property was sold in the presence and by the direction of Fountain, one of the trustees, and a deed was executed by both of the trustees to the purchaser on the twenty-second day of September, 1881; and the deed recites "that on the — day of July, 1881, the said promissory note having long prior thereto become due, and said W. K. Brown having made default in the payment of the principal and interest of said note, and the holder of the same having made application to the parties of the first part, requiring them (the trustees) to sell the whole of said real estate, and said parties of the first part did, on the twenty-sixth day of August, 1881, cause notice of the time and place of sale to be published in the Sacramento Daily Record-Union, a newspaper printed and published in the county where said lands were situate, in which notice the seventeenth day of September, 1881, at the Court-house door in said county, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M., was fixed as the time and place when and where said premises would be sold at public auction, under the provisions of said trust deed. That said notice was published one time each week for three successive weeks, previous to said day of sale, in said newspaper. That on the seventeenth day of September, 1881, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M., at the Court-house door, in said county, the said trustees sold at public auction, for cash in gold coin, said land and premises to the highest bidder therefor. That at such sale the said party of the second part was the highest bidder and best bidder," etc.

The foregoing deed was executed to one Weyant, and he executed a deed to the plaintiff.

1. It appears from the evidence in the case that Bohl, the payee of the note, to secure the payment of which the deed of trust was given, assigned the note to Fountain, one of the trustees, on the twenty-seventh day of September, 1880, and on the trial of the case the defendant offered to prove that neither Bohl nor any other person ever made any application to Leonard or Fountain (the trustees) to sell the land to satisfy the indebtedness secured thereby; but objection was made to the introduction of such evidence, and it was excluded by the Court.

It is expressly provided in the deed of trust, that any recitals contained in a deed executed by the trustees to a purchaser of the trust property, shall be conclusive evidence of the truth of the facts recited; and under the circumstances developed on the trial of this case, the defendant was concluded thereby. It is true that the answer charges fraud and collusion on the part of the plaintiff and the trustees, but there is no evidence in the transcript sustaining such charge; and the finding of the Court was the other way.

2. The next point in the case deserving of notice, is the fact that Fountain, one of the trustees, became the owner by assignment of the note executed by the defendant to Bohl.

and it is claimed that he had no right to sell the trust property for his own benefit. By Section 2263 of the Civil Code it is provided, that "a trustee can not enforce any claim against the trust property which he purchases after or in contemplation of his appointment as trustee; but he may be allowed, by any competent Court, to charge to the trust property what he has in good faith paid for the claim, upon discharging the same." If the contest in this case were between the defendant and the trustee, it is very plain that the trustee could claim nothing by virtue of the sale; but it does not appear that the purchaser of the property at the trustees' sale had any notice of the assignment of the note to the trustee; and, so far as the proceedings in the case show, the purchaser believed, and had a right to believe, that the sale was made regularly and for the benefit of Bohl, the payee of the note. We think that, in the absence of all knowledge of the unlawful dealings of the trustee, the title of the purchaser was not affected by the fact that the trustee was dealing with the trust property for his own benefit.

3. There are two other points, that may be noticed together:

The defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the Court to allow a proposed amendment to the answer, for the reason that the amendment would not have helped the defendant's case; and the other point, that the purchaser paid for the property with a check instead of gold coin, as provided in the deed of trust, is not well taken. It appears from the evidence not only that a check was given, but that the money was actually paid on the check.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SHARPSTEIN and MYRIOK, JJ., concurred.

THE PEOPLE v. NANCY HAMILTON.

EXAMINATION OF JUROR — CHALLENGE — ACTUAL BIAS. — Upon the examination of a juror, who has stated that he has formed a qualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, the juror can not, in the absence of a challenge for actual bias, be asked whether he believes the defendant to be guilty or not guilty.

Id. — Id. — Id. — Upon a challenge for actual bias such a question might properly be asked, as tending to show an existence of actual bias.

Id. — Id. — Id. — CASE DISTINGUISHED. — What is said in People v. Williams, 6 Cal. 206, with reference to the impropriety of permitting the inquiry on which side an opinion has been expressed, was not called for in the case. But treating the case as correctly deciding, that, upon the issue of "implied bias," which, as the law then stood, was established by showing that a juror "had formed or expressed an unqualified opinion," etc., it was immaterial to know, and therefore (in view of the possible effect upon other persons summoned as jurors and awaiting examination) improper to inquire, whether the "unqualified opinion" was for or against the prisoner; such an issue can no longer be raised, since "the having formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused" is no longer a cause of challenge for implied bias. (Penal Code, 1074.)

Id. — Id. — Id. — CASE EXPLAINED. — The language of the Court in People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 277, is not to be construed as holding that a defendant need not interpose a challenge, as for implied or actual bias, until he has proved that it ought to be allowed, or that he can complain of any ruling with reference to a question he may ask, without challenging the juror, but only that it is the better practice to permit preliminary inquiries, which, if answered satisfactorily to defendant, may relieve him of the necessity of challenging. But, if it be admitted to be the rule, that the examination may be exhaustive before the challenge, the examination, or any ruling during its continuance, can not be made the foundation for alleged error, unless the challenge is taken at some stage of the proceedings in the Court below.

Id. — Id. — PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE — CASES EXPLAINED AND LIMITED. — After a trial of an issue as to the existence of actual bias in the mind of the juror, and a finding against the challenging party, it would appear that he should be sufficiently informed to exercise his right of peremptory challenge. The law gives him the advantage of any knowledge he may thus acquire, but does not afford him an opportunity to examine a juror for the avowed object of determining whether he will challenge him peremptorily. Watson v. Whitney (23 Cal. 379) and People v. Car Boy (57 Id. 102) explained, and the dicta on this point disapproved.

INSANITY — REASONABLE DOUBT — BURDEN OF PROOF — SATISFACTORY PROOF — DEFINITION — CASE EXPLAINED AND LIMITED. — The Court below charged the jury as follows: "Where insanity is relied upon as a defense, the burden of proof is on the defendant; and that the proof must be such in amount that if the single issue of sanity or insanity of the defendant should be submitted to the jury in a civil case, they must find that he was insane. That the insanity must be clearly established by satisfactory proof."

Held: In the connection in which the words are used, to say that insanity must be "clearly established," is not to say that the evidence must more than preponderate, but only that the preponderance must be plainly apparent. Such must be the case in every instance where the affirmative of an issue is sought to be established and a peculiar presumption be overcome. There may be a greater or less degree of lucidity, but the preponderance must be distinctly perceptible. It is in this sense that the expression is often used by Courts and law writers in speaking of the degree of evidence necessary to overcome a presumption greater than that which arises, that a particular fact—as probably existing as non-existing—exists—e. g., as when it is said that fraud must be clearly proved. In civil cases fraud is proved by a preponderance of the evidence, yet, inasmuch as the law, to the credit of human nature, presumes that men are oftener honest than dishonest, the preponderance must clearly appear. Thus only can the fact of fraud or insanity be "satisfactorily proved." The majority opinion in People v. Wreden (59 Cal. 392) on this point disapproved.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento. DENSON, J.

Clinton L. White, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

McKINSTRY, J.:

In his petition for rehearing, counsel for defendant and appellant insists that two propositions, by him advanced, have been entirely misapprehended by this Court. The first of these relates to the ruling of the Court below in sustaining objections to questions asked by defendant at the impaneling of the jury; the second, to an instruction given to the jury upon the subject of insanity.

1. Wilkinson was examined on oath as to his qualifications to sit upon the jury. After stating that he had an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, he was asked by counsel for defendant: "Does your opinion go to the question of her guilt, or does it go to the question of her innocence?" The Court sustained the District Attorney's objection to the question, and defendant duly excepted. The bill of exceptions proceeds: "The juror was afterwards excused upon a challenge for cause."

It is perfectly manifest that defendant was deprived of no substantial right — even conceding the ruling to have been erroneous — in so far as was concerned her privilege to challenge for bias, actual or implied.

Counsel for appellant argues, however, that the question should have been allowed, "to enable the defendant to intelligently exercise the right of peremptory challenge." But if counsel be correct in this assertion, still no injury was done to defendant, who had no occasion to determine whether she should peremptorily challenge the person under examination, since such person "was excused upon a challenge for cause."

J. M. Henderson was examined as to his qualifications to serve on the jury. He stated that he had a qualified opinion as to the case. He was asked by counsel for defendant: "From the opinion you have formed in the case, and which you say is a qualified opinion, do you believe the defendant to be guilty, or do you believe her to be innocent?" The District Attorney objected, on the ground that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, and improper. The Court sustained the objection, to which ruling defendant excepted.

If Henderson had been challenged for actual bias, we think — notwithstanding the fact that counsel for appellant disavows the proposition — the question might properly have been asked. The issue being in such case, "the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror * * * in reference to either of the parties which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party" — (Penal Code, 1073) — the fact that a jurymen had a qualified opinion, or even impression, of defendant's guilt, might tend to show an existence of actual bias. And this is true, although it is also true that actual bias does not exist, provided the juror, notwithstanding his qualified or unqualified opinion, can and will "act impartially and fairly."

It has been supposed that People v. Williams (6 Cal. 206) lays down different doctrine. In that case the question did not arise. There the juror was asked if he had formed or expressed an unqualified opinion "as to the guilt or innocence of the accused," and answered that he had formed an unqualified opinion, or an opinion "not qualified." There seems to have been no further examination, yet, upon this evidence the District Court held the juror competent and qualified. The Supreme Court decided that the Court below should, upon the uncontradicted testimony, have sustained a challenge for implied bias. The only argument adduced in support of the ruling of the lower Court was that it did not appear from the record that the unqualified opinion was adverse to defendant, although it did appear that the person examined had expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

What is said in People v. Williams with reference to the impropriety of permitting the inquiry on which side an opinion has been expressed, was not called for in the case. But treating the case as correctly deciding, that, upon the issue of "implied bias," which, as the law then stood, was established by showing that a juryman "had formed or expressed an unqualified opinion," etc., it was immaterial to know, and, therefore (in view of the possible effect upon other persons summoned as jurors and awaiting examination), improper to inquire, whether the "unqualified opinion" was for or against the prisoner; such an issue can no longer be raised, since "the having formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused" is no longer a cause of challenge for implied bias. (Penal Code, 1074, as amended April 9, 1880.)

The reason suggested in People v. Williams never applied to a question put upon the trial of an issue of actual bias, and the importance of ascertaining the exact condition of the juror's mind requires the freest latitude in an investigation, the end of which is to ascertain—"Is the juror impartial?"

But the juror Henderson was not challenged for actual bias, nor challenged at all. Here again, it would seem, certain early cases in California have been somewhat misunderstood. In the case of The People v. Backus (5 Cal. 277), Murray, C. J., said: "There is another objection raised by the appellant which, if not sufficiently erroneous to reverse the judgment, at least calls for correction at the hands of this Court. I refer to the course adopted by the Court below in refusing to allow the prisoner to propound any interrogations to the jurors without first challenging them for cause. It is usual everywhere to ask the juror if he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, but in the present case the Court refused to allow these questions to be asked, and the prisoner was compelled to prejudice his case by first challenging the jurors and then having the fact of their bias determined by triers appointed by the Court. Before being thus compelled to challenge, he should have been allowed to ascertain whether there was any fact from which the presumption of bias or prejudice would arise, and this fact having been ascertained, then the challenge would properly have followed, and the triers would have had to ascertain whether there was bias in fact."

Read as a whole, the language quoted is not to be construed as holding that a defendant need not interpose a challenge, as for implied or actual bias, until he has proved that it ought to be allowed, or that he can complain of any ruling with reference to a question he may ask, without challenging the juror, but only that it is the better practice to permit preliminary inquiries, which, if answered satisfactorily to defendant, may relieve him of the necessity of challenging. But, if it be admitted to be the rule, that the examination may be exhaustive before the challenge; the examination, or any ruling during its continuance, can not be made the foundation for alleged error, unless the challenge is taken at some stage of the proceedings in the Court below. In People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 129, the Court, by Baldwin, J., said: "It is the common practice in this State to interrogate a juror upon his voir dire generally as to his qualifications, with a view to obtain information upon which to rest a specific challenge. The practice, though productive of some inconvenience, is one of necessity; for unless it be followed, it will often be quite impossible to ascertain the qualifications of the juror. * * * If, therefore, the challenge for implied bias be not taken before the juror is examined, the proper course to pursue is to make the challenge, stating distinctly its causes, immediately after the preliminary examination is closed. The District Attorney can then except to the challenge, or deny the facts it alleges. If the latter course be adopted, the juror can be further examined, and other witnesses called, and the matter be thus submitted to the Court." Of course, under the Penal Code, the same rule applies to the matter of actual bias.

In the present case, the transcript shows that Henderson was not challenged before or after his examination upon his voir dire, either for actual or implied bias. His examination, therefore, went for naught. No issue was made to which his testimony was directed, and of course the action of the Court, refusing to allow the question whether his qualified opinion was favorable or hostile to defendant, can not be assigned as error.

After a trial of an issue as to the existence of actual bias in the mind of the juror, and a finding against the challenging party, it would appear that he should be sufficiently informed to exercise his right of peremptory challenge. The law gives him the advantage of any knowledge which he may thus acquire, but does not afford him an opportunity to examine a juror for the avowed object of determining whether he will challenge him peremptorily.

Mr. Justice Crocker, in Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 379, remarked: "Each party has a right to put questions to a juror to show, not only that there exists proper grounds of a challenge for cause, but to elicit facts to enable the party to decide whether or not he will make a peremptory challenge." But this language was clearly dictum, since one of the questions asked was evidently directed to an ascertainment of the fact whether or not the juror had formed or expressed an opinion, and the having formed or expressed an unqualified opinion was (under the law then in force) cause of challenge for implied bias.

In People v. Car Soy, 57 Cal. 102, two of the Justices in Department Two cited the language of Mr. Justice Crocker, above quoted, with apparent approval. But an examination of that case will show that the questions there objected to were such as, if answered in the affirmative, would lead to facts tending to prove that the juror was actually biased.

It has never been declared, in any case where such declaration was necessary to the decision, that a person summoned as a juror may be questioned for the mere purpose of ascertaining whether the questioner shall determine to challenge him peremptorily.

The Penal Code, after enumerating a large number of facts, the mere existence of which shall conclusively establish bias on the part of an individual juror, gives to the parties to a criminal action an opportunity to enter into an enlarged inquiry as to the state of mind of the juror; whether, with or without reason, he is not strictly impartial. With reference to the existence of any one of the facts, which, by law, conclusively establishes implied bias, and with reference to the existence of a state of mind in the juror rendering him not strictly impartial, an issue must be made up before or after a preliminary examination. After giving the opportunity thus to ascertain the existence or non-existence of implied or actual bias, the Penal Code accords to a defendant on trial for an offense punishable with death twenty peremptory challenges. These he exercises at his own volition. The State can not say he ought not to challenge peremptorily a particular juror. No issue is raised upon the result of the trial of which his right depends. As no issue can be made or tried, to which the question, intended simply to enable a defendant to make up his mind whether he will challenge peremptorily, can apply, it would follow, if appellant is right, that the trial Court can place no limit upon the questions which defendant may choose to ask.

While, therefore, a defendant may, when the opportunity to interpose a peremptory challenge arises, have the benefit of any information acquired during the trial of a challenge for implied or actual bias, he can not embark in a general exploration for the sole purpose of satisfying himself whether it will be safe to be tried by a juror against whom no legal objections can be urged.

2. It is said that the Court below erred in charging the jury as follows: "Where insanity is relied upon as a defense, the burden of proof is on the defendant; and that the proof must be such in amount that if the single issue of sanity or insanity of the defendant should be submitted to the jury in a civil case, they must find that he was insane. That the insanity must be clearly established by satisfactory proof."

In answer to questions propounded by the House of Lords

(Roscoe's Cr. Ev. 953), Tindal, C. J., said: "To establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason," etc. In People v. M'Donell, 47 Cal. 136, an instruction given in the Court below was approved, and was thus construed: "In other words, insanity must be clearly established by satisfactory proof."

Appellant relies upon People v. Wreden, 8 Pac. C. L. J. 191. We do not find it necessary to dissent from the philosophical criticism found in the opinion of two of the Justices in that case. The judgment of the trial Court was there properly reversed, if for no other reason, because the instructions were clearly contradictory. In the same charge the jury were told "if they entertained a reasonable doubt of the sanity of the defendant he must be acquitted," and "it was not sufficient" (to justify an acquittal) "that they should merely entertain a reasonable doubt of his sanity."

The first question to be solved in every review of an instruction is, of course, what idea was conveyed by it to the jurymen? In the case before us the jurors were told, in effect, that the burden of proving insanity is on the defendant; that he is not obliged to prove his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt, but, on the other hand, it is not sufficient to create a reasonable doubt that the defendant is or may be insane; that it is enough, if the evidence be such as would justify a jury in a civil case in finding defendant insane, were the single issue "sane or insane" submitted to them — that is, it is enough if the insanity be established by a preponderance of evidence. We are convinced the phrase used in connection with the last proposition — "the insanity must be clearly established by satisfactory proof" — could not have misled the jury. The words were added, it would appear, in opposition to any suggestion that defendant would be entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt on the question of insanity, and to guard the jury from the effect of such suggestion. Reading the charge as a whole — as far as it treats of insanity — the jury were informed that insanity was established satisfactorily if it was proved by a clear preponderance of the evidence.

Having been told that the evidence in favor of insanity must outweigh the evidence in favor of sanity, the jury were further instructed that this must clearly appear; that they must not mistake a quantum of evidence which creates a doubt of defendant's sanity for that which overcomes the presumption of sanity, and the proof of such facts as may be established affirmatively for the purpose of strengthening the presumption. In the connection in which the words are used, to say that insanity must be "clearly established" is not to say that the evidence must more than preponderate, but only that the preponderance must be plainly apparent. Such must be the case in every instance where the affirmative of an issue is sought to be established and a peculiar presumption be overcome. There may be a greater or less degree of lucidity, but the preponderance must be distinctly perceptible. It is in this sense that the expression is often used by Courts and law writers in speaking of the degree of evidence necessary to overcome a presumption greater than that which arises, that a particular fact — as probably existing as non-existing — exists, e. g., as when it is said that fraud must be clearly proved. In civil cases fraud is proved by a preponderance of the evidence, yet, inasmuch as the law, to the credit of human nature, presumes that men are oftener honest than dishonest, the preponderance must clearly appear. Thus only can the fact of fraud or insanity be "satisfactorily proved."

A. MONTGOMERY v. N. S. MERRILL ET AL.

EFFECT OF ORDER IN INSOLVENCY STAYING PROCEEDINGS. — After execution of the mortgage in suit, and prior to the commencement of the action, the mortgagor was adjudged insolvent, and a stay of proceedings ordered. No judgment herein was asked for any deficiency after sale of the mortgaged property, but the same was waived.

CAL. REPS. LXII—25

Held: The order in the matter of the insolvency staying proceedings did not prevent plaintiff from foreclosing his mortgage lien.

10.—PRESUMPTION.—The plaintiff in his complaint averred that the “action was brought by leave of the Court first had and obtained.”

Held: If the order staying proceedings could be construed as having any effect upon the plaintiff's right to foreclose his lien, the presumption is that the Court which made the order had, in the exercise of its power, modified it so as to permit the plaintiff to bring the action.

11.—HOMESTEAD—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS—ANSWER.—The answer of the defendants admitted the allegations of the complaint, but affirmative matter as to the insolvency of the mortgagor, and as to a declaration of homestead was set up to defeat the plaintiff's action. As to the homestead, it was alleged that on the — day of —, A. D., 18—, the defendant, as head of a family, had acquired a homestead interest in the mortgaged premises, by making, acknowledging, and recording, according to law, “on that day,” a declaration of homestead upon the premises.

Held: The answer did not show any existing claim which had attached prior to the mortgage lien. Taken in connection with the admission in the defendants' answer of the allegation in the complaint that the claim asserted by the defendants was subsequent and subject to the mortgage, the answer must be regarded as frivolous, and containing no defense to the action. It was therefore proper for the Court to grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

PRESUMPTION—ATTORNEY'S FEE IN FORECLOSURE.—The Court also gave judgment for the sum of $188.85, “attorney's fee provided in the mortgage.” The appellant contends that the Court should have fixed the fee.

Held: As there is in the record no bill of exceptions or statement showing the contrary, it must be presumed that the Court proceeded regularly in fixing the amount of the attorney's fee, and that the judgment is in all respects correct.

APPEAL by defendants from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Colusa. BLANCHARD, J.

Action of foreclosure of mortgage. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

John T. Harrington, for Appellants.

It is not claimed that the denials, as such, in the answer, afford a defense to the motion for judgment on the pleadings. But it is contended that if any of the matters alleged were such as would defeat or delay the plaintiff's action, then such motion should not have been granted, and the judgment is accordingly erroneous. “The ground upon which a motion made by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings proceeds in any case is that his complaint is sufficient to warrant it, and that the answer presents nothing, either by way of denial or of new matter, to bar or defeat the action." (Felch v. Beaudry, 40 Cal. 439.) The answer sets up the insolvency proceedings of the defendant N. S. Merrill, and shows that an order was made by the Court therein, staying all proceedings against the defendant, which order had not been vacated, modified, or changed in any manner whatever, at the time of the commencement of this action, and that the insolvency proceedings were still pending. By section 6 of the Insolvent Act of 1880, C. C. P. 647, it is made the duty of the Court, upon receiving and filing the petition, schedule, and inventory, to declare the petitioner therein insolvent, etc., and the section further provides that, "upon granting said order, all proceedings against the said insolvent shall be stayed."

But, it is claimed that by Sections 44 and 45 of said Act, creditors of the insolvent debtor, whose claims are secured by mortgage or other liens, are excepted from the operation of the order staying proceedings. It will be seen, however, by an inspection of the several provisions of the Insolvent Act, that there is no distinction made in the class or character of debts, which may be proved in insolvency.

Section 37 provides: "All debts due and payable from the debtor at the time of the adjudication of insolvency, and all debts then existing but not payable until a future time, a rebate of interest being made when no interest is payable by the terms of the contract, may be proved against the estate of the debtor." And Section 44, together with subdivision 6 of Section 21, confers the power upon and provides the means for the assignee to discharge the property of the insolvent debtor from mortgage or other liens. The assignee takes and is entitled to all the property of the insolvent debtor, except such as may be exempt from execution. (Section 17, Insolvent Act.) It was not, of course, the purpose or design of the insolvent law to deprive any holder of his lien against the insolvent debtor. But, in giving to the assignee power to redeem all valid mortgages or other liens, or to sell the property subject to them, was to postpone the right of action in the holders of such liens, pending the insolvency proceedings. And this is made apparent from the provisions of Section 45, as follows: * * * "And no creditor whose debt is provable under this Act shall be allowed, after the commencement of proceedings in insolvency, to prosecute to final judgment any action therefor against the debtor until the question of the debtor's discharge shall have been determined. * * * Provided, there be no unreasonable delay on the part of the debtor, * * * in prosecuting the case to its conclusion; and provided, also, that if the amount due the creditor is in dispute, the suit, by leave of the Court, in insolvency may proceed to judgment, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due," etc.

With one exception, not material to this controversy, there are but two conditions given by the statute upon which any action can be prosecuted to judgment by a creditor, after the commencement of insolvency proceedings. These conditions should appear affirmatively. But when, as in this case, the contrary actually appears, there was no authority of law for the prosecution of the action to final judgment, or even for the commencement of it.

The averments in the answer, respecting the claim of the defendants to the premises, by virtue of the declaration of homestead made and filed thereon, constituted a defense to the action, which the motion for judgment on the pleadings confessed.

Such motion confesses the facts as stated, and is equivalent to a general demurrer to the answer. (Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 257.)

The particular time when the homestead interest attached to the premises does not appear from the answer. But, when tested by general demurrer, it would be held sufficient to entitle defendants to offer proof of the averment.

The homestead interest is necessarily disposed of, by a decree to which both husband and wife are parties. And they would be estopped from asserting such interest in any subsequent action. Hence it is a proper matter of defense in the foreclosure suit.

If there should be any question of the sufficiency of the foregoing objections to the judgment in this case, that which affects the granting of attorney's fee, by judgment on the pleadings, must be considered as fatal to it. The prayer of the complaint in this respect is, that plaintiff have "judgment against the defendant N. S. Merrill for counsel fees, upon the amount found due for principal, and interest at the rate of five per cent." This is the stipulated rate in the mortgage, as averred in the complaint. The judgment is according to the prayer of the complaint, and it adjudges that there is due plaintiff "the sum of one hundred and eighty-eight dollars and sixty-five cents attorney's fee, provided in said mortgage." By statute it is provided that, "in all cases of foreclosure of mortgage, the attorney's fee shall be fixed by the Court in which the proceedings in foreclosure are had, any stipulation in said mortgage to the contrary notwithstanding." (Stats. 1873-4, p. 707.) It is the duty of the Court in such cases to fix the amount of the attorney's fees. (Stockton Savings and Loan Society v. Donnelly, 9 P. C. L. J. 487.)

Now, it will not be contended that, in granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the Court fixes the attorney's fee; or that there is, in such case, any means afforded the Court to fix it.

H. M. Albery, for Respondent.

The proceedings in insolvency of the defendant N. S. Merrill, as shown in the answer, constitute no defense or bar to this action.

1. Because the plaintiff has not presented or proved his "debt or claim" (§ 45, Insolvency Laws) against the estate of the insolvent debtor.

2. Because this is not an action to recover judgment upon a debt or claim, "proved" or "provable" against the estate of the insolvent debtor. (§ 44, Insolvency Laws.)

3. Because this is an action to foreclose a mortgage—to have the mortgaged property applied to the mortgage debt.

4. Because no personal judgment ever was asked or granted in the action.

5. Because the plaintiff asked and obtained leave of the Court to commence this action.

6. Because the Court had jurisdiction and control of the insolvency proceedings, as well as the foreclosure proceedings.

The defendants could have no independent or other interest in the land, by virtue of a declaration of homestead, or otherwise, arising after the execution of the mortgage, that could not be foreclosed and determined in this action. (C. C. P., § 726; C. C., § 1241, subd. 4.)

It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant Nancy Merrill, wife of N. S. Merrill, has or claims to have some interest in or claim upon said premises or some part thereof, which interest or claim is subsequent to and subject to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage. This allegation not being denied, is sufficient to bind any interest that the defendant Nancy Merrill may have had in the land which arose after the execution of the mortgage; and as to the defendant N. S. Merrill, of course his interest in the land, whatever it may have been, was subject to the lien of the mortgage. No valid homestead claim is set out in the answer. It is alleged that in the year of our Lord eighteen, defendant was the head of a family, and at said time resided with his family on the land described in the complaint; and that at said time he made and acknowledged his certain declaration of homestead, etc. This declaration of homestead is too ancient to be good; it contains recitals which are against the knowledge of the Court. New matter, in order to constitute a bar or defense to any action, must not only be well pleaded, but must disclose some existing claim or right in the party pleading it as well.

It is admitted by counsel for appellants that the precise time at which the homestead right attached is not disclosed in the answer, but it is claimed that the Court will presume that the homestead attached prior to plaintiff's mortgage, etc. To so hold would be to overrule the well-settled doctrine that no presumptions can be indulged as against a final judgment.

It is alleged in the complaint, and the Court found, that there is due plaintiff upon the note and mortgage set out in the complaint, in addition to the amount due for principal and interest, the sum of $188.65, for attorneys' fees, etc. This is sufficient. (See The Stockton Savings and Loan Society v. Donnelly, 9 P. C. L. J. 487.)

There being no bill of exceptions before this Court, the ruling of the lower Court granting plaintiff's motion for a judgment upon the pleadings can not be reviewed upon this appeal. (Hemme v. Hays, 55 Cal. 337, which see, as being very similar to the case at bar.)

All presumptions are in favor of the validity and regularity of the judgment. If necessary to support the judgment this Court will presume that the lower Court heard testimony, fixed the attorney's fees, and did everything necessary in order to a valid judgment. For aught that appears in the record, the lower Court attended to all of these matters.

McKee, J.:

This appeal is taken on the judgment roll, from a final judgment entered on the pleadings in the case. The judgment was entered in an action commenced December 8, 1881, to foreclose a mortgage given to secure payment of a promissory note and a counsel fee, at the rate of five per cent. upon the principal and interest due upon the note in case of foreclosure. In the complaint it was alleged that the wife of the mortgagor, who was named in the complaint as a party defendant, had or claimed to have some interest in or lien upon the mortgage premises, which she claimed to have acquired subsequent and subject to the mortgage lien; and that, since the execution of the mortgage the mortgagor had become insolvent, and, therefore, against him, no judgment was asked for any deficiency after a sale of the mortgage premises. By the answer of the defendants all the allegations of the complaint were admitted; but it was affirmatively averred that the mortgagor had been adjudicated insolvent on October 29, 1881, and that all proceedings against him, as an insolvent debtor, had been stayed. Also, "that on the ——— day of ———, A. D., 18—," the defendant, as head of a family, had acquired a homestead interest in the mortgaged premises, by making, acknowledging, and filing, according to law, "on that day," a declaration of homestead upon the premises.

Upon these pleadings the Court, on motion, gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, according to the prayer of his complaint, for the amount of the principal and interest of the mortgage debt, and $188.65, "attorney's fee provided in the mortgage," and costs; and to this no exception was taken by the defendants. But it is contended that the judgment is erroneous, because the answer contained matter which operated as a bar to the maintenance of the action.

The adjudication of the defendant's insolvency, did not constitute a defense to the action, nor did the existence of a stay of all proceedings against the insolvent debtor have that effect. The action was not brought against the insolvent to recover a money judgment upon the debt; it was brought to obtain a decree of foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises for the satisfaction of the debt. As a creditor of the insolvent debtor, having a mortgage lien, the plaintiff had the right, when the mortgagor was adjudged insolvent, to look to the mortgage alone, or to prove the mortgage debt against the estate of the insolvent, pursuant to the provisions of Section 44 of the Insolvent Act. (Stats. 1880, p. 92.) According to those provisions, a mortgage creditor of an insolvent debtor is not permitted to prove his debt in whole, unless he releases or transfers his mortgage to the assignee in insolvency; nor in part, unless he agrees with the assignee upon the value of the mortgaged premises, and the value should be less than the mortgage debt; or unless he agrees that a sale of the mortgaged premises may be made, under an order of the Court, "in such manner as the Court may direct;" in such cases he will be admitted to prove any deficiency. Or, if he releases or transfers his mortgage to the assignee, he will be admitted to prove the entire debt and share in the administration of the assets. But unless the value of the mortgaged premises shall be ascertained by agreement, or the property itself shall be sold under the directions of the Court, or the mortgage shall have been released or transferred to the assignee in insolvency, it is not permissible for the mortgage creditor to prove his debt in whole or in part, nor to maintain any action against the insolvent debtor for the collection of his debt. Such an action would be against the policy of the insolvent law and in violation of the order of the Court, which stayed all proceedings against the insolvent debtor. Yet as the assignee in insolvency takes only such interest and rights as the insolvent debtor had in the mortgaged premises, subject to the mortgage, the insolvency proceedings do not affect the right of the mortgagee to foreclose his lien; and in this case the mortgagee relied wholly on his mortgage lien. By his complaint he waived personal judgment for any deficiency which might be remaining after execution of a foreclosure and sale; he, therefore, had no debt or claim proved or prov-able against the estate of the insolvent debtor, and as his action was not to enforce the collection of his debt out of the assets of the estate, it could not interfere with the insolvency proceedings, and the order staying all proceedings against the estate did not operate to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining the action.

But if the order could be construed as having any effect whatever upon the right of the plaintiff to sue for foreclosure, the Court that made the order had jurisdiction to modify or set it aside in favor of a mortgage creditor, so as to permit him to proceed by action on the equity side of the Court to foreclose; and the presumption is, that the "stay" was so modified or set aside as to the plaintiff, because the complaint avers, and it is not denied, "that the action was brought by leave of the Court first had and obtained." The stay of proceedings, therefore, in no way affected the right of the plaintiff to maintain his action, nor did it operate to postpone the action pending the insolvency proceedings.

Nor did the answer otherwise disclose any defense to the action, or contain any matter which would defeat or delay the action. The new matter, by which the defendant attempted to assert a homestead claim or interest in the mortgaged premises, was not well pleaded; it did not, affirmatively or otherwise, show any existing claim which had attached prior to the mortgage lien. Taken in connection with the admission by the defendants of the allegations in the complaint, that the "claim" asserted by the defendants was subsequent and subject to the mortgage, the answer itself must be regarded as frivolous—it admitted every averment in the complaint, and contained no defense; and the case was one in which it was proper for the Court to order judgment for the plaintiff upon the pleadings. (Hemme v. Hays, 55 Cal. 337.)

And in adjudging that the plaintiff was entitled to the sum awarded for an attorney's fee, as provided in the mortgage, there appears no error. It was the duty of the Court to fix the amount of the attorney's fee. (Stats. 1873-4, p. 707.) Presumably the Court discharged that duty. The judgment rendered recites that there was due the amount stated, for principal and interest, upon the mortgage debt, and one hundred and eighty-eight dollars and sixty-five cents for an attorney's fee, provided in the mortgage, and the judgment to that effect was according to the allegations and prayer of the complaint in the case. There is no bill of exceptions or statement on appeal, and, in the absence from the record of anything to the contrary, it must be presumed by the appellate Court, that the Court below proceeded regularly in fixing the amount of the attorney's fee, and that the judgment is, in all respects, correct. (Hastings v. Cunningham, 39 Cal. 137.)

OCCIDENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION v. J. H. SULLIVAN ET AL.

CONSTRUCTION OF BY-LAW OF CORPORATION — CONTRACT — PENALTY — FORFEITURE — MORTGAGE — FORECLOSURE — Action to foreclose mortgage, etc. The defendants, S. and wife, owners of stock in the plaintiff corporation, a building and loan association, borrowed money from the plaintiff, and executed their promissory notes to it. To secure the payment of the notes, they mortgaged certain real estate, and hypothecated their stock to the plaintiff. The ninth by-law of the plaintiff is as follows: "Every stockholder for every share of stock shall pay to the Secretary, on the second Wednesday in every month, the sum of one dollar in gold." The eleventh by-law of the plaintiff is in the following words: "Any stockholder failing to pay his or her monthly installments or interest shall pay a fine of ten per cent. per month upon the amount of the indebtedness. This fine shall be charged by the Secretary, and collected with the delinquent's monthly dues; and in case any stockholder shall neglect or refuse to pay the monthly dues or fines for the space of six months, the Secretary shall tender to the delinquent the amount actually paid in, deducting all fines and forfeitures that may be charged against him or her, and from that time he or she shall cease to be a member of the association."

Held: 1. By-law xi. in no way affects or changes the terms of any contract of loan between the association and a stockholder; 2. The word "interest" in by-law xi. does not refer to interest due upon any loan from the corporation to a stockholder; 3. Penalties and forfeitures are not to be favored, but must be created by unambiguous language.

APPEAL by defendants from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. DENSON, J.

Action of foreclosure of mortgage. The defendants, S. and wife, were the owners of six shares of stock in the plaintiff corporation, a building and loan association in the city of Sacramento, and on two several dates borrowed money from the plaintiff, for which they executed their promissory notes. To secure the payment of the promissory notes, they mortgaged to the plaintiff certain real estate, and hypothecated to the plaintiff the said stock. The first note was as follows:

SACRAMENTO, December 16, 1879.

"Six years after date I promise to pay to the order of the Occidental Building and Loan Association eight hundred dollars in gold coin, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, in like gold coin, to be paid monthly, on the second Wednesday of each month. Should default be made in any of the payments aforesaid, or in the payment of any installment hereafter to fall due on my stock in said Association, then said Association may, at its option, declare the whole debt to be due, and proceed at pleasure to enforce its collection.

"EMMA SULLIVAN,

"JAMES H. SULLIVAN."

The second, in all essential particulars, was the same. Nothing was paid on either of the notes, or as installments on the stock, except such amounts as became due prior to the second Wednesday in May, 1881. In September, 1881, the plaintiff declared the whole of the notes to be due, for default in the payment of the interest thereon and in the payment of the installments on the stock, and commenced this action to recover judgment and to foreclose its lien. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. H. McKune, for Appellants.

The plaintiff bases its claim to compound interest on the notes sued on, and the installments due on stock per month, on by-law xi. The language is: "Any stockholder failing to pay his or her monthly installment, or interest, shall pay a fine of ten per cent. per month on the amount of the indebtedness."

Plaintiff claims that the words "or interest" mean interest on any note the stockholder may have given the plaintiff. The defendants insist that the words have no reference to any interest on a note outstanding, but refer to and mean the same thing as installments.

That the latter is the true construction, we submit the following considerations: It is only a stockholder to whom the words apply. To hold the contrary would be to determine that the plaintiff discriminates against its members, and whilst a mere borrower can secure loans at simple interest, a member must pay compound interest at ten per cent. per month. If the construction claimed by plaintiff be correct, it can not only claim ten per cent. on the interest due but upon the whole debt. There are no apt words in the by-law showing an intention to levy ten per cent. per month fine on a borrower.

And this Court ought not to construe the by-law to favor a harsh construction. There may be reasons why a by-law shall be so framed as to require a member to pay a ten per cent. per month fine on installments, but there can be none to levy such a fine on a borrower. The defendants, as to the notes, have a right to stand on their contract under the Civil Code, and the by-law in question can not be made to interpolate a new provision in the notes sued on.

If that had been the intention of the framers of by-law xi., apt words would have been used, indicating it clearly. Even plaintiff does not now claim that the word "indebtedness" covers the principal of the notes given. Why, then, the interest? The notes, whether due or not, are debts, and the interest is part of the debt. If the word "indebtedness" applies at all to the loan, it covers the whole loan and the interest to accrue thereon. This consideration shows that the word "indebtedness" contained in by-law xi. is limited to the monthly installments; called, also, interest on stock. This construction is further strengthened by the further provision of the same article, wherein the consequences of default are pointed out and provided for, i. e., the stockholder ceases to be such. The fines are charged against the stockholder. He is credited with the amount paid in, and the secretary tenders the balance to the stockholder, thus providing for an equitable adjustment of accounts, without reference to any loans or the interest.

The construction given by plaintiff to its by-laws is simply outrageous. It takes the stock — gives no credit for payments. The installments and fines go on and accumulate, and the stockholder finds himself ruined by what he is led to believe by the company to be a friendly party.

Frecman & Bates, for Respondent.

The plaintiff is a building and loan association, having a capital stock, on each share of which an installment of one dollar is due on the second Wednesday of each month. At each regular monthly meeting the association loans its moneys to the highest bidder, the sum bid being called premium. It is of the utmost importance to the association that the installments and interest be paid when due, otherwise it could not regularly offer its moneys to be loaned and bid for. It therefore imposes the fine, shown by article xi., which is "ten per cent. per month on the amount of the indebtedness." Indebtedness, as here used, means installment on stock and the interest, if any, falling due each month on loans. There is no reason to suppose that "installments" and "interest" mean the same thing. The association was primarily to loan to stockholders. It was expected that each month moneys would be due from stockholders, both for installments and for interest. It was equally important that both sums should be paid, and the fine was therefore put against both.

McKINSTRY, J.:

Plaintiff's by-law ix. provides: "Every stockholder for every share of stock shall pay to the Secretary, on the second Wednesday in every month, the sum of one dollar in gold." And by-law xi.: "Any stockholder failing to pay his or her monthly installments or interest shall pay a fine of ten per cent. per month upon the amount of the indebtedness. This fine shall be charged by the Secretary, and collected with the delinquent's monthly dues; and in case any stockholder shall neglect or refuse to pay the monthly dues or fines for the space of six months, the Secretary shall tender to the delinquent the amount actually paid in, deducting all fines and forfeitures that may be charged against him or her, and from that time he or she shall cease to be a member of the association."

It was held by the Court below that the fine imposed for the non-payment of any monthly installment or installments (as required by the ninth by-law), "or interest," is ten per cent. upon the installment due and ten per cent. upon all interest due, upon any loan which may have been made by plaintiff to the stockholder. Even if this were assumed to be true, it would by no means follow that the failure to pay the fine could be made to constitute a term of the contract of loan, so that if, as in the case before us, the loan is represented by promissory note secured by mortgage, the note or mortgage can be made to read, not only that the borrower shall pay the fines and the same be secured by the mortgage, but that a failure to pay a "fine" shall make the whole principal sum due, although the loan has not otherwise matured. The only consequence provided in by-law xi., in case a stockholder shall fail to pay (for six months) his monthly dues (installments) or fines, or interest, is that if the Secretary shall tender to the delinquent the amount actually paid in — deducting all fines and forfeitures that may be charged against him or her — from that time he or she "shall cease to be a member of the association."

By-law xi. in no way affects or changes the terms of any contract of loan between the association and a stockholder. We are convinced, however, that the word "interest" as used in the by-law does not refer to interest due upon any loan from the corporation to a stockholder. Penalties and forfeitures are not to be favored; they must be created by unambiguous language.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JAMES DOVE ET AL. v. MATTHEW NUNAN.

EXEMPTION FROM EXECUTION — HORSES AND WAGON OF TEAMSTERS — EXECUTION — TROVER — SHERIFF. — The plaintiff claimed the property consisting of two horses and a wagon as exempt from execution. The Court below found that "the plaintiffs were and are a firm doing business as coal dealers. * * * That the plaintiffs used the property sued for as teamsters. That they hauled coal and other commodities for others, for hire and pay, and received money therefor; all of which was expended in the support of plaintiffs and their families, all of whom resided in the same house and ate at the same table. That as coal dealers, and for the purpose of delivering coal at retail and in small quantities, the plaintiffs had and owned a smaller cart, truck, or wagon, and one other horse. That the only use which the plaintiffs made of the wagon and horses, the subject of this suit, for themselves, other than as teamsters for pay, was in hauling coal and wood from plaintiffs' coal yard, and other coal and wood yards, to the place where the plaintiffs retailed the same, as above found herein.

Held: The findings are not sufficient to show that the property is exempt. In order to entitle a party to claim as exempt from execution two horses, etc., under the sixth subdivision of Section 690, C. C. P., he must show that he is a cartman, drayman, truckman, huckster, peddler, teamster, or other laborer, and that he habitually earns his living by the use of such property.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. DAINGERFIELD, J.

Action for the conversion of personal property. The defendant, as Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, justified under writs of attachment, judgments, and executions in three several actions against the plaintiffs in this action, under which executions the property alleged to have been converted was sold by him, and the proceeds of such sale applied towards the satisfaction of the judgments. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

This is a parallel case with Brusie v. Griffiths, 84 Cal. 302. See also, Calhoun v. Knight, 10 id. 398.

A. W. Thompson, for Respondents.

Ross, J.:

The property in controversy consists of two horses and a wagon, and is claimed by the plaintiffs to have been exempt from execution by virtue of the sixth subdivision of Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Court below found that "the plaintiffs were and are a firm doing business as coal dealers. * * * That the plaintiffs used the property sued for as teamsters. That they hauled coal and other commodities for others, for hire and pay, and received money therefor; all of which was expended in the support of plaintiffs and their families, all of whom resided in the same house and ate at the same table. That as coal dealers, and for the purpose of delivering coal at retail and in small quantities, the plaintiffs had and owned a smaller cart, truck, or wagon, and one other horse. That the only use which the plaintiffs made of the wagon and horses, the subject of this suit, for themselves, other than as teamsters for pay, was in hauling coal and wood from plaintiffs' coal yard, and other coal and wood yards, to the place where the plaintiffs retailed the same, as above found herein." The fact that the plaintiffs used the horses and wagon in question as teamsters for hire, and that they expended the money thus received in the support of themselves and their families, did not exempt the property from execution. In order to entitle a party to claim as exempt from execution two horses, etc., under the sixth subdivision of Section 690, he must show that he is a cartman, drayman, truckman, huckster, peddler, teamster, or other laborer, and that he habitually earns his living by the use of such horses, etc. (C. C. P., § 690; Brusie v. Griffiths, 34 Cal. 302.) The findings in this case do not show that state of facts.

CATHERINE C. HORGAN v. WILLIAM AMICK.

GRAIN HARVESTED FROM HOMESTEAD NOT EXEMPT FROM EXECUTION.

HOMESTEAD — CROP — EXECUTION — EXEMPTION — TROVER. — Grain which was harvested from lands constituting a homestead (lands which before the declaration of homestead were community property) is not, as such, exempt from execution.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Yolo. BUSH, J.

Action to recover a lot of wheat, or the value thereof. The plaintiff was a married woman, the wife of Cornelius Horgan. The defendant, a constable, justified under writs of attachment against the husband of plaintiff. A bill of exceptions shows that the action was determined in the Court below on the following agreed statements of facts:

1. That the wheat described in the complaint was raised by the husband of plaintiff, upon the premises in said complaint described; plaintiff at that time residing with her husband and doing the household work.

2. That the seed from which said wheat was raised was sowed partly in the month of September, 1880, and partly in the month of January, 1881.

3. That at the time of the filing of the declaration of homestead in said complaint mentioned, all of said grain was growing and above the ground, but the same was not cut until more than one month after the filing of said declaration.

4. That said wheat was taken by defendant on the said premises, on the same day that the same was threshed.

5. That the value of said wheat was and is the sum of five hundred and fifty-one dollars and sixty-six cents.

6. That the allegations in the answer concerning the issuance and levy of the writs of attachment therein mentioned, and concerning the actions in which said writs were issued, are true.

After the decision in department, a petition for hearing in bank was presented and denied.

J. C. Ball, Jo. Craig, and J. W. Armstrong, for Appellants.

The plaintiff must, to bring her case within the exception to the general rule that all property of the judgment debtor is liable to execution, show that the wheat was exempt from execution. Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains an enumeration of all the property which is exempt from execution; but wheat grown upon the homestead is not among the enumerated property. The homestead itself is not included; but Section 1240 of the Civil Code declares: "The homestead is exempt from execution on forced sale, except as in this title provided." Nothing is said about wheat grown on the homestead; but when the homestead is of greater value than $5,000, and is sold under proceedings under execution as directed by the Civil Code, §§ 1245 to 1255, the amount of the homestead exemption must be paid to the claimant, and the balance of the proceeds of sale must be applied in satisfaction of the execution (C. C., § 1256); and Section 1257 of that Code declares: "The money paid to the claimant is entitled, for the period of six months thereafter, to the same protection against legal process and the voluntary disposition of the husband, which the law gives to the homestead." Wheat grown on the land is not "money paid to the claimant," and is not within this section.

This is the definition of a homestead as given in Section 1237 of the Civil Code: "The homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in the title provided." Then as wheat, threshed wheat, is neither a dwelling-house nor land, it is not a "homestead," and if not a "homestead," it is not within Section 1240 of the Civil Code, already cited, which only mentions the "homestead" as exempt from execution.

According to the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the enumeration of property in Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in Sections 1240 and 1257 of the Civil Code, which shall be exempt from execution, excludes all other property from exemption, and the following cases were decided upon this principle: Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418; Robert v. Adams, 38 id. 383; Brusie v. Griffiths, 34

id. 302. If the Legislature had intended that the "rents, issues, and profits" of the homestead should be exempt from execution, they would have so provided in terms, and would have declared that the husband should not make a voluntary disposition thereof, as they did in the case of the proceeds of the sale of the homestead. In construing the sections of the Codes cited, the Court will "not insert what has been omitted, or omit what has been inserted." (C. C. P., § 1858.)

The judgment should be reversed.

W. B. Treadwell, for Respondent.

This case presents but one question, viz.: Whether a crop of grain, raised on premises constituting a homestead, when the value of the land and crop together is less than five thousand dollars, is exempt from execution for the debts of the husband. The Court below held that such crop was so exempt, and we submit that this ruling is correct. The statute concerning homesteads, like other statutes of exemption, is founded upon considerations of public policy, beneficial in their nature, and is therefore to be liberally expounded in furtherance of the object intended to be attained. (Thompson on Homesteads, §§ 4, 7, and authorities therein cited.) In determining what constitutes the homestead exemption, the reason and spirit of the law must be considered, and such a construction given as will include within the exemption all things coming under that reason and not contrary to the letter of the law, while excluding all things not within that reason, even though apparently within the letter. In conformity with this rule the Courts have always been liberal in ascertaining the extent of this exemption, so as to carry into effect the intention of the Legislature in creating it. (Id., Chap. iii., Art. i.; Greeley v. Scott, 2 Woods, 657; Clark v. Shannon, 1 Nev. 568; Goldman v. Clark, id. 607; Krueger v. Pierce, 37 Wis. 269; Hubbell v. Canady, 58 Ill. 427; Stevens v. Hollingsworth, 74 id. 206; Anderson v. McKay, 30 Tex. 186; Bunker v. Paquette, 37 Mich. 79.) The object of the homestead exemption is not merely to afford a naked shelter to the family, but, like all other exemptions, to afford it a means of livelihood, and thus to prevent its members from being driven by destitution to seek a support from public charity. The policy of the law in this country has always been, so far as possible, to prevent persons, whether through misfortune or improvidence, from becoming a charge upon the public purse; and, to this end, the statutes of exemption have been so framed as to secure to all persons the means of obtaining a support through their own exertions. In view of this fact, it would be absurd to suppose that the Legislature intended that, though the land and buildings constituted a homestead, the owners should not be allowed to use them for any useful purpose. It has been frequently decided that a homestead may include or consist of a garden or farm; but, if the products of such farm are not exempt, then all motives for exertion are withdrawn in the very cases to which the statute was intended to apply, viz.: those in which the owners are in impoverished circumstances. To construe this statute otherwise would not only defeat its manifest object, but would convert it into an instrument of fraud and oppression. On the theory of appellant, a man may invest $5,000 in a splendid and luxurious mansion, and place it beyond the reach of his creditors; but if he has a little farm worth $1,000, and is content with the humble shelter of a cottage, he dare not raise food for his hungry family upon those premises, without allowing a rapacious creditor to seize it before it can be used. So to hold would make the statute a mockery. On the contrary, we contend that, at least in cases where the total exemption does not exceed the statutory limit of $5,000, the debtor may safely cultivate the homestead premises or apply them to any other useful purpose, and that the fruit of such exertions will be beyond the reach of creditors. In accordance with these views it has been decided that the proceeds of an insurance policy on a homestead building are exempt (Houghton v. Lee, 50 Cal. 101); that butter made from the milk of an exempt cow is also exempt (Leavitt v. Metcalf, 2 Vt. 342; S. C., 19 Am. Dec. 718); and that the exemption of a horse includes a saddle and bridle necessary for its beneficial use (Cobbs v. Coleman, 14 Tex. 594).

The cases cited by appellant (Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418; Brusie v. Griffiths, 34 id. 302; and Robert v. Adams, 38 id. 383) are in no respect in conflict with these views, but decidedly support them. In all of them the inquiry was not whether the thing claimed as exempt was within the strict letter of the law, but whether it was included within its reason and spirit. As was said in the latter case: "From this summary of the Act, it is entirely plain that its purpose was to secure to the judgment debtor the means to prosecute his vocation, and thus earn a support for himself and family. In securing to a farmer two * * * horses, * * * the Legislature intended, by this exemption, to enable him to prosecute his business of farming, in the ordinary sense of that term; and the * * * horses * * * which are reserved to him must be such as are suitable and intended for that use. If a contrary construction of this provision were to prevail, a farmer in failing circumstances might invest his whole estate in two valuable stallions or race horses, worth $10,000 or $20,000 each, with no intention whatever to use them for farming purposes; and, by claiming them as exempt from execution, might defraud his creditors, under color of law, to a large amount. The benevolent design of the statute might thus be perverted to purposes of the grossest fraud." Accordingly it was held in that case that a stallion, owned by a farmer, but used and intended for breeding purposes only, was not exempt. It will thus be seen that the manifest purpose and object of the Act was held to control the meaning of the words used, and to exclude things included within the letter of the law, when the object intended required their exclusion.

So far as we have been able to ascertain, the precise question here involved has been discussed or decided in one case only. In that case it was held that the profits of the homestead were exempt in the same manner as the homestead itself. (Marshall v. Cook, 46 Ga. 302.)

McKINSTRY, J.:

Is grain which was harvested from lands constituting a homestead (lands which before the declaration of homestead were community property) exempt from execution for debts of the husband?

All the products of the homestead are not in terms made to constitute a portion of the homestead. It is urged that homestead laws are framed upon considerations of public policy, beneficial in their nature, and ought to be liberally expounded. We agree that such laws should be construed in such manner as shall further the object intended to be attained, and as will include within the exemption all things coming within the spirit of the law, except where such construction is contrary to the evident meaning of the statute, or (where the statute is silent) of other statutes bearing upon the subject. But reading our homestead law in connection with Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it seems clear that the Legislature intended that the whole crop of grain raised upon a homestead farm, without reference to its quality, should not be exempt from execution. The third subdivision of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to reads: "The farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor; also, two oxen, or two horses, or two mules, and their harness; one cart or wagon, and food for such oxen, horses, or mules for one month; also, all seed, grain, or vegetables actually provided, reserved, or on hand for the purpose of planting or sowing at any time within the ensuing six months, not exceeding in value the sum of two hundred dollars, and seventy-five bee-hives, and one horse and vehicle belonging to any person who is maimed or crippled, and the same is necessary in his business."

It would be giving a strained interpretation of the language of the foregoing to say it was intended, in addition to all the crop grown upon the homestead, that the debtor should be secured seed-grain to the value of two hundred dollars. It is obvious it is meant that only grain to that amount shall be exempt. It does not appear that the statutes of Georgia, under which Marshall v. Cook, 46 Ga. 302, was decided, were like ours.

Judgment reversed.

APPEAL by plaintiff from judgment of the Superior Court of the County of San Joaquin. PATERSON, J.

Petition for writ of prohibition. The petition shows: The petitioner is a corporation engaged in the warehouse business at Stockton, in this State. On the first Monday of March, 1881, it was the owner of certain real and personal property, and also had certain wheat, barley, etc., in its warehouses upon storage; the property so on storage had been received from various persons, to each of whom the petitioner had issued a warehouse receipt for the grain by him stored, which receipts were transferable, and carried the ownership of the property represented thereby. In the early part of said month of March, the Assessor of San Joaquin County presented to petitioner a blank form of a statement, or "assessment list," with directions that it fill out and return the same on or before the thirtieth day of that month. Pursuant to this request the corporation, by its Secretary, made out, verified, and returned to the Assessor said list, containing a statement of all its property, real and personal, by it owned on said first Monday in March, and to which the Assessor gave the value of thirty-three thousand two hundred and ninety-five dollars. At the request of said Assessor, it made a further statement that there were certain lots of wheat, barley, rye, and beans in its warehouse on said first Monday, giving the amounts thereof, and which had been left there on storage by various persons, to whom transfer-able receipts had been given for each lot separately, and that it could not tell who then owned any of said property, or what was its value, and that it did not own or claim any part of said property; and then requested said Assessor that if he proposed to assess any of said property to it, that he would assess the same to it as bailee, that it might have its remedy against the owners for taxes paid thereon. The Assessor refused to make the assessment to it as bailee, and arbitrarily entered an assessment against it for the property, valued at two hundred and ninety-nine thousand six hundred and thirty-four dollars, and upon which the tax amounted to three thousand eight hundred and ninety-five dollars and twenty-four cents. The property was all assessed to petitioner individually, and not as bailee or trustee, etc., and constituted but one assessment; but on the assessment roll the assessor entered the following remark opposite the property held on storage, viz.: "The grain herein assessed to the Farmers' Co-operative Union was in their possession on the first Monday of March, at twelve o'clock M., A. D. 1881, and they, the said Farmers' Co-operative Union, refused to give any information in regard to the ownership thereof or by whom it was stored." When the time arrived for paying the taxes of 1881, petitioner tendered the amount of taxes assessed upon its property, which the Collector refused to receive; whereupon the petitioner instituted this proceeding to prohibit a sale of its property for the tax alleged to be illegal. The application for a writ in the Court below was denied, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the writ, and a general demurrer to the petition was sustained.

F. T. Baldwin and Pillsbury & Titus, for Appellant.

We submit that this is a proper case for the writ to issue. By Section 5 of Article vi. of the new Constitution, it is provided that the Superior Court shall have original jurisdiction of "all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for." There was no such provision in the old Constitution. The Legislature of 1881, following this provision of the new Constitution, amended Section 1102 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to permit the writ to run against a person exercising ministerial as well as judicial functions. There is nothing, as we understand them, in the cases of Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 111; Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 id. 289; and Camron v. Kenfield, 57 id. 550, which militates against our position that the writ will lie from the Superior Court to restrain a board or officer, whether exercising judicial or ministerial functions. There can be no question that the Legislature intended to confer on the Superior Court by its amendment to Section 1102, before cited, the power invoked by the petitioner in this case. We insist that under this clause of the new Constitution, authorizing it to confer upon the Superior Court jurisdiction of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for, the Legislature had the power to confer such jurisdiction upon that Court in a case like the one at bar, and the mode or manner of conferring it, whether by extending the scope of the writ of prohibition, or providing a new or different form of proceeding, was a matter entirely within the discretion of that body.

J. C. Campbell, for Respondent.

Prohibition is not the proper remedy for alleged illegal taxation. (Savings and Loan Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 455-459; Houghton v. Austin, 47 id. 651; Bucknall v. Story, 36 id. 67; C. P. R. R. v. Corcoran, 48 id. 65; Smith v. Commissioners of Leavenworth, 9 Kans. 300; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 606; Lincoln v. City of Worcester, 8 Cush. 55; Howe v. City of Boston, 7 id. 277.) In Brewer v. City of Springfield, 97 Mass. 152, the Court say that the taxpayer suffers no wrong until he pays the tax; and if it be illegal, he can recover it back. An action for the recovery of money paid under protest, is the remedy prescribed in the State of California for illegal taxation. (Meek v. McClure, 49 Cal. 628; Bank of Mendocino v. Chalfant, 51 id. 369; Smith v. Farrelly, 52 id. 80; Bank of Santa Rosa v. Chalfant, 52 id. 170; De Fremery v. Austin, 53 id. 380.) The writ of prohibition will not run to a Tax Collector, for the reason that he is a ministerial and not a judicial officer. The writ of prohibition will not issue to prevent a ministerial officer from performing acts ministerial. (Camron v. Kenfield, 57 id. 550; Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 id. 289; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 id. 111.)

The petitioner, in his able brief, attempts to avoid the effect of the decision in the case of Camron v. Kenfield, upon the ground that the Legislature have the power under the Constitution to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Superior Court.

We can not see, from reading the Constitution, where any power is given the Legislature to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts that has not been given the same body to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. But it is not a question of the jurisdiction of the Courts, but a question of enlarging the office of the writ of prohibition. Section 5, Article vi., of the Constitution gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction to issue writs of prohibition. Section 5 of the same article gives the Superior Court the same jurisdiction. It can be readily seen, by comparing the two sections, that both Courts have the same jurisdiction in regard to writs of prohibition. And the Legislature, in their amendment to Section 1102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, did not attempt to enlarge the jurisdiction of either of the Courts; but they did attempt to enlarge the province of the writ of prohibition; and that, we submit, under the decisions of our own State, can not be done. And the decision in Camron v. Kenfield is as applicable to writs issued from the Superior Courts as it is to writs issued from the Supreme Court. Hence we submit that the judgment should be affirmed.

The Court:

This case is within the principle decided in Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550, in which it was held that the Legislature could not enlarge or extend the office of the writ of prohibition so as to include ministerial functions. We perceive no distinction, in this regard, in the provisions of the Constitution relating to the Supreme Court and the Superior Courts.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. MARTIN MITCHELL.

TRIAL — STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY COUNSEL — IRREGULARITY. — In his closing argument to the jury the District Attorney was permitted by the Court, notwithstanding the objection and exception of defendant, to aver, and argue from, the existence of facts as to which no evidence had been offered or introduced.

Held: For counsel to state facts not proven or sought to be proven is, in effect, to place unsworn evidence before the jury, and when improper evidence is admitted without objection on one side, this will not authorize improper evidence on the other. It is error sufficient to reverse a judgment for counsel, against objection, to state facts pertinent to the issue and not in evidence, or to assume, arguendo, such facts to be in the case when they are not.

Id. — Id. — Id. — CASE DISTINGUISHED. — People v. Bernhart, 50 Cal. 331, has no bearing upon the question now involved.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the County of Butte. HUNDLEY, J.

Beardon & Freer and F. C. Lusk, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

McKINSTRY, J.:

In his closing argument to the jury the District Attorney was permitted by the Court — notwithstanding the objection and exception of defendant — to aver, and argue from, the existence of facts as to which no evidence had been offered or introduced.

The impropriety of the statements, and apparently their materiality, were conceded by the District Attorney and by the Court, but the Court held that the District Attorney was justified in departing from the testimony, because counsel for defendant had done the same thing. If the record showed (which it does not) that such statements had been made by counsel for defendant, the fact would not cure the error of the Court. The District Attorney might have objected to such statements on the part of defendant's counsel when they were made, or have asked the Court specifically to charge the jury that they were to be disregarded. But to say that because an impropriety on the one side has passed unrebuked, it ceases to be an impropriety when committed on the other, would lead to confusion worse confounded. The jury would have the allegations of fact of the respective counsel pitted against each other, and the fate of a defendant would, perhaps, be determined, not by the evidence in the case, but by the degree of confidence which the jury might repose in the honesty or intelligence—or both combined—of one or the other of the counsel. For counsel to state a fact not proven or sought to be proven, is, in effect, to place unsworn evidence before the jury; and when improper evidence is admitted without objection on the one side, this will not authorize improper evidence on the other. (Donelly v. Curran, 54 Cal. 282.) Only sworn testimony can go to the jury. (People v. Wheeler, 9 Pac. C. L. J. 581, and cases there cited; 41 N. H. 317; 66 Me. 564; 67 N. Y. 638; 22 Iowa, 504; 49 Ind. 33, 124; 51 id. 507; 15 Ga. 633; 25 id. 225; 33 Conn. 471; 75 N. C. 306.)

In Brown v. Swineford, 44 Wis. 291, Ryan, C. J., said: "It sufficiently appears in the present case that the learned counsel for plaintiff did not properly confine his closing argument to a reply. * * * The learned counsel went beyond the legitimate scope of all argument, by stating and commenting on facts not in evidence." "Enough appears to show, not only that the learned counsel commented on facts not in evidence, but in effect testified to facts himself." * * *

"The appellant took his exception, and his counsel now supports it by numerous cases, some of which are—so far as they go—admirable discussions of professional ethics," etc. "All of them support the rule now adopted by this Court, that it is error sufficient to reverse a judgment, for counsel, against objection, to state facts pertinent to the issue, and not in evidence, or to assume arguendo such facts to be in the case when they are not. Some of the cases go further, and reverse judgments for imputation by counsel of facts not pertinent to the issue, but calculated to prejudice the case." (Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 317; State v. Smith, 75 N. C. 306; Ferguson v. State, 49 Ind. 33; Hennies v. Vogel, Sup. Ct. Ill. 7 Cent. L. J. 18.) "Doubtless the Circuit Court can, as it did in this case" (but as the Superior Court in the case, the record of which is now before us, did not), "charge the jury to disregard all statements of fact not in evidence. But it is not so certain a jury will do so," etc. There are cases in other States, it is said, in conflict with the rule above laid down. But the rule is supported by principle; in this State by precedent, and, as we believe, by the great weight of authority everywhere. People v. Barnhart, 59 Cal. 381, has no direct bearing upon the question we have been considering. In that case there was a dispute between counsel as to the exact testimony of a witness. When such a dispute arises, if the presiding Judge is not prepared from his memory or notes to settle it — but is convinced that testimony was given with respect to the point as to which the dispute has arisen — he may submit the matter to the recollection of the jury. But, in the case now before us, there was no pretense in the Court below that there was any evidence tending to prove the matters asserted to be facts by the District Attorney.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF H. LOSHE, DECEASED.

BURDEN OF PROOF ON CONTEST OF CLAIM ALLOWED AGAINST ESTATE — ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS — CONTEST OF CLAIM — ACCOUNT OF EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR — BURDEN OF PROOF — EVIDENCE. — Under Section 1497, C. C. P., a claim which has been duly allowed, approved, and filed against the estate of a decedent is ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration, and in the event thereafter of a contest as to such claim arising in the course of administration, the burden of proof is on the contestant of such claim.

APPEAL by the claimant, John Ziegenbein, from the order or judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Placer, disallowing his claim, and also from the order of said Court denying a motion for a new trial. MYRES, J.

Contest of a claim on settlement of account of executor. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Jo Hamilton, for Appellant.

The claim of appellant having been allowed, approved, and filed against the estate, had the force and effect of a judgment. (Deck's Estate v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 667; Beckett v. Selover, 7 id. 228; Estate of Schroeder, 46 id. 319; Estate of McKinley, 49 id. 154.) Having the force and effect of a judgment, all the presumptions are in favor of its validity. (Estate of Schroeder, 46 id. 319; Hillebrant v. Burton, 17 Tex. 138.) In compelling the claimant to assume the affirmative on the contest, the Court below, therefore, committed an error.

C. A. & C. Tuttle, for Respondents.

At the hearing, the Court held that the affirmative of the issue lay with Ziegenbein, the creditor whose claim was contested, and this is assigned as error. We maintain the Court was correct. When a claim is allowed, the executor can not afterwards contest it. (Estate of McKinley, 49 Cal. 152.) If an executor rejects a claim, the claimant must sue. He then holds the affirmative of the issue. In other words, the one who presents a claim for allowance, if it is contested, must first offer testimony to show that it is correct. Is the case changed when the executor allows the claim, and so reports it in his account, and the other creditors then contest it? To say that the contesting creditors hold the affirmative is, in effect, asking them to prove a negative. The issue is this: Z., one creditor, alleges that the estate owes him eighteen thousand dollars, and G., another creditor, says the estate does not owe him. Certainly, if Z. does not prove his claim it can not be allowed.

Let us assume that the contesting creditor holds the affirmative. The case is called for trial, and the contesting creditor says he has no testimony to offer. Must judgment go for the claimant without proof? In any other case, if the one alleging a fact offers no testimony, he is nonsuited. We can not see that the allowance of the claim by the executor alters the case. His allowance does not bind the other creditors, if they choose to contest. (C. C. P., § 1635.)

MYRICK, J.:

In due time J. Ziegenbein presented in due form to the executor a claim against the above estate for $18,628.35. The executor indorsed upon the claim his allowance thereof at the sum of $18,548.35, rejecting an item of $80. The Judge of the Superior Court indorsed on the claim his approval of the allowance of the executor. The executor having filed his account and report of his administration, A. H. Gates and others, creditors of the estate, contested the account, and excepted thereto, especially the claim of Ziegenbein, and stated in writing their grounds of contest. A day for hearing the contest was set. At the hearing, the Judge of the Court below "ruled that the affirmative of the issue lay with the parties who sought to sustain the report of the executor."

This ruling was error. Section 1497, C. C. P., declares that a claim allowed and approved, and filed, shall be "ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration." When a claim, in the course of allowance and approval, reaches the point that it is to rank among the acknowledged debts of the estate, we apprehend that the claimant may rest on that point until he be attacked.

There are at least two points in the administration of an estate at which an approved claim may be contested, viz., when application is made for the sale of property (C. C. P., § 1540), and when an account is rendered for settlement (id., § 1636); but, in making the contest, the contestant has the affirmative, and must show cause. It is not necessary to consider how far the allowance and approval of a claim resemble or give the effect of a judgment; it is sufficient to say that such a claim is to "rank among the acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course." If it be an acknowledged debt, it is good until cause be shown.

Orders reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

THE MECHANICS' FOUNDRY OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. JOSEPH E. RYALL.

INJUNCTION AGAINST REPEATED TRESPASSES — EQUITY — INJUNCTION — TRESPASS — PLEADING — ACTION FOR AN INJUNCTION.—The complaint charges that the defendant "is a stockholder in said corporation (plaintiff), and was, up to July 23, 1879, an employee engaged in working in the foundry or shop of the plaintiff. That on said date, for good cause, defendant was dismissed from plaintiff's employ; that though thus discharged, he has ever since said date come daily to plaintiff's shop or foundry and insisted upon occupying his place as an employee of said plaintiff, and threatens continue daily so to do. That there is a certain part of said foundry known as a bench and floor, whereon the said Ryall formerly worked, and upon which he still daily intrudes, and threatens to continue to occupy said space, and to prevent any one else from working therein. That while the said Ryall thus refuses to vacate said bench and floor, it is impossible for said plaintiff to procure another workman to occupy and work in the said department. That the work of said shop is thus retarded, and the plaintiff is prevented from fulfilling its contracts and is obliged to refuse work, and to lose the profits thereof, and that if such conduct is not prevented the business of the corporation will be totally ruined. That in addition to the certainty of the said corporation's ultimate ruin by the continuation of said acts and conduct of this defendant, it has suffered damage, and will continue to be damaged by this defendant's acts and conduct, at the rate of $50 per week from the twenty-third of July, A. D. 1879."

Held: The complaint does not state facts sufficient to warrant the interposition of a court of equity.

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. DAINGERFIELD, J.

Action for injunction. The Court below, after trial, made the following findings of fact:

1. That the said Mechanics' Foundry of San Francisco is a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of California.

2. That the defendant was, prior to July 23, 1879, an employee of plaintiff, and was for good cause discharged, on said date, from plaintiff's employ. That after his discharge, he daily entered plaintiff's shop and occupied a certain floor in said shop and prevented any other workman from working there, until restrained by injunction issued in this action.

3. That on account of the conduct of defendant, it was impossible for plaintiff properly to turn out work and fulfill its contracts, and that the business of plaintiff was in danger of being ruined, unless the defendant was restrained from intruding into said shop.

4. That by the conduct of defendant, plaintiff was damaged in at least the sum of ten dollars, and would, if defendant had not been restrained, have been irreparably damaged in its business by the acts of defendant.

Judgment was thereupon given against the defendant for the sum of ten dollars damages, with interest at seven per cent. per annum from date of judgment till paid, and for costs of suit, and the injunction theretofore issued against him was made perpetual. The appeal was taken on the judgment roll.

R. Percy Wright, for Appellant.

The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the demurrer thereto should have been sustained. At the most, the facts alleged constitute only a case of ordinary trespass, for which it is apparent from the complaint that plaintiff had an adequate remedy without resort to a court of equity. There is no allegation that the defendant is unable to respond in damages, and none of the allegations which are held to be indispensable in order to justify the granting of an injunction. The complaint does not disclose any equity whatever. (Waldron v. Joiner, 5 Cal. 120; Burnett v. Whitesides, 13 id. 156; Tomlinson v. Rubio, 16 id. 206; Leach v. Day, 27 id. 644; Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 315; S. C., 11 Am. Dec. 484; Hatcher v. Hampton, 7 Ga. 49; Catching v. Terrell, 10 id. 576; Branton v. Bush, 32 id. 671; James v. Dixon, 20 Mo. 80; High on Injunctions, 2d ed., vol. 1, pp. 451-465.)

M. Eyre, Jr., for Respondent.

Ross, J.:

The complaint in this case does not state facts sufficient to warrant the interposition of a court of equity. It charges that the defendant "is a stockholder in said corporation (plaintiff), and was, up to July 23, 1879, an employee engaged in working in the foundry or shop of the plaintiff. That on said date, for good cause, defendant was dismissed from plaintiff's employ; that though thus discharged, he has, ever since said date, come daily to plaintiff's shop or foundry, and insisted upon occupying his place as an employee of said plaintiff, and threatens to continue daily so to do. That there is a certain part of said foundry known as a bench and floor, whereon the said Ryall formerly worked, and upon which he still daily intrudes, and threatens to continue to occupy said space, and to prevent any one else from working therein. That while the said Ryall thus refuses to vacate said bench and floor, it is impossible for said plaintiff to procure another workman to occupy and work in said department. That the work of said shop is thus retarded, and the plaintiff is prevented from fulfilling its contracts, and is obliged to refuse work and to lose the profits thereof, and that if such conduct is not prevented the business of the corporation will be totally ruined. That in addition to the certainty of the said corporation's ultimate ruin by the continuation of said acts and conduct of this defendant, it has suffered damage, and will continue to be damaged by this defendant's acts and conduct, at the rate of fifty dollars per week from the twenty-third of July, A. D. 1879."

It is only by inference that the complaint charges the defendant with the commission of a trespass. But even repeated trespasses are not of themselves sufficient to justify the interference of a court of equity by injunction. (Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 332; S. C., 11 Am. Dec. 484; Catching v. Terrell, 10 Ga. 576; Thomas v. James, 32 Ala. 725; High on Injunctions, 2d ed., vol. 1, p. 476; Hilliard on Injunctions, 3d ed., 345.) There is no averment in the complaint in this case, that the defendant is insolvent; nor does it appear therefrom that the wrongs complained of are irreparable, or destructive of the plaintiff's estate in its nature and substance; nor that they are not susceptible of adequate compensation in damages. And if we look at the findings made after trial, we see that up to the time of the issuance of the restraining order, "by the conduct of defendant, plaintiff was damaged in at least the sum of ten dollars."

The case, in truth, seems at most to be one of ordinary trespass; annoying it may be, but one, nevertheless, for which the ordinary remedies of the law are ample.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

CAPITAL SAVINGS BANK v. JOHN REEL ET AL.

DISCHARGE OF SURETY — PROMISSORY NOTE — PAYMENT — ACCOMMODATION MAKER — DEFENSES TO ACTION ON NOTE — RELEASE OF ATTACHMENT. —

Action upon a joint and several promissory note given by the firm of Reel & McGraw, with the defendant Cave as accommodation maker. The defendant Cave defended on the ground that the note was paid by Reel & McGraw, and was surrendered to them, but was afterwards retaken by the plaintiff from them, and held by it, without his (Cave's) knowledge or consent. The jury found a verdict for the defendant Cave.

Held: There was evidence tending to prove the facts as pleaded by the defendant, and the verdict of the jury would not be disturbed.

Id. — The defendant also pleaded, as a defense to the action, that the plaintiff in the action had attached sufficient property of Reel & McGraw to secure the payment of the note, and had without his knowledge or consent released the attachment.

Held: There was evidence also tending to show these facts, and that Cave, being an accommodation maker, should not, under these circumstances, be injured by the acts of the plaintiff.

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento denying motion for a new trial.
DENSON, J.

Action on a joint and several promissory note. The note was executed at the city of Sacramento by the defendants John Reel and Peter McGraw, as copartners, under firm name of Reel & McGraw, and by the defendant J. B. Cave, to the plaintiff, May 9th, 1878, for $2,000, payable one month after date, with interest at one per cent. per month, compounding monthly. The answer of the defendants Reel & McGraw was stricken out by the Court, and judgment was given against them as by default. Defendant Cave answered separately, and after denying all indebtedness to plaintiff, and the non-payment of the note, set up affirmatively the following defenses:

And for a further defense this defendant avers that on or about the 9th day of May, A. D. 1878, said defendants John Reel and Peter McGraw, under the firm name of Reel & McGraw, and as co-partners under such firm name, were indebted to plaintiff in the sum of two thousand dollars, for and on account of moneys before that time had and received by them from plaintiff, and on that day this defendant executed said promissory note, with said Reel & McGraw as surety thereon, for them to plaintiff, and said note was thereupon delivered to and received by plaintiff to secure said indebtedness, and with notice and knowledge by plaintiff that this defendant executed the same as surety for said Reel & McGraw, and in no other way.

That prior to the maturity of said note this defendant notified said plaintiff that if said note was not paid at the maturity thereof by said Reel & McGraw, to proceed, without delay, to collect the same.

That on or about the 3d day of August, 1878, plaintiff was wrongfully and without right in the possession of said note, and then claimed and pretended that the same had not been paid, whereupon this defendant requested plaintiff to bring an action upon said note and to sue out a writ of attachment upon the same, and under said writ to levy upon and seize certain property of said Reel & McGraw as surety, for the payment of any judgment which might be recovered in such action, whereupon, on the day last mentioned, plaintiff commenced this action, and on the same day filed therein the affidavit and undertaking required by law for the issuing of said writ, and afterwards, on the same day, such writ was issued in due form out of this Court and delivered to the Sheriff of said county, and on the same day, under and by virtue of said writ, said Sheriff levied upon and seized a large amount of personal property, which then was in the possession of and belonged to said Reel & McGraw, and was of the value of four thousand dollars, and was more than sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's said demand, together with all the costs of this action, and the costs and expenses of taking and keeping said personal property under said attachment.

That afterwards, to wit, on the fifth day of August, 1879, plaintiff, without cause and without notice to this defendant, and without his knowledge or consent, voluntarily released said property from said attachment, and caused the same to be delivered to other creditors of said Reel & McGraw.

That prior to the aforesaid release of said property from said attachment, said Reel & McGraw had become insolvent and wholly unable to pay any judgment which might have been or may be recovered in this action. That said Reel & McGraw ever since that time have been and now are insolvent, and have no property liable to be taken under execution.

This answer is made upon information and belief as to payment of said note and the levy and release of said attachment.

That this defendant had no notice or knowledge of such release of said property until the thirtieth day of January, 1880, at which time said writ of attachment was returned by said Sheriff and filed in this Court. Wherefore defendant prays judgment and costs.

As between the plaintiff and the defendant Cave, the action was tried with a jury, who returned a verdict for the defendant. The evidence was conflicting, but there was evidence given tending to show the following facts:

Defendant Cave was surety, though appearing as principal, and this fact was known to plaintiff. The day after the note was signed, Cave called on the President of the bank (Mr. Carey, who personally transacted the whole business), and told him he was sorry he had "gone on the note," and asked plaintiff to make Reel & McGraw pay the note at maturity, and plaintiff then promised to do so. During the running of the note, Reel & McGraw accumulated at the bank one thousand seven hundred dollars, and had that amount on deposit to their credit at the maturity of the note, at which time McGraw called at the bank and informed the President that he came to pay the note. This was in the President's office in the bank. The President stepped into the bank and examined Reel & McGraw's account; went to his account, saw how it stood, and said, "All right." The President then furnished McGraw with a blank check for the amount, and directed him to fill it out, which was done. The check was delivered to the President by McGraw, and the note was delivered to McGraw by the President. As McGraw was about leaving the office he remarked to Carey that he "had bought a lot of wheat, and should need money the following week." To which Carey replied, "Well, all right, but you leave Uncle Brad's note, and you can draw what money you require;" and thereupon the note was returned to Carey, and the check was destroyed. This last transaction was without the consent or knowledge of "Uncle Brad" (the name by which defendant Cave was familiarly known). Plaintiff then allowed Reel & McGraw to overdraw their accounts, from time to time, until they failed, on the twentieth day of July, when they were indebted to the bank in an amount exceeding $2,000. The note was given in the first instance to secure the bank upon an acceptance of a draft upon Reel & McGraw for $2,000. At the time the note matured, this acceptance had been paid, and Reel & McGraw had, as before stated, $1,700 on deposit to their credit, and the bank was willing that he should then overdraw enough to pay the Cave note. At or immediately after the failure, the bank attached sufficient property of Reel & McGraw to satisfy all its demands. The property attached was merchandise, book accounts, notes, and cash, of the cash value of $21,000. There were two attachments, amounting to $6,000, ahead of the bank attachment. The attorney for the bank afterwards, without the consent or knowledge of defendant, released the attachment in favor of Pritchard, the first attaching creditor, who had also, on the twenty-fifth of July, taken an assignment from Reel & McGraw of all their property for the benefit of creditors. Cave had no notice of the release of said attachment until the thirtieth day of January, 1880, when the Sheriff made return of his proceedings. Pritchard's attachment was on the twentieth July, Wilcoxson & Farris' attachment was on the twenty-second July, the assignment to Pritchard was on twenty-fourth July, and plaintiff's attachment was on third August.

George E. Bates, for Appellant.

The note sued on was never paid. There is no contrary evidence. No money was ever deposited with plaintiff for the purpose of paying this note. Even if Cave was surety to the bank (which we deny), he would not be released from liability on this note by principal debtors having sufficient money on deposit with the bank to pay this debt. (Brandt on Suretyship and Guaranty, § 376; Munger on Application of Payments, 76, and following; Clark v. Sickler, 21 Am. Rep. 606; Dawson v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 283; National Bank of Newburgh v. Smith, 66 N. Y. 271; Martin v. Mechanics' Bank, 6 Harris & Johnson, 235.)

The defendant Cave was not surety as to plaintiff, and his answer does not aver that plaintiff consented to deal with him in that capacity. The admission of his suretyship can not be construed to be broader than the averments of his answer. Both show only that he was "surety for Reel & McGraw," but fail to show that he was not principal as to plaintiff. (Farmers' National Gold Bank v. Stover, 9 P. O. L. J. 306; Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 340; Dane v. Corduan, 24 id. 165.) The defendant Cave, even if surety, was not released from liability by any act of plaintiff. Cave has not shown that any property of Reel & McGraw was attached, or that if attached that its value was sufficient to pay the prior liens thereon. A surety is only released to the extent to which he shows himself injured. (C. C., § 2845; Brandt on Suretyship, § 380.) The Sheriff's return is the only evidence offered to prove the value of the property, and it is no part of a Sheriff's return, and is no evidence of value. The Sheriff's return does not show any levy on the books, accounts, or notes; these could be attached only in one way. (C. C. P., § 543.) The return upon a writ must show that everything necessary to a good attachment has been done. (Charless v. Marney, 1 Mo. 537.)

L. S. Taylor and A. P. Catlin, for Respondent.

The answer avers payment by Reel & McGraw, and upon this issue the verdict is founded on sufficient evidence. The answer also avers that Cave executed the note as surety, and this is found for defendant on sufficient evidence.

The transaction at the maturity of the note between McGraw and Carey (outside of it as a payment) exonerates the defendant under the provisions of Section 2839 of the Civil Code. If it was not in fact a performance of the principal obligation, it was an offer of such performance, coupled with the present ability to perform. The Court said, in Hayes v. Josephi, 26 Cal. 545: "It is true that a tender by the principal debtor does not discharge the debt, and he is bound to keep his tender good. * * * But there are substantial reasons why a tender should operate as a discharge of a mortgage or surety which do not apply to the debtor personally."

The rule, since the Code, is that the real relation (except as against innocent third persons) may be shown by parol as against the apparent relation. (C. C., § 2832.) In Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 343 (case of a joint note), the Court said: "It was lent to both. The character which it was agreed should be performed by defendant in the transaction with plaintiff was that of principal. If plaintiff had advanced his money without notice of the suretyship, they could have held defendant as maker. If they had agreed to take him as surety, they could only have held him as such, although he appeared as principal upon the written instrument. The present is a case beyond the statute, in which the Court below reached the conclusion that the defendant had not appeared in duplicate character in his transaction with plaintiff, but that his real and apparent relation to them was the same."

In the case at bar, the jury found as a fact upon all the testimony, that the real relation between defendant and plaintiff was that of suretyship, and not that of principal, which, upon the face of the written instrument, it appeared to be. With this relation found by the verdict, there are a number of sufficient facts found to exonerate the defendant. 1. Plaintiff agreed with defendant to make the principal pay the note at maturity. 2. Plaintiff had the power to perform this agreement, and violated it, without any motive, other than one exclusively between itself and Reel & McGraw as a customer of its bank. 3. It was the duty of the bank to apply the $1,700 in its hands to the payment of the note. "Where the means of satisfying the debt subsequently come into the hands of the creditor, and he does not avail himself of such means, but parts with them without the knowledge or consent of the surety, the surety is discharged," is what the Supreme Court said in Hayes v. Josephi, 26 Cal. 542, quoting, in support, Baker v. Briggs, 8 Pick. 121; S. C., 19 Am. Dec. 311; Hayes v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. 122; S. C., 8 Am. Dec. 554; 8 Serg. & R. 457; 13 id. 157. Carey's duty to apply the $1,700 was reinforced by his special promise to Cave. 4. It was the avowed purpose of the principal to apply the $1,700 to the payment of the note, and if this purpose was not consummated, as we contend it was, it was thwarted upon the motion of plaintiff, when he said to McGraw: "You leave Uncle Brad's note, and you can draw what money you require;" and this was a gross and inexcusable violation of plaintiff's duty. (C. C., § 2840.) 5. The $1,700 in cash in plaintiff's hands, and its avowed willingness to accept Reel & McGraw's check for the full amount due on the note (saying nothing of the acceptance of the check and the surrender of the note), was an exoneration of the defendant from all liability as surety. 6. The leaving of the note, that is, giving it back after it had been surrendered, was in pursuance of a new contract between Reel & McGraw and plaintiff, to which defendant was a stranger.

It is further averred in the answer that plaintiff secured the claim by attachment upon personal property more than sufficient to satisfy its demand, and afterwards, without defendant's knowledge or consent, and to favor other creditors, released the attachment. (C. C., §§ 2840, 2845.)

The Cover:

There was evidence tending to show that the note in suit was paid by Reel & McGraw and surrendered to them, although subsequently retaken by the plaintiff from Reel & McGraw, and held by it without the knowledge or consent of the defendant Cave. If the jury believed such evidence, notwithstanding the evidence in conflict, the verdict was correct. In such case we will not disturb the verdict. There was evidence, also, tending to show that the plaintiff had sufficient property of Reel & McGraw attached to secure the payment of the note, and that the attachment was released without the knowledge or consent of the defendant Cave. Cave being an accommodation maker, should not, under such circumstances, be injured by the acts of plaintiff.

No error appearing, the order is affirmed.

JOHN HILL v. P. A. FINIGAN.

PURCHASE BY PLEDGEE AT SALE — CONSENT OR RATIFICATION BY PLEDGOR. —

A pledgor may consent to or ratify a purchase, at public auction, by the pledgee of the property pledged.

ID. — INSTRUCTION TO JURY. — In its instructions, the Court below, in effect, told the jury that Section 3010 of the Civil Code, which prohibits the pledgee from purchasing the property pledged, except by direct dealing with the pledgor, requires the direct dealing to precede the sale, to be something which changes the form of the original contract, and be supported by a consideration.

Held: In each particular the instruction is erroneous. In the first place, it entirely excludes the question of ratification; and in the second place, as the statute was intended for the protection of the pledgor, he may, at the time of the making of the pledge, or at any subsequent time, without changing the form of the original contract, and without consideration, consent that the pledgee may purchase at the sale.

ID. — INSTRUCTION TENDING TO PREJUDICE JURY. — (Per MORRISON, C. J., and ROSS and MYRICK, JJ.) The Court below also instructed the jury as follows: "The object of the law is for the purpose of guarding against the greed and rapacity of money-lenders, and those who deal in securities of this character." And again: "There are many reasons why this law is a wholesome one, independent of the rapacity and greed of creditors."

Held: In view of the circumstances of this case, these instructions were manifestly improper, as tending to prejudice the jury against the defendant.

APPEAL by the defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. DWINELLE, J.

Action for the conversion of a lot of mining stock and jewelry. The complaint of the plaintiff, filed August 8, 1878, alleged: That on the seventh day of August, A. D. 1878, he was and still is the owner of, and he then was and still is entitled to the possession of, the following-described articles of personal property, to wit: One hundred shares of the capital stock of the Sierra Nevada Silver Mining Company; one hundred shares of the capital stock of the Caledonia Silver Mining Company; fifty shares of the capital stock of the Yellow Jacket Silver Mining Company; fifty shares of the capital stock of the Best and Belcher Mining Company; fifty shares of the capital stock of the Hale and Norcross Silver Mining Company; twenty-five shares of the capital stock of the Kentucky Mining Company; two hundred shares of the capital stock of the Consolidated Imperial Mining Company; one hundred and fifty shares of the capital stock of the Golden Chariot Mining Company; one gold pin, or brooch, set with sixteen diamonds; one pair gold earrings, set with seven diamonds each; one gold finger-ring set with nine diamonds; one gold cross set with twenty-six diamonds; one gold cross set with a single diamond; that the defendant on the said seventh day of August, 1878, was in the possession of said property; that on the same day the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the possession of the said property, and the restoration of the same to him, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still does wrongfully and unlawfully refuse, to deliver or restore the same, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff, and has converted the same to his own use, and still wrongfully and unlawfully withholds and detains the same from the plaintiff; that said property was on said seventh day of August, 1878, of the value of $6,921.25 in gold coin. Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of $6,921.25 in gold coin, with legal interest thereon from the seventh day of August, 1878, or in case the said property should hereafter increase in value, then the highest market value of said property at any time between the said seventh day of August, 1878, and the verdict in this action without interest, besides his costs of suit, and for such further judgment as to this Court may seem meet.

The defendant, after denying that the plaintiff since the thirteenth day of June, A. D. 1878, ever was the owner, or since the fifteenth day of February, A. D. 1878, ever was entitled to the possession, of any part of the property described in the complaint, and that the defendant had converted the property alleged. That heretofore, and on the fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said City and County of San Francisco, said defendant, at the special instance and request of plaintiff, loaned and advanced unto said plaintiff the full sum of $3,628.50, in gold coin of the United States, and which sum plaintiff then and there undertook and promised to repay unto defendant whenever requested so to do, with interest thereon, in gold coin of the United States; and thereupon, and on said fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said city and county, plaintiff delivered to and deposited with defendant, by way of security for the payment of said sum of money so loaned unto him by defendant, all and singular the articles of personal property mentioned and described in the complaint. And said defendant then and there received said articles of personal property, and held the same by way of security for the repayment of said sum of money and interest thereon. That during the time said plaintiff held said articles of personal property prior to the sale thereof hereinafter mentioned, it became and was necessary for the protection of such security to advance and pay various sums of money, as and for assessments levied and assessed upon the shares of mining stock mentioned in complaint and pledged unto him, and said defendant did advance and pay such assessments, amounting to the sum of $300.50, in said gold coin. That thereafter, and on or about the sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant duly demanded of plaintiff the payment to him of said sum of money so loaned and advanced, and the sums of money as aforesaid paid, laid out, and expended by defendant for assessments upon said shares of mining stocks, and interest upon said sums. And plaintiff neglected and refused to pay said sums, or any part thereof, and thereupon, and on or about said sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant gave to plaintiff actual notice that thereafter and on the thirteenth day of June, 1878, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at the auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., at No. 410 Pine street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, he would, through H. A. Cobb, Esq., auc-ioneer of said house, offer and sell all of said stock and property described in complaint, at public auction, for the highest obtainable price, and out of the proceeds of such sale would pay the expenses thereof, and said debt, so far as the money obtained from the sale would defray the same. That such notice of the time and place at which the property pledged would be sold was actually given to and received by plaintiff, at said city and county, at such reasonable time before the sale as would enable said pledgor, to wit, said plaintiff, to attend thereat. That thereafter and on said thirteenth day of June, 1878, the plaintiff having failed and neglected to pay said indebtedness, or any part thereof, and the same being wholly due and unpaid, and amounting on said day to the sum of $4,077.50, in gold coin of the United States, at said hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at said auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., said defendant, by and through said H. A. Cobb, Esq., auctioneer, offered and sold all the personal property mentioned and described in complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated; and that said sale was made by public auction in the manner and upon the notice to the public usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, and was for the highest obtainable price, and at such sale all said personal property described in complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated, was sold at public auction in the manner and upon the notice to the public usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, pursuant and according to said notice, for the highest obtainable price, to wit, the sum of $3,123.75, and that after deducting the expense of said sale, to wit, the sum of $25, there remained of the proceeds of said sale, to be applied upon the indebtedness aforesaid the sum of $3,098.75, which was applied upon said indebtedness, leaving a balance due unto defendant from plaintiff of the sum of $978, and no part of which sum plaintiff has paid, and the same now remains due and owing unto defendant. That of said shares of stock so pledged unto defendant by plaintiff, the fifty shares of the capital stock of the Golden Chariot Mining Company mentioned in complaint had been sold for assessment prior to the delivery thereof to defendant, and the same were of no value and were not offered for sale, and defendant still retains the same. That the sale aforesaid was in all respects fairly and legally conducted, and the prices obtained for all of the articles of personal property so sold were the highest market prices for said articles in the market at the city and county aforesaid on the day of said sale.

And said defendant, for a further and separate answer, herein alleges and shows: That heretofore, and on the fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said City and County of San Francisco, said defendant, at the special instance and request of plaintiff, loaned and advanced unto said plaintiff the full sum of $3,628.50, in gold coin of the United States, and which sum plaintiff then and there undertook and promised to repay unto defendant whenever requested so to do, with interest thereon, in gold coin of the United States; and thereupon, and on said fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said City and County, plaintiff delivered to and deposited with defendant, by way of security for the payment of said sum of money so loaned unto him by defendant, all and singular the articles of personal property mentioned and described in the complaint, and said defendant then and there received said articles of personal property, and held the same by way of security for the repayment of said sum of money and interest thereon. That during the time said plaintiff held said articles of personal property prior to the sale thereof hereinafter mentioned, it became and was necessary for the protection of said security to advance and pay various sums of money as and for assessments levied and assessed upon the shares of mining stock mentioned in complaint and pledged unto him, and said defendant did advance and pay such assessments, amounting to the sum of $300.50, in said gold coin. That thereafter, and on or about the sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant duly demanded of plaintiff the payment to him of said sum of money so loaned and advanced, and the sums of money as aforesaid paid, laid out, and expended by defendant for assessments upon said shares of mining stocks and interest upon said sums. And plaintiff neglected and refused to pay said sums or any part thereof, and thereupon, and on or about said sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant gave to plaintiff actual notice that thereafter, and on the thirteenth day of June, 1878, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, of that day, at the auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., at No. 410 Pine street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, he would, through H. A. Cobb, Esq., auctioneer of said house, offer and sell all of said stock and property described in complaint, at public auction, for the highest obtainable price, and out of the proceeds of such sale would pay the expenses thereof, and said debt, so far as the money obtained from the sale would defray the same. That such notice of the time and place at which the property pledged would be sold was actually given to and received by plaintiff at said city and county at such reasonable time before the sale as would enable said pledgor, to wit, said plaintiff, to attend thereat, and thereupon said plaintiff agreed with defendant that said sale should be made at the time and place specified in said notice, and without any other or further notice to the public or to him thereof, and agreed that the sale so made should in all respects be valid and binding, and waived any other or further notice to the public or to himself thereof; and thereafter, and on said thirteenth day of June, 1878, the plaintiff having failed and neglected to pay such indebtedness or any part thereof, and the same being wholly due and unpaid and amounting on said day to the sum of $4,077.50, in gold coin of the United States, at said hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at said auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., said defendant, through H. A. Cobb, Esq., auctioneer, offered and sold all the personal property mentioned and described in the complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated, and that said sale was made by public auction, in the manner usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, and was for the highest obtainable price, and at such sale all said personal property described in complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated, was sold at public auction, in the manner usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, pursuant and according to said notice, for the highest obtainable price, to wit, the sum of $3,123.75, and that after deducting the expenses of sale, to wit, the sum of $25, there remained of the proceeds of said sale, to be applied upon the indebtedness aforesaid, the sum of $3,098.75, which was applied upon said indebtedness, leaving a balance due unto defendant from plaintiff of the sum of $978, and no part of which sum plaintiff has paid, and the same now remains due and owing unto defendant. That of said shares of stock so pledged unto defendant by plaintiff, the fifty shares of the capital stock of the Golden Chariot Mining Company, mentioned in complaint, had been sold for assessment prior to the delivery thereof to defendant, and the same were of no value and were not offered for sale, and defendant still retains the same; that the sale aforesaid was in all respects fairly and legally conducted, and the prices obtained for all of the articles of personal property so sold were the highest market prices for said articles in the market at the city and county aforesaid, on the day of said sale.

And said defendant, for a further and separate answer herein, alleges and shows, that heretofore, and on the fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said City and County of San Francisco, said defendant, at the special instance and request of plaintiff, loaned and advanced unto plaintiff the full sum of $3,628.50, in gold coin of the United States, and which sum plaintiff then and there undertook and promised to repay unto defendant whenever requested so to do, with interest thereon, in gold coin of the United States; and thereupon, and on said fifteenth day of February, 1878, at said city and county, plaintiff delivered to and deposited with defendant, by way of security for the payment of said sum of money so loaned unto him by defendant, all and singular the articles of personal property mentioned and described in the complaint, and said defendant then and there received said articles of personal property and held the same by way of security for the repayment of said sum of money and interest thereon. That during the time said plaintiff held said articles of personal property prior to the sale thereof hereinafter mentioned, it became and was necessary for the protection of such security to advance and pay various sums of money as and for assessments levied and assessed upon the shares of mining stock mentioned in complaint and pledged unto him, and said defendant did advance and pay such assessments, amounting to the sum of $300.50, in said gold coin; that thereafter, and on or about the sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant duly demand of plaintiff the payment to him of said sum of money so loaned and advanced, and the sums of money as aforesaid paid, laid out, and expended by defendant for assessments upon said shares of mining stock and interest upon said sums; and plaintiff neglected and refused to pay said sums or any part thereof, and thereupon, and on or about said sixth day of June, 1878, the defendant gave the plaintiff actual notice that thereafter and on the thirteenth day of June, 1878, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at the auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., at No. 410 Pine street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, he would, through H. A. Cobb, Esq., auctioneer of said house, offer and sell all of said stock and property described in complaint at public auction, for the highest obtainable price, and out of the proceeds of such sale would pay the expenses thereof, and said debt, so far as the money obtained from the sale would defray the same; that such notice of the time and place at which the property pledged would be sold was actually given to and received by plaintiff at said city and county, at such reasonable time before the sale as would enable said pledgor, to wit, said plaintiff, to attend thereat; and thereafter, and on said thirteenth day of June, 1878, the plaintiff having failed and neglected to pay said indebtedness or any part thereof, and the same being wholly due and unpaid and amounting on said day to the sum of $4,077.50, in gold coin of the United States, at said hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at said auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., the defendant, through said H. A. Cobb, Esq., offered and sold all the personal property mentioned and described in the complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated, and that said sale was made by public auction, in the manner usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, and was for the highest obtainable price, and at such sale all such personal property described in complaint and so pledged unto defendant, except as hereinafter stated, was sold at public auction in the manner usual at the place of sale in respect to auction sales of similar property, pursuant and according to said notice, for the highest obtainable price, to wit, the sum of $3,123.75; and that after deducting the expenses of said sale, to wit, the sum of $25, there remained of the proceeds of said sale, to be applied upon the indebtedness aforesaid, the sum of $3,098.75, which was applied upon said indebtedness, leaving a balance due unto defendant from plaintiff of the sum of $978, and no part of which sum plaintiff has paid, and the same now remains due and owing unto defendant; that of said shares of stock so pledged unto defendant by plaintiff, the fifty shares of the capital stock of the Golden Chariot Mining Company mentioned in complaint had been sold for assessment prior to the delivery thereof to defendant, and the same were of no value and were not offered for sale, and defendant still retains the same; that the sale aforesaid was in all respects fairly and legally conducted, and the prices obtained for all of the articles of personal property so sold were the highest market prices for said articles in the market at the City and County of San Francisco aforesaid on the day of said sale; and thereafter, plaintiff being fully informed of the facts, did fully, wholly, and entirely ratify and confirm the said sale and all of said proceedings, and did undertake and agree upon request to pay said defendant said sum of $978.75 in said gold coin, the balance of said debt so remaining due and unpaid.

And for a further and separate answer and defense, and by way of counter-claim, the defendant alleges and shows that heretofore, and on or about the thirteenth day of June, A. D. 1878, at the City and County of San Francisco, an account was stated between plaintiff and defendant, and upon such statement a balance of $978.75 in gold coin of the United States was found to be due from said plaintiff to this defendant, and plaintiff then and there promised to pay said sum, but has paid no part thereof.

Wherefore defendant demands judgment against said plaintiff for said sum of $978.75, with interest thereon from June 13, 1878, and costs of suit.

On August 1, 1879, the defendant filed a supplemental answer as follows: Now comes the above-named defendant, by leave of Court first had and obtained, and for further and additional answer to the answer heretofore filed in this cause, and not in any manner waiving any of the defenses in the answer heretofore filed; that the plaintiff, on the first day of February, 1878, was indebted to the firm of Randolph, McIntosh & Co., stock brokers of this city, in the sum of $3,628.50 gold coin, and said Randolph, McIntosh & Co. held and had a lien upon all and singular the personal property particularly described in the complaint to secure the payment of said money due them as aforesaid, with power to sell the same or any part thereof, without making any previous demand for payment thereof, with or without notice of either time or place of sale, at any session of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, or at private or public sale, whenever the market value of said property was reduced to less than twice the amount of the sums of money advanced thereon by said Randolph, McIntosh & Co., or whenever in their judgment the said property is liable to depreciate so as to make the security insufficient, or whenever they shall elect to close the account; that said loan bore interest at the rate of one and a half per cent. per month, and compounded monthly when not paid; that said Randolph, McIntosh & Co., on or about the fifteenth day of February, 1878, at the instance and request of plaintiff, sold and transferred to this defendant all their interest, rights, and privileges in and to their said claim against plaintiff, and in and to said personal property described in said complaint and their contract of security given to secure the same; that on the sixth day of June, 1878, there was due and owing to this defendant from plaintiff on the aforesaid indebtedness the sum of $4,077.50, and this defendant, prior to and on the sixth day of June, 1878, deemed that the property described in said complaint was liable to depreciate, and defendant elected to close said account of said plaintiff; that the market value of the property pledged to secure the same was then reduced to less than twice the amount advanced thereon; that this defendant, on said sixth day of June, 1878, notified said plaintiff in writing that he elected to close said account, and demanded the payment of $4,077.50 then and there due this defendant from plaintiff, and in default of payment thereof he would sell said property at auction at the auction-house of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 410 Pine street, in the city of San Francisco, on the thirteenth day of June, 1878, at ten o'clock A. M.; that said plaintiff failed and neglected to pay said amount due, or any part thereof, and this defendant on said day, through Maurice Dore & Co., offered and sold all of said property so pledged as aforesaid, except the property hereafter stated; that said sale was made by public auction in pursuance of the calls of said notice, for the highest obtainable price, to wit, ($3,123.75) three thousand one hundred and twenty-three dollars and seventy-five cents, leaving a balance due defendant on said indebtedness of ($978) nine hundred and seventy-eight dollars, and said balance now remains due and unpaid from plaintiff to defendant. That of said property, fifty shares of the capital stock of the Golden Chariot Mining Company had been sold for assessments prior to the delivery thereof to defendant. The case was tried before a jury August 7, 1879, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $29,960. Judgment was thereupon entered. Defendant moved for a new trial. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

W. T. Wallace and Lloyd & Wood, for Appellant.

The Court erred in charging the jury that at a sale of pledged property the pledgee could not purchase. (§ 3010, Civ. Code; 41 Cal. 519.) The Court erred in charging the jury that the pledgor of pledged property could not, before a sale, empower the pledgee to buy. (Civ. Code, §§ 3010, 3513.) The Court erred in charging the jury that a consideration was necessary to confirm a sale, or empower a pledgee to buy, or to waive any provision of the Code concerning the sale of pledge. The Court charged the jury in these words: "I have already held, though I think the jury were absent at the time, that the pledgee can not purchase the thing pledged except by direct dealing with the pledgor. That means by something subsequent to the sale, not sub — not subsequent to the sale — but it must be something that changes the form of the original contract, and that it must be for a consideration." (Civ. Code, §§ 2307, 2308, 3515, 3516.) The Court erred in charging the jury that a sale of pledged property, made without an observance of the provisions of the Code, is void. The Court erred in charging the jury that a waiver of any of the requirements of the Code concerning the sale of pledged property by the pledgor is unlawful. (Sedgwick on Statutory and Const. Law, 109; 10 N. Y. 446; 3 id. 197, 511.) The Court erred in charging the jury: "The object of the law is for the purpose of guarding against the greed and rapacity of money-lenders and those who deal in securities of this character." "There are very many reasons why this law is a wholesome one, independent of the rapacity and greed of creditors."

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for Respondent.

The familiar doctrine that persons holding fiduciary relations are incompetent to purchase the property held by them in trust, is a rule of universal application to all persons coming within the principle that no party can be permitted to purchase an interest where he has a duty to perform, inconsistent with the character of a purchaser. The rule rests upon grounds of public policy, is to be found alike in the Roman and common law, and is enforced without regard to the question of bona fides in the particular case. The case of pledgor and pledgee comes within the rule. The sale of the pledged property by Finigan to himself was contrary to the faith of the bailment, forbidden alike by the common law and the Civil Code of this State, and was, in the absence of an express, deliberate, clear, and intentional ratification by Hill, so null and void that it did not even amount to a conversion, except at the election of Hill, the pledgor. Failing such election (and none such was made), the possession of the stock and jewelry remaining unchanged, the bailment continued thereafter as before, until the tender on August 7th of the amount of the debt, and the demand and refusal of the return of the property pledged, which constituted the conversion on which this action is based. (Civil Code of California, § 3010; Maryland Fire Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 25 Md. 243, 265-7; Baltimore Mar. Ins. Co. v. Same, id. 269, 302; Middlesex Bank v. Minot, 4 Metc. 325-9; Bank of the Old Dominion v. D. & P. R. R. Co., 8 Iowa, 280; Bryan v. Baldwin, 52 N. Y. 235; Stokes v. Frazier, 72 Ill. 432, 433; Story on Bailments, § 319; Perkins v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 145, 146; Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 442.)

We call the special attention of the Court to the first four of the cases above cited. A ratification of a sale impeachable under the rule adverted to in the preceding point, can only be effected by an independent and substantive act founded on complete information, of perfect freedom of volition, not under the force, pressure, or influence of the prior transaction, not qualified with conditions, and done with the knowledge that the sale was illegal, and that the act being done will have the effect of confirming and validating what was an impeachable transaction. Hoffman Coal Co. v. Cumberland C. & I. Co., 16 Md. 508, 509; Mulford v. Minch, 3 Stockt. 22, 23; Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Barr. 300; M'Cants v. Bee, 1 McCord's Ch. (S. C.) 391; S. C., 16 Am. Dec. 610; Ricketts v. Montgomery, 15 Md. 52; Boyd v. Hawkins, 2 Dev. Eq. 215; Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Peters, 75, 76; Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 486; Salmon v. Cutts, 4 De G. & Sm. 132; Waters v. Thorn, 22 Beav. 559; Molony v. L'Estrange, Beatty's Ch. R. 413, 414; Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & Beatty, 339; Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & My. 425; Lewin on Trusts, 3d ed., 655.)

It is true that there are cases where a prompt repudiation is required, where mere silence when notice of the transaction is given is said to work a ratification, but they are not cases falling under the principle which renders the sale in the case at bar void. They are principally cases where an agent, purporting to act with a third party on behalf of his principal, does an act beyond the scope of his authority, or without authority. In such cases, when the matter is brought to the knowledge of the principal, he owes to the third party the duty of promptly repudiating the transaction. Failing to do so, he is said to have ratified the act of his agent. But it may be questioned whether this is the proper expression to use. It would seem to be more correct to say, that by his silence, when for the protection of the third party he should have spoken, he is estopped to deny the authority of the agent. Even in cases of agency, however, this rule does not obtain between the principal and his agent, as between them mere acquiescence in order to work a ratification must have continued an unreasonable length of time. (Clarke v. Meigs, 10 Bosw. 349; Brass v. Worth, 40 Barb. 654.) In the two cases in the 25th Maryland and that in 4 Metcalf, cited under our first point, nearly two years elapsed before dissent from the sale was expressed. Tested by the above rules, it will be found that the rulings of the Court below were erroneous only in being too favorable to appellant.

Ross, J.:

There was some testimony tending to show that the plaintiff not only consented that the defendant might purchase the property at the sale, but requested him to do so, and some testimony tending to show a ratification of the sale by the defendant, if it admitted of ratification. Sections 3001 et seq. of the Civil Code provide for the sale of pledged property at public auction, and by Section 3010 it is declared: "A pledgee or pledge-holder can not purchase the property pledged, except by direct dealing with the pledgor."

The Court below instructed the jury: "That means by something subsequent to the sale, not sub—not subsequent to the sale, but it must be something that changes the form of the original contract, and it must be for a consideration." In effect, the Court told the jury that the "direct dealing" mentioned in the statute must precede the sale, must be something that changes the form of the original contract, and must have a consideration to support it.

In each particular the instruction is erroneous. In the first place it entirely excludes the question of ratification. There can be no doubt that a sale made by a pledgee in contravention of the provisions of the statute may be ratified by the pledgor; and it has been expressly so decided by this Court, in the case of Child v. Hugg, 41 Cal. 519. In the second place the instruction exacts proof of the elements necessary to make a new contract. Obviously, such is not the meaning of the statute. The section was undoubtedly enacted for the protection of the pledgor, to the end that no unfair advantage be taken of him. It prohibits a pledgee or pledge-holder from purchasing the property pledged "except by direct dealing with the pledgor." By such dealing with the pledgor, the pledgee may purchase it. Why should it be held that by this is meant that the pledgee or pledge-holder can only purchase by taking a direct transfer from the pledgor? The statute does not say so, and the reason of the prohibition suggests the contrary. If the pledgor chooses to do so, we see no reason why he may not consent that the pledgee may buy at the public sale. In some cases it may be to his interest that this be done. Such consent may be given either at the time of making the pledge, or at any subsequent time, without changing "the form of the original contract," and without consideration.

The Court below also erred—particularly in view of the circumstances appearing in this case—in instructing the jury as follows: "The object of the law is for the purpose of guarding against the greed and rapacity of money-lenders and those who deal in securities of this character." And again: "There are many reasons why this law is a wholesome one, independent of the rapacity and greed of creditors."

This was manifestly improper. No one can measure the extent of the influence upon the jury of such instructions coming from the Court. The defendant was entitled to a fair trial. He did not have it in the Court below, and we can not permit the judgment to stand.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JOHN S. BARRETT v. J. V. SIMMS ET AL.

HOMESTEAD — INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS — ORDER OF SALE — JURISDICTION.
— An order of the Court in an insolvency proceeding for the sale of the homestead of the insolvent is without jurisdiction, and a sale thereunder passes no title.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento. DENSON, J.

In an insolvency proceeding the Court made an order setting apart to the insolvent his homestead, which contained the following clause: "Nothing contained herein shall have the effect to set aside to said Simms property of any greater value than $5,000. Nor shall it prejudice the right of the assignee herein, or of any creditor of said Simms, to sell said property, or to have it sold in case a bid of over $5,000 shall be made therefor." Afterwards an order was made for the sale of the homestead, and the same was sold for the sum of $7,000 to the plaintiff, who brought this action to recover the land.

L. S. Taylor and A. L. Hart, for Appellant.

The decree of the Court in the insolvency proceeding, setting apart the premises, had the effect to create a conclusive presumption that the said premises were a homestead properly selected. (C. C. P., §§ 1908, 1962.) The effect of such an order is to withdraw the said property from the assets of the estate to be administered, and to deprive the Court of all jurisdiction or power over it. (Estate of Hardwick, 59 Cal. 292; Estate of William H. Orr, 29 id. 101; Shadt v. Hepps, 45 id. 433.)

To the proceeding in which this order was made all the creditors were parties; and from and after the date and entry of the order, independently of its previous condition or character, the said land became the property, not of the insolvent, but of the husband and wife, and was by them held in joint tenancy. (Civil Code, § 1265; Estate of B. F. Headen, 52 Cal. 294.) The order made by the lower Court, that the property be sold if it should bring more than $5,000, was a palpable violation of the provisions of our statute, and was absolutely void. Ample provision for the determination of the value of homesteads, and their partition and sale in case they exceed the statutory value, has been made by the Code. (Civil Code, §§ 1245-1259; People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 243; Ward v. Severance, 7 id. 126.) The method provided is expressly made exclusive; "in no way, therefore, except as in that title provided, can property which has been declared a homestead, no matter what may be its actual value, be subject to execution or forced sale." (Civil Code, § 1240; Barrett v. Sims, 59 Cal. 615.)

Freeman & Bates, for Respondents.

The Insolvent Act must control here. It does not confer on the Court any power to appoint appraisers. Where no homestead is selected it gives the Court power to proceed as in Section 1465, C. C. P. That section does not provide for any appraisal whatsoever. Under that section lands may be sold and a homestead set apart out of the proceeds. (McCaughey's Estate, 50 Cal. 544.) But this is not a case falling under Section 1465. The Court, in this case, has the power, under Section 60, to set apart for the use and benefit of the bankrupt the property exempt from execution. It may, therefore, adopt its own mode, the statute not having designated any. (C. C. P., § 187.) It is sufficient that it gives the insolvent $5,000, for that is the limit of his homestead. (C. C., § 1260.)

The order directing a sale of the property has never been appealed from. Even if it be erroneous, it is not void.

The Court:

There is no statute of this State authorizing a sale, in insolvency proceedings, of property which has been declared a homestead. Therefore, the proceedings had for a sale in this case passed no title.

Judgment and order reversed.

M. C. HAWLEY & CO. v. W. D. CAMPBELL ET AL.

DISCHARGE IN INSOLVENCY OF INDIVIDUAL MEMBER OF FIRM FROM FIRM DEBTS.—Under the Insolvency Act of May 4, 1852, and the Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the discharge of an individual member of a firm from all his debts operates as a discharge from all his individual liability for the debts of the firm.

CASES DISTINGUISHED. — Neither of the cases entitled, respectively, Meyer v. Kokiman, 8 Cal. 44; California Furniture Company v. Halsey, 54 id. 315; Glenn v. Arnold, 56 id. 631; Freeman v. Campbell, id. 639; and In re Baker & Hamilton, 55 id. 302, went further than to hold that by the Insolvency Act of May 4, 1852, and the Act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, no provision was made for the relief of an insolvent partnership, and, as a consequence, that the insolvency Court under those Acts could not administer partnership property nor prevent partnership creditors from subjecting such property to the payment of their debts. In none of the cases mentioned was it held that, under the Acts referred to, an individual member of a firm could not be discharged from his individual liability for firm debts. Nor, in our opinion, does such result necessarily or logically follow from the doctrine of those cases.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Colusa. HATCH, J.

Action on promissory notes. This action was brought by plaintiffs, M. C. Hawley & Co., to recover of the defendants, Campbell & Spurgeon, $3,700 and interest on two several promissory notes, executed by them as partners, to plaintiffs, on October 1, 1878. The defendants answered, and set up their individual proceedings in insolvency and discharges under the Act of May 4, 1852, and the Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, as a bar to the action. As individuals they, at the time, surrendered all of their property. The Court made and filed its written findings, and drew as conclusions of law therefrom, that defendants were entitled to judgment against plaintiffs for their costs, and gave judgment accordingly. From the judgment, this appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiffs.

John T. Harrington, for Appellants.

It would seem that it is no longer an open question in this State, that where partners have severally filed their petitions in insolvency under the Act of May 4, 1852, no jurisdiction was thereby acquired by the insolvent Court over the estate of the partnership, and that discharges of the individual members of the firm could not be made operative against the firm debts. (Glenn v. Arnold, 56 Cal. 631; Freeman v. Campbell, id. 639.) In these cases the legal effect of the insolvency proceedings and discharges of these identical defendants came under review by this Court, and it was there distinently held that they were not thereby discharged from their partnership or firm debts. The insolvency Court acquired no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the partnership, and therefore could not discharge its members from partnership liabilities.

Questions of a like character have arisen under the United States Bankrupt Act, with this difference: that by the latter, provision is made for the insolvency of partnerships; while under our law there is no authority for such proceedings. But even under the United States Bankrupt Act, it has been uniformly held, under proceedings by individual members of a partnership that, giving no schedule of firm debts or assets, nor praying for a discharge from firm liabilities, the discharge when obtained will relieve the bankrupt from his individual indebtedness and not from partnership liability. (Corey v. Perry, 67 Maine, 140; 77 N. Y. 218; 1 Bank. R. 341; 22 Wall. 395; 3 Biss. 491; Hudgins v. Lane, 11 Nat. Bank. Reg. 463; 15 id. 417; 2 Ben. 96; 3 id. 386; 6 id. 20; Nat. Bank. Reg. 331; 17 id. 76.)

The insolvency proceedings and discharges of the defendants relied upon by them, as a bar to the plaintiffs' demand, had no effect whatever to relieve them from their partnership liabilities, and the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to judgment upon the findings for their demand.

A. L. Hart, for Respondents.

The appeal in this cause presents but a single question, viz.: Whether the members of a firm may be compelled to pay the firm debts after the discharge of the individual members of said firm in insolvency, and after all the assets of the firm have been exhausted in the payment of the firm liabilities. The case differs from the cases of Freeman v. Campbell & Spurgeon, and Glenn v. Arnold, cited in appellant's points, in that in those cases the firm property had not been exhausted, and this Court, expressly reserving the question herein involved, decided that the discharge in insolvency did not operate to release the partnership property from partnership indebtedness. In the form of those two cases the judgment was in the nature of judgment in rem against the property of the partnership remaining, and contained a provision that the said property should be sold, and the proceeds thereof applied to the judgment, and thereupon the said judgment should be satisfied. The ground upon which those decisions were based was that the insolvency Court, by its insolvency proceedings, acquired no jurisdiction over the partnership property. In this cause it appears that all of the property of Campbell & Spurgeon, both individual and partnership, was surrendered to the assignee, and the whole thereof was applied to the payment of the partnership indebtedness long prior to the commencement of this action. Another essential and important difference between the case of Freeman et al. v. Campbell & Spurgeon and this case is that in the former a writ of attachment had been issued under which property of the firm had been attached, while in this case no attachment appears to have been issued, and there was no firm property to attach.

The decrees finally discharging the defendants in insolvency establish, at least primarily, the existence of all facts that are essential to valid decrees, all intendments being in favor of the jurisdiction of the Court and the regularity of its exercise, and the effect of those decrees was to discharge the defendants from individual responsibility for firm indebtedness. The statute under which the said proceedings in insolvency were had provided: "Every insolvent debtor may be discharged from his debts as hereinafter provided," etc. (Hittell's Codes and Statutes, 15,505.)

The statute is couched in language sufficiently general to cover all persons, whatever may be their relations in business. The rule contended for by appellant would require the section of the statute quoted above to be so construed as to make it read: "Every insolvent debtor, except members of firms, may be discharged," etc. This exception is not contained in the statute, and the language of the statute is itself in conflict with such a construction. Each partner is individually liable for the debts of the firm, and this liability may be satisfied out of his individual property under an execution issued upon a judgment against the firm. Liability for firm indebtedness is, in its nature, joint and several; each partner is liable in solido for the indebtedness of the firm. The decree in insolvency operates to discharge the partner from individual responsibility for firm indebtedness, and his assignment vests his individual property as well as his individual interest in the firm property in his assignee. (Lothrop v. Tilden, 8 Cush. 375; Hilliard on Bankruptcy, 59, 60, 61, 79; Story on Partnership, 339, 340; Willson v. Gomperts, 11 Johns. 193; Alter v. McCullen, 27 La. Ann. 251; Dorn v. O'Neale, 6 Nev. 155; Murray v. Murray, 5 Johns. Ch. 70; Halsey v. Norton, 45 Miss. 703; Gibson v. Green, 45 Miss. 209; Ex parte Foster, 2 Story, 131; Lowry v. Morrison, 11 Paige, 327; Lacy v. Rockett, 11 Ala. 1002; Tucker v. Ozley, 5 Cranch, 34.)

In this case, there being no firm property out of which to direct the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand, any judgment that might be rendered against the defendants would practically operate as an individual judgment only, and would be executed against the individual property of the defendants acquired since their several discharges of insolvency. There is an evident distinction between the liability of the firm and the individual liability of the members of the firm for firm indebtedness. The latter is not a firm liability, it is the individual liability of a member of the firm created by law, and from such indebtedness the individuals may be relieved by the insolvency Court. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff, unless limited in its operation to firm property, would necessarily follow the nature of the demand, and hence would partake partially of the nature of an individual judgment. But in this cause, the record showing that the firm property has been exhausted, there could be no such thing as a judgment against property that has no existence.

Ross, J.:

No one of the cases entitled, respectively, Meyer v. Kohlman, 8 Cal. 44; California Furniture Company v. Halsey, 54 id. 315; Glenn v. Arnold, 56 id. 631; Freeman v. Campbell, id. 639, and In re Baker & Hamilton, 55 id. 302, went further than to hold that by the Insolvent Act of May 4, 1852, and the Act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, no provision was made for the relief of an insolvent partnership, and, as a consequence, that the insolvency Court under those Acts could not administer partnership property nor prevent partnership creditors from subjecting such property to the payment of their debts. In none of the cases mentioned was it held that, under the Acts referred to an individual member of a firm could not be discharged from his individual liability from firm debts. Nor, in our opinion, does such result necessarily or logically follow from the doctrine of those cases.

Inasmuch as the insolvency Court has, under the Act of 1852 and the Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, no jurisdiction of a partnership or of partnership property, the creditors of such firm can lawfully pursue the firm property regardless of the insolvency proceedings. As long as there remains any partnership property, it is primarily liable for partnership debts. When those debts are paid, if anything remains of the partnership property, it belongs to the partnership; and in this each of the members of the firm have an interest. Such interest is liable for the individual debts of the individual members of the firm. But each member of the firm is also individually liable for all of the debts of the firm of which he is a member. When as an individual he seeks the benefit of the Act in question, he is required to execute an assignment of all of his property, and to file a schedule setting forth, among other things, a full, complete, and perfect inventory of all of his property, with a list of losses he may have sustained, giving the names of his creditors, if known, the amount due to each creditor, and the cause and nature of said indebtedness, and when it accrued. His individual interest in the residuum of the partnership property, if any, is included in this schedule and assignment; and when such assignment is made in good faith and without fraud, the insolvent debtor may, in our opinion, be discharged from all individual liability for partnership as well as other debts. The language of the statute is: "Every insolvent debtor may be discharged from his debts," etc. A partnership debt for which he is individually liable is as much "his" debt as is any other individual debt he may owe; and to hold that from the former he can not be discharged, would be to import into the statute an exception not there made; and not authorized nor indeed called for for the protection of the partnership creditors, since, as we have seen, they may pursue the partnership property without regard to the insolvency proceedings.

Judgment affirmed.

SAMUEL H. HARMON v. LUCY B. PAGE ET AL.

LIABILITY IN EQUITY OF STOCKHOLDER TO CREDITOR OF AN INSOLVENT COMMERCIAL CORPORATION. — A Court of equity will, for the benefit of a creditor of an insolvent commercial corporation, compel a stockholder in such corporation to pay in the amount of capital stock which he has contracted with the corporation to take.

CONSTITUTION OF 1879 AS TO LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS. — Neither Section 2 nor Section 3 of Article xii. of the Constitution of 1879, relating to the liability of stockholders in corporations, has any application to this case, because the liability of the stockholders accrued prior to the adoption of that Constitution.

Id. — CONSTITUTION OF 1863. — But Sections 32 and 36 of Article iv. of the Constitution of 1863 are substantially the same as Sections 2 and 3 of Article xii. of the Constitution of 1879.

CONCURRENT REMEDIES OF CREDITOR OF SUCH CORPORATION. — None of the provisions of either Sections 32 or 36 of Article iv. of the Constitution of 1863, or of Section 322 of the Civil Code of this State, ousts a Court of equity of its jurisdiction to compel the stockholders of such corporations, under those circumstances, to pay in, for the benefit of creditors, the amount of the capital stock so contracted for by them. The two remedies of the creditor are concurrent — in the one case it is constitutional or statutory, in the other equitable.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — PLEADINGS — DEMURRER. — The defendants demurred to the complaint in this action, and contended that the cause of action is barred by the Statute of Limitations. The complaint was filed August 30, 1878; in the complaint it was alleged that the plaintiff, on the second day of May, 1878, recovered a judgment against the insolvent corporation, upon an indebtedness which accrued between the ninth of May and the fifteenth of October, 1873. No disbandment of the company, no cesser of business, no call upon the subscribers to pay, nor the existence of any other fact that would put the Statute of Limitations in motion, was averred in the complaint.

Held: A defendant can not avail himself of the Statute of Limitations by demurrer to the complaint, unless it affirmatively appears therefrom that the action is barred by some provision of that statute; in this case it does not so appear, and the demurrer should be overruled.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from the judgment of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco. MORRISON, J.

Action in equity to compel the defendants, as stockholders in insolvent commercial corporation, to pay in for benefit of plaintiff amount of stock contracted for by them. The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Roche & Desbeck and J. W. Carter, for Appellant.

In equity the unpaid subscription of a stockholder is regarded as a trust fund, pledged for the payment of the debts of the corporation. Such unpaid shares or balances are assets of the corporation, and are as much a part of the capital stock as the sums that have been realized thereon. They often constitute the only resource of the company. It has been long a principle of equity that where there is a claim which may be directly enforced at law against one party, but to the due discharge of which another party is ultimately liable, a court of equity treats it as a trust by the party ultimately liable, which may be directly enforced in favor of the party ultimately entitled to the benefit of it. (2 Story's Eq. Jur., §§ 1250-1252.) In this case we have a judgment against the corporation. It has a right to enforce payment of its subscriptions, and with them pay our judgment. This doctrine has always been applied to the unpaid subscription of a corporation in favor of creditors, and is found in the text-books. (Angell & Ames on Corp., §§ 602 et seq., and authorities cited.) The following authorities affirm and apply the principle to cases such as the one at bar: Adler v. Milwaukee Pat. Brick Co., 13 Wis. 57; Bartlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y. 587; Ward v. Griswoldville Mfg. Co., 16 Conn. 593; Curran v. State of Arkansas, 15 How. 307; Nathan v. Mohawk Ins. Co., 3 Edw. Ch. 228; Mann v. Currie, 2 Barb. 294; Wallworth v. Holt, 4 Myl. & Cr. 619; Allen v. Montgomery

R. R. Co., 11 Ala. (N. S.) 437; 1 Am. Law Mag. 96; Mann v. Cooke, 20 Conn. 177; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 60; Hatch v. Dana, 101 id. 210.)

The statutory remedy by selling delinquent shares for assessments does not affect the right of action of the corporation on the subscription. In the case of Instone v. The Frankfort Bridge Co., 2 Bibb. 576, in discussing this question, the Court says: "A corporation is an artificial person, which, when formed and named acquires many powers, capacities, and incapacities. Some of them, as Blackstone observes, are necessary and inseparably incident to every corporation, and are tacitly annexed, of course, as soon as the corporation is duly created. Such is the right or capacity to sue or be sued, implead or be impleaded, grant or receive, and do all other acts as a natural person may. (1 Bl. Com. 502.) It follows, therefore, that the right to sue would attach to the company as soon as it was organized upon principles of the common law, independent of any provision in the Act creating the company. Nor can we perceive that it can make any difference with respect to the right to sue, whether the debt or demand is due by subscription or accrues on any other account. The subscriber is as much bound to pay the amount of the shares subscribed by him as he would be to pay any other debt, and the right of the company to demand payment is incontestable. Where there is such an obligation on the one to pay, and a right in the other to demand payment, the failure to pay necessarily superinduces a remedy by suit. That the provision of the Act giving to the company the right to sell the shares of a delinquent subscriber does not amount to a negation of the right, seems equally clear. The provision is in the affirmative, and it is a maxim of law that an affirmative statute does not take away the common law. The remedy given by the Act is cumulative only, and the company had a right to resort either to that or the remedy which the common law gave. It was mentioned in the argument as a rule of law, that where a statute creates a right, and prescribes a mode in which it shall be enforced, the mode prescribed by statute and no other must be pursued. Whether such a rule exists or not, is not material to decide, for it is plain that it is wholly inapplicable to the case before the Court. The right to the demand due from the defendant was not given to the company by the Act of incorporation. That Act, by creating the corporation, gave it capacity to acquire the right, but the right itself was acquired by the defendant's becoming a subscriber; its existence, therefore, depended upon his consent, and was not and could not have been created by the Act of incorporation." The following authorities sustain these views: 1 Redf. on Rail. 163, note 3; Ang. & Ames on Corp., § 549; Rutland etc. R. R. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536; Hartford etc. R. R. v. Kennedy, 12 Conn. 499; Buffalo and N. Y. City R. R. v. Dudley, 14 N. Y. 336; Spangler v. Indiana etc. R. R., 21 Ill. 276; N. H. R. R. Co. v. Johnson, 30 N. H. 402; Piscataqua Ferry Co. v. Jones, 39 id. 491; Herkimer M. and H. Co. v. Small, 21 Wend. 273.

It follows that the statutory liability imposed upon stockholders for the debts of the company in no way interferes with the equitable remedy sought here to be enforced. "Unpaid stock is part of the assets of an insolvent corporation without the aid of any statute, and creditors may compel its collection by the trustees by proceedings in equity." (Briggs v. Penniman, 8 Cow. 387; S. C., 18 Am. Dec. 454.) In Haskins v. Harding, 2 Dill. 106, the Court say: "Without the aid of any statute the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock constitute a fund available to creditors who are unable to make their demands from the corporate debtor, and equity will lend its aid to enforce payment for the benefit of creditors." The same rule is stated in almost the same words in Winans v. McKean R. R. and Nav. Co., 6 Blatchf. 222. The same reasons that have been adduced to show that the statutory remedy for the collection of assessments or calls was not exclusive in the case of the corporation, apply with equal force to establish that the creditor is not confined exclusively to his statutory remedy, unless where the right attempted to be enforced is conferred by statute. (Instone v. Frankfort Bridge Co., supra; Sedgwick Stat. and Const. Law, 401; Ward v. Severance, 7 Cal. 126.) In Ohio it was held that an action for unpaid assessments on subscription for stock might be joined in an action on the statutory liability of stockholders. (Warner v. Callender, 20 Ohio St. 190.)

This action is not barred by the Statute of Limitations.

If the corporation can recover, the plaintiff can, because it is through the corporation that his equities are enforced. As long as the corporation is not barred by the statute, neither is the creditor. Our debts are in full force against the corporation. Plaintiff's judgment against it was recovered May 2, 1878, and the complaint in this action was filed August 30, 1878, the judgment being in full force. Our view of this case is fully sustained by the Supreme Court of Georgia, in the case of Cherry v. Lamar, 58 Ga. 541. In that case the same question as to the Statute of Limitations was raised as in the one at bar. The Supreme Court said: "When judgment creditors of a corporation who have exhausted their remedy against their debtor proceed by bill to subject debts equitably liable to the payment of their judgments, they are not barred if their judgments are not dormant and if the debts they seek to reach are not barred, as between the corporation and its debtors, in this case the stockholders who stand indebted on their subscriptions to the capital stock; * * * that an action on the bills would have been barred when the present cause was commenced is quite immaterial, the rights of the creditors, as against the bank, rest now, not upon the bills, but upon the judgments; and as against the subscribers to the stock, upon the contracts of subscription, by which the subscribers became bound to the bank. For the purposes of this proceeding, it is not necessary that the complainants should disclose the causes of action which they had against the bank, and on which their suits (commenced in December, 1869) were founded. It is enough that they produce the judgments which were rendered in those suits, and show that they are unsatisfied, and that satisfaction can not be obtained without resort to the fund now sought to be brought in." The discussion of the Statute of Limitations, therefore, limits itself to the question, whether the subscriptions are barred as between the corporation and the subscribers.

As appears from the complaint, the corporation, the City Paving Company, was organized and incorporated November 10, 1868, before the Codes were in effect. The law governing the incorporation will be found in the first volume of Hittell's General Laws, pp. 147 et seq. By Section 441 (Sec. 10), p. 148, it is provided that "the trustees shall have power to call in and demand from the stockholders the sums by them subscribed, at such times and in such payments or installments as they may deem proper." The statute of New York on this subject provided that the directors might require the subscribers to pay the amounts subscribed in such manner and in such installments as they might deem proper. Charles Bouton sued the Dry Dock etc. Stage Company, a corporation organized under that statute, for goods sold. The Marine Court allowed the defendants to set off the par value of four shares of their capital stock, as money due them upon the plaintiff's subscription for such four shares. The judgment was reversed in the common pleas, on the ground that the statute clearly contemplated a resolution by the directors, fixing the manner and the installments required; that the plaintiff's subscription was subject to this provision, and he did not agree to pay, nor was he bound to pay, until so required; and it was held that the set-off ought not to have been allowed at all, without evidence that the subscription had become payable, under a proper call by the directors for payment. (Bouton v. Dry Dock Co., 4 E. D. Smith, 420.)

It was held in The Western R. R. Co. v. Avery, 64 N. C. 491, that the Statute of Limitations against a subscriber commenced to run only from the call. In Allibone v. Hager, 46 Pa. St. 48, no call had been made for eleven years, and it was claimed that the Statute of Limitations would be a bar. The Court held that this by no means followed, that the delinquent stockholders might all the time have controlled the corporation, and yearly received profits, and it would be strange if they could, by a failure to call subscriptions from themselves, raise a bar in favor of themselves against the creditors of the corporation. See also Redfield on Railways, 163, where the author says: "A subscription for shares is justly regarded as equivalent to a promise to pay calls as they shall be legally made to the amount of the shares." Also same authority, p. 180, same volume. And to the same effect, Mansfield etc. R. R. Co. v. Hall, 26 Ohio St. 310. A party subscribing for stock of a corporation is not liable except for amounts of assessments duly levied. (California Sugar Co. v. Schaefer, 57 Cal. 398.) Even if the recovery of the subscription was barred by limitation against the corporation, it would not be so against the plaintiff. (Eyre v. Beebe, 28 How. Pr. 335.) The corporation by its release to the subscriber could not relieve him from his liability to pay his subscription when called upon by a creditor. (Upton v. Trebilcock, 91 U. S. 45.) Neither can it do so indirectly by its laches. Whether the creditors of a mining corporation whose stockholders have entered into no conventional obligation to pay subscriptions would be liable to such an action as this, is a question not involved here. Judge Hoffman, of the District Court of the United States, has held not. (In re The South Mountain Cons. M. Co., 7 P. C. L. J. 748.)

McAllister & Bergin, for Respondents.

In support of the judgment we beg to submit the following points:

As a suit based upon the statutory liability of a stockholder, the action is clearly barred by the Statute of Limitations. (Stephen v. Ware, 45 Cal. 111; Davidson v. Rankin, 34 id. 505; Parrott v. Colby, 6 Hun, N. Y., 56.) The original indebtedness accrued between May 8 and October 15, 1873. In actions upon stockholders' statutory liability, the doctrine of contribution does not obtain. (United States v. Knox, 102 U. S. 426.) The complaint is fatally defective as one based upon the individual liability of the stockholder.

The individual liability of a stockholder is direct and concurrent with that of the corporation of which he is a stockholder. A complaint, based upon such liability, must, therefore, aver all the facts, and with the like precision, averment of which would be necessary to establish legal liability against the corporation itself. (Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 168; Young v. Rosenbaum, 39 id. 646; Neilson v. Crawford, 52 id. 248.) The Court will observe that the complaint in this respect is radically insufficient. The averment that "the indebtedness upon which said judgment was recovered, and upon which the same is founded, was incurred by the City Pavement Company between the ninth of May, 1873, and the fifteenth of October, 1873, and that the said City Pavement Company was then, and ever since has been, and still is, wholly insolvent," utterly fails to allege any issuable fact. It is simply an averment of a bald legal conclusion. Who were, then, the stockholders? what were the number of their respective shares of stock? what were the debts and liabilities of the company?—in fact, all and every of the elements necessary to support such an action are entirely wanting in this complaint. Nor is the action any the more tenable upon the ground of liability for unpaid subscription to capital stock. Such liability is several, separate, and distinct. There is, of course, no such thing as contribution between the respective subscribers to the capital stock of a corporation upon their respective subscriptions. The liability of each is separate and several, and not joint. Hence, there is clearly a misjoinder of parties defendant, as well as an utter absence of right to recover on the part of the plaintiff.

As observed by this Court in The California Sugar Manufacturing Co. v. Schaefer, 57 Cal. 398: "If the subscription paper was signed after the corporation was formed, and even if the subscription can be considered as the equivalent of a subscription for stock, plaintiff has no power to treat the subscribers differently from other stockholders, or to recover from them other than the amounts of assessment duly levied." The complaint in this case wholly fails to allege demand for levy of any assessment, and wholly fails to show any right in plaintiff to arrogate to himself assertion of rights which legally can only be asserted by the corporation. The liability of any of respondents for unpaid subscription is primarily and directly to the corporation. The corporation alone has the legal right to assert such liability. Creditors have neither the right nor the title to do so. Nor does the insolvency of the corporation in the least affect this rule.

Under the statute the Board of Directors are clothed with the powers of the corporation, and are alone entitled to assert its rights. (Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 19; Gorham v. Gilson, 28 id. 484; Smith v. Hurd, 12 Metc. 385; Allen v. Curtis, 26 Conn. 456; Greaves v. Gouge, 16 Abb., N. S., 378; S. C., 69 N. Y. 154; Abbott v. Merriam, 8 Cush. 590.) Courts of equity do not undertake to administer the affairs of corporations in absence of some equitable ground, upon which exercise of its jurisdiction may be invoked. (Oglesby v. Attrill, 4 Morrison's Trans. 926.) They never interpose in absence of some such equitable ground. (Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450.) Neither creditors nor stockholders can ignore a corporation or its board of directors, and undertake to arrogate to themselves assertion of the rights of the corporation in absence of just cause therefor. (Glenny v. Langdon, 98 U. S. 29; Bate v. Graham, 1 Kern. 239.)

The complaint in this case utterly fails to show any equitable ground upon which a court of equity would interpose between the corporation and the stockholders. There is no pretense of any fraud, collusion, or improper conduct on the part of the board of directors of the corporation. As long as the corporation continues to exist, the board of directors are the legally appointed persons charged with the duty to assert the rights of the corporation, alike for the benefit of its stockholders as well as its creditors. This is, under the law, their right and their duty, and until it is made to appear that they have proved recreant to their trust, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to wrest from them exercise of their appropriate functions, or itself to undertake to perform duties specially enjoined upon them by law. As already observed in the aspect in which we now speak of the complaint it is manifestly open to the various objections to it taken in the demurrer, viz.: Misjoinder of parties plaintiff, misjoinder of parties defendant, and misjoinder of causes of action. We do not, however, deem it necessary to discuss, nor do we propose to concede the proposition with respect to liability of stockholders for unpaid subscription for stock. Upon that subject we beg to call the attention of the Court to the case of the South Mountain Consolidated Mining Co., 7 P. C. L. J. 748.)

Liability to suit upon such subscriptions is barred by the Statute of Limitations. The averment is "that the indebtedness upon which the judgment was recovered, and upon which the same is founded, was incurred by the City Pavement Company, between the ninth of May, 1873, and the fifteenth day of October, 1873, and that the said City Pavement Company was then, and ever since has been, and still is, wholly insolvent," from which it is evident that this corporation, as early as May, 1873, ceased to be a going institution, and its creditors were put upon diligence to assert their rights. Even as against liability upon subscriptions, the statute was then set in motion. If they can now sue, they could then sue, and having neglected to sue, they are barred. If they could not then sue, neither can they now sue. (Gerry v. Woodward, 53 Ala. 376; McCully v. Pittsburg F. F. Co., 32 Pa. St. 25; 36 id. 77.) Moreover, a single creditor can not maintain such an action.

MORRISON, C. J.:

The complaint shows that the defendant, the "City Paving Company," is a corporation duly organized and formed under the laws of the State of California, on or about the tenth day of November, 1868, with a nominal capital stock of $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares of $100 each. It also avers that the defendants, respectively, at the times mentioned in the complaint, became the subscribers to shares of the capital stock of the corporation, setting forth the number of shares subscribed for by each of them. It further alleges that none of the defendants have ever paid into the corporation any portion of the capital stock subscribed for by them, and charges that the whole amount that each defendant subscribed remains due and unpaid. The complaint further charges that on the second day of May, 1878, the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the City Paving Company in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, for the sum of $10,500, which judgment still remains in full force and effect, and wholly unsatisfied. That an execution was issued on such judgment against the property of the City Paving Company which was placed in the hands of the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, and has been returned wholly unsatisfied. That the indebtedness upon which the aforesaid judgment was recovered accrued between the ninth day of May, 1873, and the fifteenth day of October of that year. There is a further averment in the complaint of the total insolvency of the City Paving Company, and that all of the subscriptions of the defendants to the capital stock of the corporation were made prior to the creation of the indebtedness to the plaintiff. To the complaint the defendants demurred, the demurrer was sustained by the District Court, and plaintiff has taken this appeal.

The questions involved in the case are somewhat new in this State, and have never before (within our knowledge) been presented to the Supreme Court for decision. An examination of the authorities shows, however, that a suit in equity by creditors of a corporation, to compel the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in their subscriptions, is a very common proceeding not only in England but also in this country. In Ang. & Ames on Corporations, § 602, we find the law thus stated: "It has been held that when the trustees, or other proper agents for that purpose, neglect to call in the debts due by the stockholders of a corporation for stock, so as to enable the company to pay its debts, a creditor, by a bill in chancery, can compel such agents to enforce contribution from the stockholders according to their subscriptions." In the case of Henry v. The Vermillion Railroad Co. and other stockholders, 17 Ohio, 189, the Court say: "These bills are filed under the act directing the mode of proceeding in chancery. They set forth judgments at law recovered against the Company; further, that after efforts made, they could not be collected on execution, and that the individual defendants are indebted to the Company as stockholders, upon their stock subscriptions. The principle has already been recognized by this Court, that a creditor's bill will lie against a stockholder of an incorporated company, to compel him to pay over to a judgment creditor the amount of his subscription, which had not before been paid to the company (Miers et al. v. Zanesville etc. Turnpike Co., 11 Ohio 273; S. C., 13 id. 197), and the authority of these cases we find no reason to deny."

In the case of Haskins v. Harding, 2 Dill. C. C. 106, Dillon, Circuit Judge, uses the following language: "Without the aid of any statute, the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock constitute a fund available to creditors who are unable to make their demands from the corporate debtor, and equity will lend its aid to enforce payment for the benefit of creditors." (Citing numerous authorities.) In the case of Ogilvie et al. v. The Knox Insurance Co., 22 How. 380, the Supreme Court of the United States maintained the same principle in a case where the subscriptions were obtained by fraud. It is there said that, "in a bill by a judgment creditor against an incorporated insurance company and its stockholders, to compel the latter to pay up the balance due on their several subscriptions to the stock, they can not be allowed to defend themselves by an allegation that their subscriptions were obtained by fraud and misrepresentations of the agent of the company. It is too late, after the investment is found unprofitable and debts are incurred, for stockholders to withdraw their subscriptions under such a pretense or plea."

The case of Adler et al. v. The Milwaukee Patent Brick Manufacturing Company et al., 13 Wis. 57, is a strong case to the same effect. The language of the Court is that "the stockholders, being in general free from personal responsibility, the capital stock constitutes the sole fund to which creditors look for the liquidation of their demands. It is the basis of the credit which is extended to the corporation by the public, and a substitute for the individual liability which exists in other cases. So far as the creditors are concerned, it is regarded in the law as a trust fund, pledged for the payment of the debts of the corporation. * * * If, therefore, by the willful or stubborn inaction of the directors or stockholders the company fails to meet its obligations and perform its duties, a court of equity will, on a proper application, afford the requisite relief."

In a very recent case — South Mountain Con. Mining Co., 7 Sawy. 30 — Hoffman, J., says: "I do not question the power of the Court to compel contribution of unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of an insolvent corporation for the purpose of paying its debts." The learned Judge cites numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in support of his view of the law.

It may be remarked that the case of the South Mountain Consolidated Mining Company, 7 Sawy. 30, was carried by writ of review to the Circuit Court, was there affirmed, and the opinion rendered by the learned Circuit Judge is relied upon by the defense in this case. But with due deference to the very able counsel, we must say that we do not think that it sustains defendants' position. Mr. Justice Sawyer there says: "Mining corporations in California are, in these particulars, sui generis. They are organized and carried on upon principles, in these respects, wholly different from banking, railroad, insurance, and other like commercial corporations having a subscribed capital stock. There is no agreement, express or implied, to pay up any particular amount of stock, and no one understands that there is. Certainly none is intended by the parties. If there is a contract to pay up the full nominal amount of the stock, it could be called in from time to time without regard to the liabilities or needs of the corporation. There being no such agreement, there is no contract or agreement to pay up capital stock, which can constitute assets of the corporation. There is a mere power of assessment under the statute and by-laws — not a contract to pay in installments upon call; but this mere power to assess, independent of any contract, express or implied, to pay up the nominal amount of capital stock in installments, is not assets of the corporation.”

The distinction between the case there considered, which involved the liability of a stockholder in a mining corporation, and the liability of a subscriber to the capital stock of a banking, railroad, insurance, or other commercial corporation, such as we are dealing with in this case, is clearly marked out in the opinion of Mr. Justice Hoffman. He says: “These principles apply to all cases where an obligation has been created or incurred on the part of a stockholder to pay to the corporation a certain sum, being the par value of the capital stock subscribed for or transferred to him. The liability thus created grows out of contract, express or implied, and the creditors of the corporation may avail themselves of it, as of any other choses in action or equitable assets of the corporation, on well-settled and familiar principles.”

Other authorities might be cited in support of the views above presented, but we think we have sufficiently shown that when a stockholder has contracted with the corporation to pay in a certain amount of the capital stock, he is bound by such contract, and a court of equity will enforce it for the benefit of creditors of the insolvent corporation.

But it is claimed that the rule above stated has been changed in this State. In the first place, our attention has been called to Section 2, Article xii. of the new Constitution, which provides that “dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law;" and also to Section 3 of the same article, which declares that "each stockholder of a corporation, or joint stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association." But the above provisions of the new Constitution do not apply to this case, as the liability of the stockholders accrued before the new Constitution was adopted. The provisions of the old Constitution on this subject, however, were substantially the same. By Section 32, Article iv. (Const. of 1863), it is provided: "Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators, and other means, as may be prescribed by law." And Section 36 of the same article reads as follows: "Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint-stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities."

We are also referred to Section 322 of the Civil Code, respecting the liability of stockholders. But is the right of the creditors of the corporation to pursue the subscribers in equity, as has been attempted in this case, taken away by the provisions of the Constitution or the Act of the Legislature? We think not; and will endeavor to show that it is not, by reference to the authorities.

Thompson, in his recent work on the Liability of Stockholders, says (§ 266): "The general rule is, that, although a creditor has a concurrent remedy against a shareholder at law, this does not oust the jurisdiction of the courts of equity." "Section 266. The rule obtaining in some of the States, in case of a statutory liability, is that the creditor has a concurrent remedy at law." "It has been held, under a statute of individual liability, that where a suit in equity has been instituted for such a purpose (the benefit of all the creditors), no creditor can institute a separate suit for the enforcement of such liability in his own behalf." (§ 275.)

The case of The Bank of the United States v. Dallam et al., 4 Dana, 575, is an authority on this subject. That was a suit in chancery against the shareholders in a corporation called the Fayette Paper Manufacturing Company, the charter of which contained the following clause: "Provided, however, that the estate and property of every individual shareholder, who holds or possesses stock in said corporation, shall at all times be liable and subject in law, in proportion to his or her interest therein, to pay and satisfy all debts and demands contracted by said corporation during the time he or they held stock therein, upon a failure of the corporate funds to discharge the same." The plaintiff had recovered a judgment against the corporation, and failing to collect the money from it, prosecuted his suit on the equity side of the Court against the shareholders, and the Court there says: "As the judgment and return on the execution thereon entitled the bank to demand the amount of its debt from stockholders in their personal right, and as they are liable, not in solido, but only distributively, in the ratio of their several interests, and are moreover multitudinous, we have no doubt that the Circuit Court, sitting in equity, had jurisdiction over a joint bill filed against all of them, concurrently with a court of law, over separate actions against each of them, upon his sole and several liability."

The case of Matthews et al. v. Murray et al., 24 Md. 527, was a suit in equity against the stockholders in a company incorporated under an Act containing the following provision: "The stockholders shall be severally and individually liable to the creditors of the company in which they are stockholders to an amount equal to the amount of stock held by them respectively, for all debts and contracts made by such company," and the bill was entertained by the Court. In the later case of Norris v. Johnson, 34 id. 489, the Court uses the following language: "In such case (against the stockholders) it is unanimously conceded the creditors may have relief in equity, but the controverted question is, Have they not also the right to sue at law?" In Massachusetts it has been held, that the creditor must pursue his remedy against the shareholders in a court of equity. In the case of Harris v. The First Parish in Dorchester, 23 Pick. 112, the Court holds that "an action at common law does not lie in favor of a bank, against a stockholder, to enforce the provision in Revised Statutes, c. 26, sec. 30, that if any loss or deficiency of the capital stock in any bank shall arise from the official mismanagement of the directors, the stockholders shall, in their individual capacities, be liable to pay the same; but the remedy is by bill in equity." The case of Perry et al. v. Turner et al., 55 Mo. 418, is an authority sustaining the jurisdiction of a court of equity in a proceeding against the stockholders; and the cases of Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, and Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, are authorities in support of the proposition we have been considering.

It appears to us to be well settled, that a suit such as was instituted by the plaintiff properly lies in a court of equity, unaffected by any remedy the creditor may have under the provisions of the Constitution and the statute. Indeed, it may be that the constitutional and statutory remedy is a broader one than that arising upon the contract of subscription, for in a suit upon the latter the recovery can not extend beyond the amount of the subscription, whereas the liability created by the law, independent of any contract, is for the stockholder's proportion of all the debts contracted or incurred during the time he was such stockholder.

There is but one other question in the case, and that relates to the Statute of Limitations. The indebtedness upon which the judgment was recovered accrued between the ninth of May and the fifteenth of October, 1873; the date of the judgment is May 2, 1878, and the complaint in this case was filed August 30, 1878; and it is claimed, on behalf of the defendants, that the Statute of Limitations has run in their favor. An examination of the authorities, however, will show that the point is not well taken. Referring again to Thompson on the Liability of Stockholders, we find the law thus stated: "Where the liability is for unpaid balances on stock subscriptions, there is authority for the position that the statute does not begin to run (if at all) before a notorious disbandment of the company and cessor of business; and there is good sense in this view. However, this may be, it is clear of doubt that, in case of a company which continued to transact business, and which has been a 'going company,' without interruption, from the time of the subscription of the stockholder until the commencement of the suit for calls, the statute would not commence to run until a call made by the stockholder to pay it; and, for stronger reasons, it would not begin to run until that time, if the controversy were between a creditor of the corporation and a shareholder." (§ 291.) In the case of Curry v. Woodward, 53 Ala. 376, the Court say: "Until the call was made, or there was an evident disbandment of the company and a relinquishment of business, the Statute of Limitations would not begin to run." To the same effect is the case of Cherry et al. v. Lamar et al., 58 Ga. 541, in which a bill was filed by the creditors of a corporation to subject to the payment of their judgment against it certain unpaid stock subscribed by the defendants.

A defendant can not avail himself of the Statute of Limitations, by demurrer to the complaint, unless it affirmatively appears therefrom that the action is barred by a provision of that statute; and in this case there is no averment of the existence of any fact that would put the statute in motion. No disbandment of the company, no cessor of business, no call upon the subscribers to pay, is averred in or appears from any fair construction of the complaint. We are of opinion that the complaint sets forth a good cause of action against the defendants, and the demurrer should have been overruled.

Judgment reversed.

EX PARTE GEORGE L. JORDAN.

POLICE COURT NO. 2 OF SAN FRANCISCO — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — LOCAL OR SPECIAL JURISDICTION. — The Act of March 7, 1881, creating an additional Court in the City and County of San Francisco, known as Police Judge's Court No. 2, is not in contravention of Art. IV., Sec. 25, Subds. 1, 2, 3, and 4, or Subds. 28 and 29 of the Constitution.

APPLICATION for discharge on writ of habeas corpus.

John M. Lucas, for Petitioner.

The Court:

Under the Consolidation Act of the City and County of San Francisco, there is a Police Judge's Court, and a Judge thereof. March 7, 1881, the Legislature passed an Act creating an additional Police Judge's Court in the said city and county, to be known as "Police Judge's Court Number Two" (Stats. 1881, p. 74), and declared that it "shall have concurrent jurisdiction of all preliminary examinations of persons charged with felony, and of all misdemeanors and violations of city and county ordinances, and all other offenses of which the Police Judge's Court of said city and county now has jurisdiction." The Act provided for the distribution of the business between the two Courts, and declared that "the mode of examination, trial, and procedure in the Police Judge's Court Number Two shall, in all cases, be governed by the same rules prescribed by law for other Police Courts in similar cases."

It is urged that this Act is in violation of Article iv., Section 25, Subdivisions 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the Constitution of 1879, which forbid the Legislature from passing a local or special law regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Police Judges, for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors, and regulating the practice of courts of justice. We do not think the Act in question is in violation of those provisions. By Section 1 of Article vi., the judicial power is vested in certain Courts named, "and such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish," etc. The Legislature had power to create the Court. To say that the Court, thus created, shall have concurrent jurisdiction with another Court already in existence, and shall be governed by the same rules prescribed by law for other Police Courts in similar cases, is in no sense local or special legislation within the meaning of the inhibitions. It is simply making applicable to the new creation that which already existed as to former tribunals. Nor is the Act in violation of Subdivisions 28 and 29 of Section 25 above named. Those subdivisions must be read in connection with Section 1 of Article vi. The view contended for by petitioner would render the latter section nugatory, for, in that case, the Legislature might create a court, without (if such a thing, be possible) a judge or other officer, or conferring any jurisdiction upon it.

The warrant having been issued by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and being valid on its face, the petitioner is remanded.

THOMAS H. SMITH v. LU WHEAT SMITH.

DIVORCE — CRUELTY. — The only fact of alleged cruelty expressly found is, that defendant deserted her husband and children, and went to Germany, for the purpose of perfecting herself in the art of painting, and was abroad about three months.

Held: This act did not, of itself, constitute such cruelty as entitled the plaintiff to a divorce.

Id. — Id. — FINDING. — The finding "that the repeated acts of cruelty, as established by the evidence, upon the part of said defendant towards her said husband and children during the last several years, have inflicted upon the plaintiff grievous mental suffering," is but a conclusion of law, and does not find any fact in issue in the case.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. HINES, J.

Thom & Stephens and F. H. Howard, for Appellant.

The finding, "that for several years past the defendant has been guilty of repeated acts of extreme cruelty to plaintiff and their children," is not of a fact, but a conclusion of law. (Wells v. McPike, 21 Cal. 219; Frisch v. Caler, id. 71; Lightner v. Menzel, 35 id. 452; People v. Board of Supervisors, 27 id. 674; Polhemus v. Carpenter, 42 id. 375.) The findings must state the facts expressly and specially, not generally. The true test is, would they be good as a special verdict? (Breeze v. Doyle, 19 id. 105; Phoenix Water Co. v. Fletcher, 23 id. 488; Garfield v. K. F. & T. M. Co., 17 id. 510.) In action for divorce based on cruelty, specific facts must be alleged, and the general allegation of cruelty is insufficient. (Harrison v. Harrison, 7 Ired. 484; Lewis v. Lewis, 5 Mo. 278; Hill v. Hill, 10 Ala. 527; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168; Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Dev. & Bat. 377; Brown v. Brown, 2

R. L. 381; Fellows v. Fellows, 8 N. H. 160; Ward v. Ward, 1 Tenn. Ch. 262; Horne v. Horne, id. 259; Smith v. Smith, 43 N. H. 234.)

Brunson & Wells and George S. Hupp, for Respondent.

As to the sufficiency of findings the test is, would they be sufficient if presented by a jury as a special verdict? (Breeze v. Doyle, 19 Cal. 101.) The Court should find the ultimate facts, not state the evidence. (Jones v. Clark, 42 id. 180; Coveny v. Hale, 49 id. 556; Mathews v. Kinsell, 41 id. 514; Hiln v. Peck, 30 id. 286.) "Extreme cruelty" is a term defined by Section 94 Civil Code, and is as follows: "Extreme cruelty is the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage." The acts of defendant produced this effect. Those acts constitute the ultimate fact expressed in the term "extreme cruelty." Extreme cruelty is a fact which by no assertion or sophistry can be tortured into a conclusion of law. It is torture itself. Extreme cruelty is grievous mental suffering. It is a state of being, and not a conclusion of law. It is an ultimate condition of mind or body produced by successive acts, and not a legal and logical conclusion drawn from a major and a minor premise.

The Court:

Plaintiff sued defendant for a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, alleging in his complaint various acts claimed to constitute cruelty, all of which are denied in the defendant's answer. A decree of divorce was entered in the Court below, and one of the errors assigned on this appeal is that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment. The following are the findings on the question of extreme cruelty:

"5. That the conduct of the defendant toward the plaintiff and her treatment of her children during the last several years, has, upon repeated occasions, been extremely cruel, and that in the month of June, 1880, without the consent or knowledge of the plaintiff, she deserted her husband and children, and went to Dusseldorf, in Germany, for the purpose, as she now claims, of perfecting herself in the art of painting, and remained absent from her said husband and children until the seventeenth day of September thence next ensuing, upon which day she returned to Los Angeles City.

"6. That the repeated acts of cruelty, as established by the evidence, upon the part of said defendant toward her said husband and children during the last several years, have inflicted upon the plaintiff grievous mental suffering."

It will be observed that the only fact of alleged cruelty expressly found is that the defendant deserted her husband and children and went to Dusseldorf, in Germany, for the purpose of perfecting herself in the art of painting, and was abroad from June until September, 1880. This act did not of itself constitute such cruelty as entitled the plaintiff to a divorce. (1 Bish. on Marriage and Divorce, § 738.) The sixth finding is but a conclusion of law, and does not find any fact in issue in the case. (Polthemus v. Carpenter, 42 Cal. 386.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

THE PEOPLE v. ISAAC TAMKIN.

MURDER — JUSTIFICATION — THREATS. — Threats made by the deceased against a defendant charged with homicide are admissible for the purpose of illustrating or determining the question as to who was the assailant in the fatal encounter, and are also admissible when they have been communicated to the defendant, for the purpose of determining whether the threats, in connection with the other facts and circumstances of the case, were sufficient to excite reasonable fears in the mind of the defendant. The previous threats alone, however, unless coupled at the time with an apparent design then and there to carry them into effect, will not justify a deadly assault by the other party. There must be such a demonstration of an immediate intention to execute the threat as to induce a reasonable belief that the party threatened will lose his life or suffer serious bodily injury unless he immediately defends himself against the attack of his adversary.

Id. — Id. — Id. — On a trial for murder the facts of the homicide were thus stated by one witness, whose testimony was substantially corroborated by the others: "Tamkin (the defendant) and I were walking down the street, when McClellan (the deceased) hailed Tamkin from behind; we turned around and McClellan stood there, facing us; he said to Tamkin, 'I suppose you are as well healed as you were last night;' Tamkin replied, 'I am not healed;' McClellan then said, 'Go and heal yourself, for I am fixed;' Tamkin said, 'Where shall I go to get fixed?' McClellan said, 'Go where you d—d please, it makes no difference to me; what did you do to me last night?" Tamkin said, "I really don't know;" McClellan raised his hat and showed a scar, and said, "That is what you did, you d—d son of a ——" Tamkin replied, "I am very sorry for it;" McClellan said, "Yes, I guess you are; I can lick you any place in the world, you d—d son of a ——" go and heel yourself; I don't want to take any advantage of you;" he turned and walked away, I should judge, fifteen feet from Tamkin, when Tamkin drew a pistol from his right-hand pocket and said, "Yes, I am heeled, you d—d son of a ——" what do you want?" and fired his pistol." Other shots were fired by both parties; but the evidence shows that it was the first shot that inflicted the mortal wound.

Held: There is no principle of the law that will justify a homicide committed under such circumstances.

Id.—Id.—The Court instructed the jury: "If the killing was intentional it was unlawful, and there was no justification, unless the killing was in necessary self-defense, as defined in these instructions."

Held: The Court elsewhere correctly charged the jury upon the law of self-defense, and, taking the charge as a whole, the law upon this branch of the case was correctly given, conceding (which is not conceded) that the evidence tended to make out a case of self-defense or justifiable homicide.

Id.—Id.—THREATS.—The Court instructed the jury: "If the question as to who commenced or brought on the conflict in which the deceased lost his life is in doubt, threats made by the deceased against the defendant are admitted in evidence solely to enable the jury to determine as to who was the aggressor in the fatal encounter."

Held: The objection as to the word "solely" in the foregoing instruction, admitting that the instruction in a proper case should not contain such a limitation, the evidence having failed to show a case of self-defense, no injury could have resulted to the defendant from the instruction as given.

Id.—Id.—INSULTING LANGUAGE.—The Court refused to permit the defendant to ask a witness the question, if such language as was used by the deceased to the defendant the night before the homicide "was not considered fighting language at Truckee?" Held: The objection was properly sustained.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of Nevada County.
CALDWELL, J.

Dibble & Kitts and C. W. Cross, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.:

The defendant was prosecuted by information for the crime of murder, and was convicted of manslaughter. The facts disclosed by the evidence in the case clearly establish the killing, and the only defense relied upon is that of justification. A difficulty occurred between the defendant and the deceased the night before the homicide, in the course of which the deceased received a severe blow on the head from a pistol in the hands of the defendant, and from that time down to a few seconds before the shooting the deceased, at short intervals, uttered threats against the life of the defendant, at the same time using violent language and opprobrious epithets respecting him.

We have no doubt of the correctness of the position taken by the learned counsel for the defense, that threats are admissible for the purpose of illustrating or determining the question as to who was the assailant in the fatal encounter, and that they are also admissible when they have been communicated to the defendant, for the purpose of determining whether the threats, in connection with the other facts and circumstances of the case, were sufficient to excite reasonable fears in the mind of the defendant. "A person whose life has been threatened by another whom he knows or has reason to believe has armed himself with a deadly weapon for the avowed purpose of taking his life or inflicting a great personal injury upon him, may reasonably infer, when a hostile meeting occurs, that his adversary intends to carry his threats into execution. The previous threats alone, however, unless coupled at the time with an apparent design then and there to carry them into effect, will not justify a deadly assault by the other party. There must be such a demonstration of an immediate intention to execute the threat as to induce a reasonable belief that the party threatened will lose his life or suffer serious bodily injury unless he immediately defends himself against the attack of his adversary." (People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 683; see also People v. Travis, 56 id. 251; Stokes v. The People, 53 N. Y. 174.)

We will now examine the evidence for the purpose of determining how far the principles above stated apply to the present case. That the deceased threatened to kill the defendant, that he armed himself with the avowed purpose of carrying such threats into execution, and that all these matters were fully communicated to the defendant, clearly appears from the evidence. But the next inquiry is, whether the conduct of the deceased was such, at the time of the shooting, as to justify or excuse the killing. Did the circumstances occurring at the time of the homicide show an apparent design, on the part of the deceased, to carry his threats into execution? Was there any demonstration made by the deceased showing an immediate intention to execute the threats? Was there any ground for a reasonable belief that the party threatened was about to lose his life, or to suffer serious bodily injury, unless he immediately defended himself against the attack of his adversary? The following is, in substance, the evidence touching upon the matter: The witness Lovern says: "Tamkin and I were walking down street, when McClellan (the deceased) hailed Tamkin from behind. We turned around, and McClellan stood there facing us. He said to Tamkin, 'I suppose you are as well heeled as you were last night?' Tamkin replied, 'I am not heeled.' McClellan then said, 'Go and heel yourself, for I am fixed.' Tamkin said, 'Where shall I go to get fixed?' McClellan said, 'Go where you d——d please, it makes no difference to me.' 'What did you do to me last night?' Tamkin said 'I really don't know.' McClellan raised his hat, showed a scar, and said, 'That is what you did, you d——d son of a ——.' Tamkin replied, 'I am very sorry for it.' McClellan said, 'Yes, I guess you are; I can lick you any place in the world, you d——n, etc.; go and heel yourself; I don't want to take any advantage of you.' He turned and walked away, I should judge fifteen feet from Tamkin, when Tamkin drew a pistol from his right-hand pocket and said, 'Yes, I am heeled, you d——n son of a ——; what do you want?' and fired his pistol. McClellan partly stooped, drew his pistol from his right-hand coat pocket as he stooped, staggered, and fired a shot at Tamkin." Other shots were fired by both parties, but the evidence shows that it was the first shot that inflicted the mortal wound upon the body of McClellan. The ball penetrated the side of McClellan, and the shot was fired before the deceased had turned his face to the defendant. Several witnesses gave an account of the circumstances attending the shooting, and although differing somewhat in some of the minor and unimportant details of the homicide, there is, upon the important and substantial facts, no material difference. It is but natural that several persons, witnessing such an occurrence, should differ somewhat in the details of the transaction; and nothing more than a natural discrepancy is found in the evidence in this case.

The witness Jaques testified that "McClellan said: 'I won't take any advantage of you, but you go and heel yourself,' and then turned square around and started to walk away." There is no conflicting evidence upon the point, that, after the hostile demonstration was made by McClellan, he declared his unwillingness to take any advantage of an unarmed man, such as he believed the defendant to be, and then turned his back upon the defendant and began to walk away. It was while the deceased was in this position with reference to the defendant, with his back to him, and in the act of walking away from him, that the defendant drew his pistol and almost immediately thereafter discharged it, with fatal effect, upon the person of deceased. Will the law justify or excuse him under such a state of facts? We think not. The defendant was in no immediate danger at the time, and there was no necessity, real or apparent, for the deadly assault. The deceased could easily have executed his threat, if it was really his intention to take the life of the defendant; but after the defendant had falsely stated to him that he was unarmed, and, after all present and immediate danger had passed, the deceased having turned around to move away, the defendant drew his pistol and fired the fatal shot. We are not familiar with any principle of law that would justify a homicide committed under such circumstances. (See People v. Campbell, 8 P. C. L. J. 293, and authorities therein cited.)

2. The next point made on behalf of the defendant is that the Court erroneously charged the jury as follows: "If the killing was intentional it was unlawful, and there was no justification unless the killing was in necessary self-defense, as defined in these instructions." The Court correctly charged the jury upon the law of self-defense, and, taking the charge as a whole, the law upon this branch of the case was correctly given to the jury, conceding (which we do not) that the evidence tended to make out a case of self-defense or justifiable homicide.

3. The Court also instructed the jury as follows: "If the question as to who commenced or brought on the conflict in which the deceased lost his life is in doubt, threats made by the deceased against the defendant are admitted in evidence solely to enable the jury to determine as to who was the aggressor in the fatal encounter." The objection is to the word "solely" in the foregoing instruction; and it may be that the instruction in a proper case should not contain such a limitation. But having held that the evidence failed to establish a case of self-defense, no injury could have resulted to the defendant from the instruction as given.

4. Witnesses were asked if such language as was used by the deceased to the defendant the night before the homicide "was not considered fighting language at Truckee?" The question was objected to, and the objection was sustained by the Court. It is sufficient to say that in the eye of the law, insulting language is no excuse for a deadly assault, and this is so, even at "Truckee."

After a review of the whole case, we find no error in the proceedings sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment. The law was given to the jury as favorably for the defendant as the circumstances of the case warranted, and the erroneous rulings, if any there were, did not injure the defendant in any of his substantial rights.

Judgment and order affirmed.

JO HAMILTON v. WILLIS JONES ET AL.

RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID BY MORTGAGEE — FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE — CALCULATION OF INTEREST.

APPEAL by defendant J. S. Carmichael, from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Placer. MYRES, J.

Action of foreclosure of mortgage. The action was brought against the defendants Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, as the mortgagors, and against J. S. Carmichael and others, as claimants of some interest, subject to the plaintiff's mortgage—the defendant Carmichael being a junior mortgagee.

The indenture between the parties plaintiff and defendants Jones and Dougherty, as it appears in the transcript and as a part of the complaint, is as follows:

This indenture, made this first day of February, A. D. 1876, by and between Jo Hamilton of the first part, and Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty of the second part, both of the County of Placer and State of California, witnesseth that, whereas, heretofore, A. Bruce, of Placer County, California, has held the property hereinafter described in trust for the payment of certain sums of money due from the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, by deeds absolute on their face, but which were only intended as mortgages to secure the money; and whereas, the said Jo Hamilton has this day paid to the said A. Bruce all the moneys owing to him by the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, to wit, the sum of twenty-six thousand ($26,000) dollars, in gold coin; and whereas, the said Willis Jones was also indebted to the said Jo Hamilton in the sum of one thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven dollars and seventy-eight cents ($1,727.78) in gold coin, which he is desirous of securing to him; and whereas, on the payment to him by the said Jo Hamilton of the said sum of twenty-six thousand ($26,000) dollars, owing to him by the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, which is done before the en-sealing of these presents, the said A. Bruce has, with the full consent of the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, deeded all of the said property to the said Jo Hamilton, by deed of conveyance duly executed to him this day.

Now, in consideration of the said sums so paid by the said Jo Hamilton, and the said sums owing him by the said Willis Jones, the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty hereby acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the said Jo Hamilton in the sum of twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven dollars and seventy-eight cents ($27,727.78); that is to say: Jo Hamilton, who holds the deed absolute of the said property, holds it subject to the right of the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty to repurchase the said property at any time within the period of one year and six months from this date, upon paying to the said Jo Hamilton the said sum of twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven dollars and seventy-eight cents ($27,727.78), together with one and one half per cent. per month by way of interest. When the same is fully paid, then said Jo Hamilton shall re-deed all of the said property to them or their assigns, or such part as shall remain after such money shall be paid. The said payments shall be made as follows: First, as often as any of the said property may be sold (if any be sold), the proceeds shall go first to pay the said Jo Hamilton all the interest due him to that date on the said sum of twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven dollars and seventy-eight cents ($27,727.78). Second, to pay so much of the principal as shall remain, and as the parties herein now have other dealings and transactions together, which do not have any concern or connection with this contract, it is hereby stipulated and expressly agreed that nothing shall be considered or treated as a payment on this contract by the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty from any source whatever, unless the same is at the time of such payment indorsed plainly upon the copy of this contract kept by the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, and signed by the said Jo Hamilton or his assigns as a credit on said contract. The said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty shall have the full control and management of all of the said property and the revenues thereof, and from time to time as the said revenues arising from the said property shall exceed the expenses of working and running the same, such net proceeds shall be paid by them to the said Jo Hamilton, and shall be applied first to the payment of the interest due at the time of the payment, and secondly to pay so much of the said principal sum as shall remain.

It is further expressly agreed and understood, that if the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty shall fail or neglect to carefully manage the said property so as to make it yield the proper revenue and income which it reasonably and properly may yield, or should fail or refuse after demand to pay over the net proceeds and revenues thereof, then the said Jo Hamilton may elect to foreclose this contract as herein provided; and should he so elect to foreclose, his election so to do shall be final and conclusive upon the said matter of default on the part of the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, who shall be bound thereby; said foreclosure shall be upon the terms hereinafter set out, and subject to the same conditions only. The taxes on said property and all expenses connected therewith shall be borne by the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty, who shall promptly pay the same when due; and if they do not do so, then the said Jo Hamilton may pay the same, and for such sums of money so paid by him he shall be allowed to charge and collect two per cent. per month by way of interest thereon. Whenever the said sum of money is paid, and all the interest thereon, so much of the property as remains in the hands of Jo Hamilton shall be redeeded to the said Jones and Michael Dougherty, or to their assignees. Should it become desirable to sell any of the said property, the same shall not be sold without the consent of the said Jo Hamilton, and the conveyance shall be signed by both the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty and said Jo Hamilton. Should the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty not pay the said money and interest as herein provided, or should they make any default as herein provided, then the said Jo Hamilton may, at his election, at any time foreclose all the interest of the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty in the said property, by a bill filed for that purpose, and shall sell all of the said property in the manner provided by law, the proceeds thereof to go, first, to pay all costs and expenses of the said foreclosure, including attorneys' fees, not to be less than — per cent. of the sums due him from the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty; and third, such sums as shall remain shall be paid to the said Willis Jones and Michael Dougherty. This contract is assignable by either party, and the assign of either shall be clothed with the same rights as the principals.

Here follows a description of the property mortgaged, and the signatures of the parties. The complaint, after setting forth the mortgage and breaches of its covenants, contained the following allegations as to the payment of taxes by the plaintiff, and the payments on the indebtedness of mortgagees: "On the twenty-second day of January, 1877, the taxes not having been paid by the said Jones and Dougherty on said property, and the same being then delinquent, plaintiff was forced to pay the same, to wit, the sum of five hundred and ninety-two dollars and sixty-three cents ($592.63), which became a further lien upon the said property, as by the terms of the said contract, and bore interest at the rate of two per cent. per month. The only payments which have been made upon the said contract are as follows: July 1, 1876, $2,888.25, being the amount of a certain judgment credited, less the costs; July 1, 1876, check, $600; November 1, 1876, cash, $2,000; June 1, 1877, check, $4,000; January 4, 1878, check, $10,000; January 1, 1880, note, $5,000. None of these credits are indorsed on the contract kept by Jones and Dougherty, but receipts for these amounts are given and should be credited on said contract. The balance of the said contract remains due and unpaid."

The defendant Carmichael demurred to the complaint on the grounds: 1. That it does not state facts sufficient. 2. It is ambiguous, in that it does not appear whether the plaintiff has a mortgage on the property described in the complaint, or a deed of trust.

Judgment was given by the Court below for the sum of twenty-four thousand three hundred and forty-seven dollars and ninety-eight cents besides costs, and for the foreclosure. For the other facts reference is made to the opinion of the Court.

Henley, Whipple & Oates, for Appellant.

The decree is several thousand dollars in excess of the amount due the respondent Hamilton, as shown by the verified complaint, upon the most favorable calculation for him, allowing him one and a half per cent. per month interest from the date of his contract to the entry of the decree, and also the whole amount of taxes and interest thereon claimed by him in his complaint. But appellant claims that the amount of taxes so paid and the interest thereon do not constitute a lien upon the premises under the contract sued on, and therefore can not be entered as a part of the judgment, to be a prior lien to appellant's mortgage. Appellant further claims, that under the terms of the contract sued upon, interest upon the amount due at the rate of one and a half per cent. per month for only eighteen months, to wit, during the life of said contract, can be allowed. This would make a further difference of several thousand dollars in the amount of the decree.

Hamilton & Dunlap and Burt & Hamilton, for Respondent.

We are only now (November 20, 1882) served with appellants' brief, although the transcript on the appeal, taken nearly at the last day in the year for the appeal, was filed in this Court on the seventh day of August, 1882. We are satisfied that the appeal is frivolous, and we are surprised at the declaration of appellants that the decree is for several thousand dollars more than it should be. We are equally surprised at the several other erroneous positions taken, none of which are supported either by authority or common fairness. They contravene every rule of law, and we think are wholly untenable.

For the convenience of the Court, and to lessen its labors, we hereto append a calculation, which, disregarding the fractions of days and time, all of which are given appellants, show that the decree is correct:

2,079 58	— Interest to July 1, 1876.
$29,807 36
3,489 25
$26,318 11
1,579 08	— Interest to November 1, 1876.
$27,897 19
2,000 00
$25,897 19
2,720 81	— Interest to June 1, 1877.
$28,618 00
4,000 00
$24,618 00
2,621 96	— Interest to January 14, 1878.
$27,239 96
10,000 00
$17,239 96
10,878 40	— Interest to July 6, 1881.
$28,118 36
5,000 00	— Cr. January 1, 1880.
$23,118 36	— Balance July 6, 1881.
1,232 72	— Added, taxes and interest.
$24,451 08

The Court:

This is a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage. There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled by the Court, and no answer being filed, a decree of foreclosure was entered. There is no error apparent in the case, and the judgment of the Court below is affirmed.

L. HUERSTAL v. HUGH MUIR.

JUDGMENT FOR CONTEMPT — APPEAL — CASE LIMITED.— An appeal will not be entertained from a judgment of contempt in any case differing in its circumstances from that in People v. O'Neil, 47 Cal. 109, or not limited by the conditions therein considered as material.

Id.— ID.— ALIAS WRIT OF RESTITUTION.— Upon a judgment for contempt for re-entering upon land from which defendant had been ejected, the Court has no discretion to refuse an alias writ of restitution. That portion of the judgment is merely incidental; and if the appeal can not be sustained as to the whole judgment, it must fall as to every part.

APPEAL from an order of the Fifteenth District Court in and for the County of Contra Costa. DWINELLE, J.

A. H. Griffith, for Appellant.

Temple Emmet, for Respondent.

McKINSTRY, J.:

This is an appeal from an order of the late Fifteenth Judicial District Court, adjudging the defendant, Hugh Muir, guilty of contempt, for that, after having been removed from certain premises upon process duly served and issued upon a judgment in an action of ejectment, the said Muir had, without right, re-entered; and also directing that "an alias writ of execution and restitution issue." Respondent has moved that the appeal be dismissed.

It has been suggested that the portion of the order directing that an alias writ issue may be separated from the rest, and an appeal be entertained from such portion. But that portion of the order is based upon the adjudication with respect to the contempt, and is merely incidental to such adjudication. The order is a whole, and if the appeal can not be sustained as to the whole, it must fail as to every part. The Court below, having found defendant guilty of the contempt, had no discretion to refuse the writ. (C. C. P., § 1210.)

The order is entitled, "In the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco," and was filed with the Clerk of the District Court of said city and county. The action was pending in the Fifteenth District Court in and for the County of Contra Costa. It may be assumed that the order has never taken effect as a valid order, because not entered by or filed with the Clerk of the Court for Contra Costa, as required by the Act creating the judicial district. (Stats. 1863-4, p. 479.) Nevertheless, it must be treated as being what it purports to be — an order of the Fifteenth District Court of San Francisco.

It is claimed by appellant that the order is void; but appeals have often been entertained from judgments and orders void in law.

This brings us to the question, whether the order adjudging the party guilty of contempt is appealable. In People v. O'Neil, 47 Cal. 109, it was held: "An appeal may be taken from a judgment for contempt, when the fine is for $300, and the Court below has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there are facts dehors the record, which can only be brought up on a statement on appeal." We are not inclined to extend the authority of that decision so as that it shall include any case differing in its circumstances, or not limited by the conditions therein considered as material. In the case now before us, no fine of $300 was imposed by the Court below; neither does it appear that there are facts dehors the record which could only be brought up by statement or bill of exceptions. It may be remarked, also, that the affidavits and papers found in the transcript are in no way identified as having been used at the trial of the alleged contempt.

The question, then, is, whether on a record which shows that an order adjudging a party guilty of contempt, by a Court which had no power to make an operative order in the manner in which this order was made, can be reviewed on appeal.

Persons committed for contempt by the District Court have been discharged in habeas corpus, on the ground that, in the particular circumstances, the Court had no jurisdiction to adjudge the contempts. (Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 318; id. 319; Ex parte Rowe, 7 id. 181.) But these cases do not strengthen the argument in favor of hearing appeals from contempt, judgments, and orders.

Section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The judgments and orders of the Court or Judge made in cases of contempt are final and conclusive." This section is not intended to declare the absurdity that such judgments, when rendered without jurisdiction, may not be annulled by a proper proceeding. To give effect to its language, judgments and orders in cases of contempt must be held to be "final and conclusive," in the sense that they are not appealable.

In People v. Wright, 27 Cal. 151, a writ of prohibition issued to arrest the proceedings of a County Judge, who was about to try and punish a recalcitrant party for disobedience of an order of the District Court. In Batchelder v. Moore, 42 id. 413, a contempt order of the County Court was annulled by certiorari; and it must be remembered that certiorari can be resorted to only where there is no appeal.

It appears, therefore, that if a judicial officer is about to exceed his jurisdiction by trying for a contempt without legal power to do so, the party threatened may stay the proceeding by prohibition; if he actually adjudges one guilty of contempt without jurisdiction, his judgment may be annulled by certiorari; and if the judgment imposes an imprisonment, the prisoner may be discharged on habeas corpus. The remedy of the party injured in each case is ample, by resort to a common-law or a statutory writ.

We find no authority for the position, that an order adjudging one guilty of contempt may be appealed from simply on the ground that the record shows want of jurisdiction to render the judgment. It is admitted, on all sides, that if the lower Court has jurisdiction, such an order is not appealable.

The appellate jurisdiction of this Court can not depend upon the presence or absence of jurisdiction in the Court below. We have jurisdiction to hear appeals in all cases of contempt judgments—when the question presented by the record is simply as to the jurisdiction of the lower Court—or in none; since in all such cases, when we pass upon the jurisdiction of the Court below, we pass upon the merits of the appeal.

Motion granted.

APPEAL — FILING OF NOTICE — WAIVER.— Notice of appeal was dated September 6, and filed September 7, 1880, but by written indorsement due service was acknowledged by the District Attorney.

Held: If the law requires the service to be made after the notice was filed (a question not decided), here is an admission of due service, which must be construed service after the filing.

MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE — DEFINITION — MALICE — INSTRUCTION.— The Court charged the jury, that if they found from the evidence that the defendant did, on the day specified in the indictment, with malice aforethought, unlawfully kill the deceased, then they should find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. Held, erroneous.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction in the Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County. McMURTRY, J.

Dillard & Venable, for Appellant.

Graves & Graves, for Respondent.

McKINSTREY, J.:

The Attorney General moves to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the transcript shows the notice of appeal to have been served before it was filed.

The Penal Code, Section 1240, provides: "An appeal is taken by filing with the Clerk of the Court in which the judgment and order appealed from is entered or filed, a notice, stating the appeal from the same, and serving a copy thereof upon the attorney of the adverse party."

The notice of appeal, as appears from the record before us, is dated September 6, 1880, and was filed September 7, 1880.

On the notice filed is an acceptance of service in words following: "I hereby acknowledge due service upon me of a copy of the above notice. (Signed) Ernest Graves, District Attorney."

If the law requires the service to be made after the notice is filed (a question we do not decide in this case), here is an admission of "due service," which must be construed service after the filing.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

ROSS and McKEE, JJ., concurred.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The court charged the jury: "If you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did, on the twenty-eighth of February, 1880, with malice aforethought, unlawfully kill Vivian Torres, then you will find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree."

If the instruction is correct, murder of the second degree is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. But the Attorney General properly admitted the instruction to be erroneous.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

LOGGER'S LIEN LAW — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.—The Act of March 30, 1878, giving a lien to loggers, etc., does not apply to contracts entered into prior to the date of that act.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the Eighth District Court in and for the County of Humboldt. HAINES, J.

James Hanna and W. H. Brumfield, for Appellants.

S. M. Buck, E. W. Wilson, and J. D. H. Chamberlin, for Respondent.

The COURT:

The contract under which the logs in question in this suit were cut was made April 10, 1876, by which Greenlaw was to cut and deliver logs at certain specified times and places, receiving compensation at specified rates and times, as logs were delivered. The act under which plaintiff claims a lien as a laborer upon the logs was passed March 30, 1878. The terms of that contract can not be considered as changed by that act. Plaintiff certainly has no more rights as to what money was due than Greenlaw, or his assignee would have had; and if, by the terms of that contract, no money was payable to Greenlaw at the time the liens were filed, plaintiff had no lien to be enforced.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THOMAS FESSENDEN v. J. H. SUMMERS ET AL.

PROMISSORY NOTE — INDORSEMENT BY THIRD PERSON BEFORE DELIVERY. — Under Section 3117, Civil Code, a person not a party to a note, who indorses the same in blank before delivery, is to be regarded not as a guarantor, but as an indorser, and as such is entitled to notice of non-payment before he can be charged.

APPEAL by defendant D. W. Thompson from a judgment for the plaintiff in the First District Court of the County of Santa Barbara. SEPULVEDA, J.

Charles E. Huse, for Appellant.

Thompson was an indorser of the note, and was entitled to notice of the demand for payment at the maturity of the note, and that it had not been paid. (Jones v. Goodwin, 39 Cal. 493; C. C., § 3117.)

Hall & Hatch, for Respondent.

Thompson was a guarantor on the note sued upon. (Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485; Ford v. Hendricks, 34 id. 673; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 id. 138; Brady v. Reynolds, 13 id. 31; Geiger v. Clark, id. 579; C. C., §§ 2787, 2806, 2807, 3117; Brandt on Suretyship and Guaranty, § 170.)

Ross, J.:

The action is upon a promissory note signed by the defendant Summers, made payable to the plaintiff or order, and indorsed in blank by the defendant Thompson before delivery to the payee. Thompson indorsed for the purpose of adding credit to the note, and plaintiff made the loan upon the strength of the indorsement. The note not having been paid, the plaintiff, after its maturity, commenced the present action against Summers and Thompson to recover the amount due upon it. Summers suffered default, but Thompson appeared and demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled, and Thompson answered. A trial being had, the Court below found the facts to be as stated.

In the complaint, however, there is no averment, nor is there any finding, that notice was given to Thompson of the non-payment by Summers of the note when it became due; and this constitutes the ground of the appeal, which is taken by Thompson from the judgment.

Whether or not he was entitled to notice depends upon the nature of the obligation assumed by him.

The decisions of this Court upon the question, prior to the adoption of the Codes, as well as of the Courts of other States, are numerous and conflicting. Thus in Ford v. Hendricks, 34 Cal. 673, where the note in suit was signed by Hendricks and indorsed by Reed before its delivery to the payee, who was the plaintiff in the action, the Court said: "As to the relation of Reed—whether it be that of maker, indorser, or guarantor—there is much conflict of authority; but under the settled rule in this State, he must be regarded as a guarantor." In support of this, the Court cited the cases of Riggs v. Waldo,

2 Cal. 485; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 id. 138; Brady v. Reynolds, 13 id. 31; Geiger v. Clark, id. 579.

In the subsequent case of Jones v. Goodwin, 39 Cal. 493, where the defendant Wilcox had signed his name in blank upon the back of the note in suit before its delivery, the Court said: "A great diversity of opinion exists as to the nature of the liability of one not being a party who indorses his name in blank upon a note before delivery. In England he is held to be a guarantor, and his contract is, that the maker of a note will pay at maturity, or if he does not, the guarantor will. No demand or notice is considered necessary as a condition precedent to fixing the liability of the guarantor, or to the commencement of the action; but a failure to make demand and give notice, together with proof of injury, is pro tanto a defense.

"In some States, as in Massachusetts, Vermont, and Louisiana, he is regarded as a surety, or joint maker, of the note, and unconditionally liable.

"In some States he is held to be a guarantor, and various effects have been given in these States to the contract of guaranty, sometimes it being held to be conditional, at other times absolute, and very frequently parol evidence is admitted to explain what the contract really was. In other States, as in New York, Tennessee, Iowa, and, we may add, California, he is held as an indorser. * * *. The decisions in this State are substantially in accord with those which hold that one who, not being a party to a negotiable bill, indorses it in blank for the purpose of adding to its credit, is an indorser, and in view of the diversity of opinion on the subject, we should not now feel inclined to disturb the doctrine, even if it did not meet our approval."

It will thus be seen that in Ford v. Hendricks, it was said that it is the settled rule in this State, that a party signing under the circumstances stated is to be held as a guarantor, while in the subsequent case of Jones v. Goodwin, without referring in terms to Ford v. Hendricks, it was said that the rule here is that he is to be held as an indorser. In this condition of the decisions, the Legislature, in adopting the Codes, undertook to deal with the subject. Their provisions, however, like the decisions, are not entirely free from conflict.

By Section 2787 of the title of the Civil Code upon the subject of guaranty, it is declared that "a guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person." And by Section 2807, it is provided that "a guarantor of payment or performance is liable to the guarantee immediately upon the default of the principal, and without demand or notice." This last section, it will be observed, changed the rule theretofore prevailing in this State respecting demand and notice.

The provisions of Section 2787, supra, are, perhaps, broad enough to include the facts of the case under consideration. But however this may be, the case clearly comes within the express letter and meaning of the subsequent Sections 3108 and 3117 of the title of the same Code upon the subject of negotiable instruments. Section 3108 is as follows:

"One who writes his name upon a negotiable instrument otherwise than as a maker or acceptor, and delivers it with his name thereon to another person, is called an indorser, and his act is called indorsement."

And Section 3117: "One who indorses a negotiable instrument before it is delivered to the payee is liable to the payee thereon as an indorser." This was the exact position of the appellant; and whatever conflict there may be between the sections quoted from the title on the subject of negotiable instruments, and those quoted from the title on the subject of guaranty, the former must control the determination of this cause by virtue of Section 4481 of the Political Code in relation to the effect of the Codes, which reads thus: "If the provisions of any title conflict with or contravene with the provisions of another title, the provisions of each title must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such title."

It may be that Section 2787 was intended only to apply to a case where a party in terms contracts as a guarantor, in which event he would, under Section 2807, be liable immediately upon default of the principal, without demand or notice. But whether this be so or not, we think the rights of the parties must be determined by the rule declared by Sections 3108 and 3117.

Thus tested, Thompson must be held to be an indorser, and as such, upon well-settled principles, entitled to notice of non-payment.

Demand upon Summers and notice to Thompson of his non-payment being necessary to charge the latter, it follows that it is essential that the complaint should aver those facts.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with instructions to the Court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

GEORGE S. KELLER v. ALFRED E. BERRY.

FRAUD — EJECTMENT — PATENT.— E. being in possession of land under a State patent, mortgaged the same, but afterwards delivered possession to his son, who, after the commencement of an action to foreclose (to which he was not made a party), abandoned the possession to the defendant, who proceeded to enter the land under the homestead laws of the United States.

Held: Courts would cease to be courts of justice if such proceedings were countenanced. The defendant is not entitled to withhold the possession from the plaintiff.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles. HOWARD, J.

Glassell, Smith & Smith, and F. H. Howard, for Appellants.

Bicknell & White, for Respondent.

ROSS, J.:

Ejectment to recover possession of a certain portion of a sixteenth section. It appears from the record that prior to the year 1872, one José Rubio settled on the land with his family, and proceeded, together with his son, Andres Rubio, who was of age, to cultivate and improve it. Improvements consisting of a dwelling-house, orchards, and vineyards, were put upon the land, mainly by Andres. On the twentieth of March, 1868, José made an application to the State of California to purchase the land. His application was accepted by the State Locating Agent, May 1, 1868, and was filed in the State Land Office on the twentieth of June, of the same year. The State officers issued to him a certificate of purchase for the land on the tenth of April, 1872, and a patent therefor, regular in form, on the third day of January, 1874. It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that by these proceedings, and others incidental to them, José Rubio acquired no title to the premises.

In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to determine whether he did or not; for the record further shows, that in February, 1877, he borrowed of the plaintiff the sum of six thousand dollars, and as security therefor executed to the plaintiff a mortgage on the property in question, together with an adjoining tract of about twelve acres — which mortgage was duly recorded at the time, in the records of the proper county.

In the month of February, 1878, José, in the language of the findings, “considering his title under the State to be void, abandoned his claim to the premises in controversy, and delivered possession thereof to said Andres Rubio, who from thenceforward took possession and claimed the same as his own, until the — day of May, 1879, when he abandoned the same to the defendant herein, and allowed him to take possession of the same, together with the improvements.”

In the mean time, the plaintiff had commenced an action to foreclose his mortgage, in which both José and Andres Rubio were made parties defendant, and in May, 1879, a decree of foreclosure was duly entered in the action in favor of the plaintiff. Under this decree the Sheriff of the county, on the sixth day of June, 1879, sold the premises in controversy to the plaintiff for the sum of $8,542, and on the same day executed to the plaintiff a certificate of sale therefor. No redemption having been made, the Sheriff, on December 8, 1879, executed to the plaintiff a deed for the property.

Thus it will be seen, that José Rubio, on the strength of his possession of the land and the improvements thereon, if not of title, got six thousand dollars of the plaintiff's money, gave him a mortgage on the land and improvements to secure its repayment, and then surrendered the possession thereof to his son, who thereupon took possession of the property and claimed the same as his own, until shortly before its sale by the Sheriff under the plaintiff's decree of foreclosure, when he (the son) turned the possession of the land and improvements over to the defendant. On the possession so obtained, defendant proceeded to enter the land under the homestead laws of the United States, the entry, however, being afterwards suspended by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

It is this sort of circumvention that we are asked to sanction. Courts would cease to be courts of justice if such proceedings were countenanced. It is not necessary to the disposition of this case for us to say whether, under the doctrine of the cases of Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 579; Trenouth v. San Francisco, 100 id. 251; and Atherton v. Fowler, 96 id. 515, a title to government land ever could be acquired by virtue of a possession acquired as was the possession of the defendant. The question here is, whether upon the facts stated, the defendant is entitled to withhold the possession of the premises from the plaintiff; and we are clearly of the opinion that he is not.

Judgment affirmed.

EX PARTE WILLIAM CLARKE.

CHANGE OF ATTORNEYS IN CRIMINAL CASES — APPEAL.—Sections 284 and 285, Code of Civil Procedure, have no application to criminal cases: a notice of appeal may be signed by any attorney of the Court authorized by the defendant.

APPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus.

McKissick & Rankin, for Plaintiff.

MORRISON, C. J.:

The petitioner has been brought before us on a writ of habeas corpus, and his petition for a discharge having been denied, he now applies for admission to bail. The application is opposed on behalf of the people, on the ground that no appeal has been taken in the case.

The petitioner was tried and convicted in the Superior Court of Monterey County of the crime of libel. On the trial of the case, T. Beeman, Esq., appeared as counsel for defendant, and the notice of appeal is signed by Charles W. Quilby, Esq. It was admitted, on the hearing of this application, that the person by whom the notice of appeal was signed was an attorney of the Court, and was authorized by the defendant to take the appeal. It is claimed, however, that no change of attorney was made in conformity to Sections 284 and 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore, it is argued that the notice of appeal should be disregarded.

In our opinion, the sections above referred to have no application to criminal cases, in which the defendant has a right to defend in person and with counsel. (Art. i., § 13, Const.)

Section 283 of the same Code provides that an attorney and counselor shall have authority "to bind his client in any of the steps of an action or proceeding, by his agreement filed with the Clerk or entered upon the minutes of the Court."

It will not be pretended for a moment, that this section has any application in a criminal case; for in all cases of felony the defendant must appear and plead in person. In our opinion, the notice of appeal was sufficient, and indeed, it was so treated by the District Attorney, who admitted service of a copy of it upon him.

The judgment in the case simply imposed a fine, and the petitioner is entitled to be admitted to bail as a matter of right. (P. C., § 1272.)

Let him be admitted to bail in the sum of one thousand dollars, the bail bond to be approved by the Judge of the Superior Court of Monterey County.

SALE OF CATTLE—DELIVERY AND CHANGE OF POSSESSION—FRAUD AS TO CREDITORS.—H., having cattle running at large with those of D., his tenant, sold them to the plaintiff, and the cattle were driven up into a corral, where H. said to the plaintiff, "Here are your cows that you bought;" thereupon the plaintiff requested B. to take care of the cattle, and pasture them for her, and B. agreeing to do so, the cattle were turned back into the pasture.

Held, that there was an immediate delivery and actual change of possession, and that the sale was not void as to creditors.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the First District Court in and for the County of Ventura, FAWCETT, J.; and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of said county. HINES, J.

S. A. Sheppard, for Appellants.

Williams & Williams, for Respondent.

THORNTON, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages for an unlawful conversion of plaintiff's cattle. On the trial, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and they appealed from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. Appellants urge that they are entitled to a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

It appears from the testimony that the plaintiff purchased the cattle sued for from one Higgins. The defendant, Miller, was Sheriff of the County of Ventura, and, as such Sheriff, levied upon the cattle in controversy by virtue of a writ of execution issued upon a judgment recovered against Higgins by Daly and Rogers, in the District Court of Ventura County. It is contended on behalf of appellants that the evidence shows that the sale to the plaintiff was void as to Daly and Rogers, for the reason that it was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession—that, therefore, the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, and it should be set aside and a new trial granted. We have examined the testimony, and are of opinion that it sustains the verdict, and that there was no error in the ruling of the court below.

PEOPLE v. AH FOOK.

OFFER TO BRIBE OFFICER.— Under Section 67, Penal Code, the crime of offering to bribe an executive officer is complete without the tender or production of the money.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Sonoma. PRESSLEY, J.

W. A. Cornwall, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.:

The defendant was prosecuted, by information, in the Superior Court of Sonoma County, and was found guilty of the crime of offering a bribe to an executive officer. The prosecution was under Section 67 of the Penal Code, which provides that "every person who gives or offers any bribe to any executive officer of this State, with intent to influence him in respect to any act, decision, vote, opinion, or other proceeding as such officer, is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison not less than one nor more than fourteen years;" and the charge was that "Ah Fook, on the first day of September, 1880, at the County of Sonoma, etc., to one W. H. Mead, then and there being an executive officer of the State of California, to wit, Deputy Constable, etc., a bribe, to wit, the sum of two hundred dollars, willfully, maliciously, and feloniously did offer, with intent, willfully and feloniously, to influence said W. H. Mead in his action as such Deputy Constable, to wit, with intent, willfully and feloniously, to influence said W. H. Mead to discharge Me Youk, then and there held by said W. H. Mead, as Deputy Constable, under a warrant of arrest, issued, etc., which warrant charged Me Youk with the crime of grand larceny," etc. To this information a demurrer was filed, which was properly overruled by the Court.

The evidence shows that W. H. Mead was a Deputy Constable in the township of Santa Rosa, and as such, had in his custody, under a warrant of arrest, a Chinawoman named Me Youk, and the defendant had full knowledge of the above facts. For the purpose of getting the accused out of custody, the defendant said to the officer: "You catch him Chinawoman for me; get him out where I can get him in the buggy, I give you two hundred dollars." No money was tendered, and none exhibited. It is, therefore, claimed on behalf of the defense, that the proof failed to establish an offense under Section 67 of the Penal Code.

That section makes it a crime to offer a bribe to an executive officer, and the question here presented is, Was the crime complete without the tender or production of the money? Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, defines an offer to be "a proposition to do a thing;" and Mr. Webster says an offer is "to bring to or before; to hold out; to present for acceptance or objection; to exhibit; to present in words; to proffer; to make a proposal to." The case of Worrall is in point. The defendant was indicted for offering a bribe to a Commissioner of the Revenue; and the evidence of his guilt was found in a letter written by him, containing the following language: "If I should be so happy in your recommendation of this work, I should think myself very ungrateful if I did not offer you one half of the profits as above stated; and I would deposit in your hand, at receiving the first payment, £350, and the other £350 at the last payment, when the work is finished and completed." The offer was made to an officer of the United States, for the purpose of obtaining a contract for building a light-house at Cape Hatteras, and upon it the defendant was tried and convicted. (The United States v. Worrall, 2 Dall. 384.)

"The latter commentators, supported, as I think, by the adjudged cases, however, maintain the broader doctrine, that any attempt to influence an officer in his official conduct, whether in the executive, legislative, or judicial department, by the offer of any reward or pecuniary consideration, is an indictable common-law misdemeanor." (The State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102; 1 Bishop's Cr. Law, § 689.) "Why is the mere unsuccessful attempt to bribe a criminal? The officer refuses to take the offered reward, and his integrity is untouched — his conduct uninfluenced by it. The reason for the law is plain. The offer is a sore temptation to the weak or the depraved. It tends to corrupt, and as the law abhors the least tendency to corruption, it punishes the act which is calculated to debase, and which may effect prejudicially the morals of the community." (Walsh v. The People, 65 Ill. 60.)

We are of the opinion that the evidence brought the case within the letter and spirit of Section 67 of the Penal Code.

2. The next point in the case is an exception to the ruling of the Court excluding evidence offered on behalf of the defense. An attempt was made to show that it is the practice among the Chinese of San Francisco to buy and sell women of their country. We do not see in what aspect of the case such evidence was competent, and are of the opinion that the Court below ruled correctly in excluding it.

3. The law was correctly given by the Court to the jury, and there was no error in refusing to give the second instruction asked for by the defendant.

4. The last point is, that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence. A careful examination of the bill of exceptions satisfied us, however, that there was sufficient evidence of guilt to justify the verdict.

We find no error in the case, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, and from an order modifying said judgment, in the Third District Court of the City and County of San Francisco. THORNTON, J.

A petition for hearing in bank was filed in this case after judgment, and denied.

J. C. Bates, for Appellants.

F. C. M. Du Brutz, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.:

On the fourth day of November, 1873, one Kimbell and others sold and conveyed to the defendant, P. H. McEvoy, the tract of land in controversy in this case, for the sum of $9,393.80. To secure payment of the purchase money, John McEvoy joined the defendant P. H. in the execution of four promissory notes, three of them for the sum of $2,398.45 each, and the fourth for the sum of $2,198.45. The first was payable one year, the second two years, the third three years, and the fourth four years, after date; and P. H. McEvoy secured their payment by giving a mortgage upon the land.

But the notes were not absolutely delivered, because at the time of the transaction of purchase the land was one of several tracts of land which were embraced in a deed of trust, given on the seventeenth of April, 1872, by the vendors—then the owners of the land—to certain persons in trust to sell and convey for the purpose of paying off a large sum of money which the trustors had borrowed from the San Francisco Savings Union—a corporation existing under the laws of the State and doing business in the city of San Francisco. And when the defendant, P. H., purchased the land it was incumbered by this deed of trust, and he bought with full knowledge of its existence and subject to it. But to secure himself against it, he and Kimbell, the payee of the notes, entered into the following agreement in writing:

“WEBB’S LANDING, February 23, 1874.

“It is hereby agreed, that four certain notes and the mortgage to secure the payment of the same, the said notes being three for $2,398.45 and one for $2,198.45, one payable on November 4, 1874, second on November 4, 1875, third on November 4, 1876, and fourth, for $2,198.45, payable on November 4, 1877, and bearing interest at ten per cent. per annum, shall be left in the hands of W. H. Glasscock until the payee, A. G. Kimbell, shall relieve from any and all incumbrances up to the fourth of November, 1873, certain premises described in a certain deed, dated November 4, 1873, and made by said Kimbell, George D. Roberts, and William S. McMurthy, to the said P. H. McEvoy.

“In duplicate.

A. G. KIMBELL.

“P. H. McEVoy.”

Under this stipulation P. H. McEvoy placed the notes in the hands of the depository, to be held as escrows. Kimbell delivered to him the deed, and the mortgage to Kimbell was recorded in the recorder’s office of Contra Costa County—the county where the land was situated—by whom, does not appear from the record of the case. But the mortgagor went into the immediate possession of the land under the deed which he had obtained from the mortgagee and others, and has since continued in the undisturbed possession of the same.

In March, 1875, while the promissory notes were held as escrows, John McEvoy died. Letters of administration of his estate were granted to P. H. McEvoy, who has since continued to act as administrator. On the fourteenth of August, 1876, Kimbell presented the notes, verified according to law, to the administrator as a claim against the estate. The claim was rejected by the administrator, and properly so, because at that time the condition upon which the notes had been delivered as escrows had not been fulfilled; and no liability attached to the estate upon them. But on the twenty-sixth day of November, 1876, P. H. McEvoy had accepted a conveyance of the land from one who, under an agreement between himself and one of the vendors, had acquired the title to the land at the sale of it by the trustees under the deed of trust; and the depository of the notes, upon the conveyance being made to McEvoy, delivered the notes to Kimbell, who, after P. H. McEvoy had accepted the conveyance of the title under the trust deed, presented the notes to the administrator for allowance as a claim against the estate, but the administrator again indorsed them rejected, and the question arises, whether any liability attaches to the estate of John McEvoy upon the notes. It is contended that the estate is not liable, because there was no delivery of the notes by John McEvoy, either absolutely or as escrows.

As a general rule, a negotiable promissory note, like any other written contract, has no legal inception or valid existence until it has been delivered in accordance with the purpose or intent of the parties. Delivery is an essential part of the making or execution of the note; and if this be subsequent to the date, it takes effect from the delivery and not from the date; but the promise to pay relates to the date if referred to, and becomes binding and operative when the note is delivered. An operative delivery must be unconditional, and not a delivery as a mere escrow; but a delivery as an escrow becomes absolute when the condition on which it was made transpires.

Now, the notes in controversy were the joint notes of P. H. and John McEvoy. After they were signed they were left in the hands of the former for delivery. He did deliver them as escrows, and although the latter was not himself personally present at the delivery, yet his assent to it must be inferred. For when one of two or more makers of a joint promissory note delivers it as an escrow, or absolutely, he is presumably the constituted agent of his co-makers for that purpose, and the delivery made by him is the act of all. Besides, it is alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that both the makers of the notes agreed with the payee that the notes were to be delivered as escrows, and that they were, pursuant to that agreement, actually delivered by one of them to the person selected by all as custodian of the notes. This agreement, it is true, was reduced to writing in the form of the memorandum which was signed only by one of them. Yet that did not change the existing verbal agreement between all the parties as to the delivery of the notes, nor affect the delivery, as the act of both, made by the one who signed the written agreement.

But John McEvoy died before the condition on which the notes were delivered had transpired, and the question arises whether there was an absolute delivery by or in his behalf which will bind his estate.

An original delivery can not be made by or on behalf of a dead man. But when the condition on which an original delivery made in the life-time of a party transpires, the conditional delivery becomes absolute and the absolute delivery takes effect against the contracting parties from the date of the delivery of the contracts as escrows, notwithstanding the death of one of the contractors before the happening of the condition. "If a man delivers a bond as an escrow to be delivered on condition performed, before which the obligor or obligee dies, and the condition is afterwards performed, here there could be no second delivery, yet it is the deed of the obligor from the first delivery, although it was only inchoate, but it shall be deemed consummated by the performance of the condition." (Parsons, C. J., in Wheelright v. Wheelright, 2 Mass. 454; S. C., 3 Am. Dec. 66; Hatch v. Hatch, 9 id. 310; S. C., 6 Am. Dec. 67; Bodwell v. Webster, 13 Pick. 414, 415.) So, says Coke: "If the grantee dies between the first delivery and the deed becoming absolute, the deed is good, for there was traditio inchoata in the life of the parties, sed postea consummata existens by the performance of the condition takes its effect by force of the first delivery, without any new delivery." (Perryman's Case, 5 Co. 84 b; Peck v. Goodwin, Kirby, 64.)

Upon the happening of the condition upon which the notes were to be delivered, the delivery then became absolute, notwithstanding the death of one of the makers of the notes before the fulfillment of the condition, and the notes became operative and valid as legal subsisting claims against his estate. Being presented to the administrator and rejected on the twenty-sixth of November, 1876, this suit was brought within time, and the claims are not barred.

As to the defendant P. H. McEvoy, it is claimed that the deed of trust transferred the title to the land, and that the trustors, at the time of the sale and conveyance to the defendant, had no title in the land to convey, and the notes were therefore without consideration and void.

Of course, in an action on a mortgage by an assignee who received the notes secured for it, for value, after they became due, this defense may be made. Any defenses open to the maker in a suit on the notes may be made use of in the action upon the mortgage; for the debt is the principal thing and the mortgage the incident; and the legal rights and remedies upon the debt become fixed upon the incident. If, therefore, the notes were given without consideration, they are void in the hands of the plaintiff, who received them after they became due. But promissory notes given for a legal or equitable title to land are not void for want of consideration, especially where, as in this case, the defendant purchased the land knowing that it was subject to the deed of trust given by his grantors, and against which he protected himself by a written stipulation for the discharge of the trust, and, at the same time, delivered the notes to be held as escrows until the trust was discharged. It is true, that the deed of trust transferred the title to the land, yet it was held by the trustees only to secure payment of the debt due by the trustees to the beneficiaries; and, in this respect, the trust deed resembled a mortgage. But it was also a conveyance, and a mortgage is not, until foreclosure and sale; yet, as a conveyance, it does not enable either the trustees or the beneficiaries to recover possession of the land, for a trustor, like a mortgagor, is entitled to the possession of the land until a sale and conveyance of it in pursuance of the terms of the trust. Therefore, one who merely holds the title in trust, as security for debt, can not maintain ejectment against the trustor or his assigns to recover the land. (Tyler v. Granger, 48 Cal. 259.) And if the trust shall be satisfied, before a sale and conveyance under the deed, it is the duty of the trustee to reconvey the title. If he fails or refuses, equity will compel him; or it will, in any case, undertake the supervision of the execution of the trust.

As therefore the equitable title to the land was in the trustors at the time of the purchase, the defendant, in purchasing it, acquired the title of his vendors, subject to the condition that the deed of trust should be satisfied by them. The condition was fulfilled by the sale and conveyance by the trustees and the transfer of the title to the defendant by the purchaser at that sale; for if the trust had been satisfied before a sale and conveyance, pursuant to its terms, and the trustees had reconveyed the title to the trustors, the condition upon which the notes were to be delivered would have been fulfilled, and the defendant, by his original deed, would have obtained the title of his grantors, which he bargained for; and the same result follows where title passes by a sale and conveyance under the trust deed directly to the defendant who accepted the deed. By acceptance, he received the land free and clear of the incumbrance which was upon it at the time he purchased it, and against which he protected himself by the agreement between him and his vendors. Whatever implied covenants were contained in his original deed were satisfied by the conveyance to him of the trust title, which he accepted. Time was not of the essence of the contract between him and his vendors; and any delay in the fulfillment of the condition upon which he delivered his notes for the purchase money as escrows, he himself overlooked when he accepted the deed transferring to him the title under the deed of trust, without objections. Nor can any inquiry be made in this suit as to the title of the land itself. It is sufficient that he mortgaged whatever estate he acquired, as security for payment of the notes given for the purchase money; and he subsequently acquired the title which he bargained for, and this title inures to the benefit of his mortgagee. The object of this suit is to obtain a sale of his estate in the land, and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the satisfaction of his notes. (San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 473.) In such an action it is not proper to try questions relating to the title of the land.

In the foreclosure proceedings we discover no error. The findings are sustained by the evidence. It was not error to allow counsel fees. The mortgage provided for them, and the Court had authority under the statute to allow them against the mortgagor. It is true, John McEvoy was not a party to the mortgage, and his estate is not liable for such fees; but no judgment for them was rendered against the administrator. The decree provides for a judgment against the mortgagor and the administrator for any deficiency which might remain after applying the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises to the satisfaction of the amount due upon the notes and costs, including the counsel fees fixed by the Court against the mortgagor. The estate is thus relieved from the payment of counsel fees.

It is urged that the estate of a deceased maker of a joint promissory note executed by two or more, can not be joined as defendant with the surviving debtor or debtors in an action on the note. But there was no demurrer to the complaint on the ground of misjoinder. Such an action, however, is maintainable in this state, but any judgment recovered against the administrator must be made payable de bonis testatoris. (Bank of Stockton v. Howland, 42 Cal. 129.) In this case the judgment was not so entered in the first instance, but the Court below, upon suggestion, modified the judgment against the administrator by making it payable out of the estate of the deceased, in due course of administration. It is objected that this was done after the adjournment of the term, but the Court had power to make the amendment notwithstanding the adjournment of the term. A court, while it has physical control of its records, may amend its judgments or orders where the record furnishes the data by which to amend. (Hegeler v. Henckell, 27 id. 495.) In this case the necessity for the amendment was apparent upon the record.

It is also objected that one of the notes was not due at the commencement of the action. But it became due before the trial of the case and the rendition of judgment, and under Section 728, C. C. P., the Court had jurisdiction to decree a foreclosure of the mortgage to satisfy all of them. (Hawkins v. Hill, 15 Cal. 500.)

Lastly, it is argued that John McEvoy signed the notes as a surety only, and that his death released him from all liability thereon. But the assumed relation does not appear upon the face of the notes, or from anything in the case. The point was not urged in the Court below. It is made here for the first time, without any basis of fact; for the answer of the defendants contains no such defense. If the relation existed and could be shown under Section 2832, C. C., as against the plaintiff, who received the notes upon the apparent character of each of the makers of the notes as a principal, it must be pleaded as a defense to entitle it to consideration.

Judgment and orders affirmed.

THE PEOPLE v. AH LUCK ET AL.

MURDER — CAUSE OF DEATH — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTION.— Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the evidence showed that the deceased was shot and cut by some sharp instrument upon a bridge crossing the Truckee River, and thrown into the river; and a physician testified that certain of the wounds would necessarily produce death; but whether the deceased was dead when he was thrown into the river, or that his death was not caused by drowning, he could not state. Upon this evidence the Court instructed the jury, that "if from the evidence the jury find that the mediate cause of the death of Ah Gow was the wounds inflicted upon him by the defendants, then the fact that he was thrown into the water after the infliction of such wounds is of no consequence;" and it was claimed that this instruction conflicted with other instructions given to the jury, to the effect that if the jury were in doubt as to whether the death was caused by the wounds, or by injuries received in the fall from the bridge, or by drowning, they should acquit; that to convict, even if the wounds inflicted while on the bridge were mortal, they must still be satisfied beyond all doubt that his death was not caused either by drowning or by the fall from the bridge; and unless so satisfied they should acquit.

Held: The evidence justified the jury in finding the defendants guilty as charged; and there was no substantial conflict in the instructions to their prejudice, whatever criticism may arise from the use of the word "mediate."

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Nevada. CALDWELL, J.

George S. Hupp and H. V. Reardon, for Appellants.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

MYRICK, J.:

The defendants were indicted for the murder of one Ah Gow; and the defendants Ah Luck, On Gue, and Ah Sing were convicted of murder in the first degree, the punishment of the first being death, and of the others of imprisonment for life.

1. The defendants allege that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the verdict, in that the evidence does not show that death resulted from wounds inflicted by the defendants, but might have been from drowning. The circumstances were, that deceased was shot, and was cut by some sharp instrument, upon a bridge crossing the Truckee River, at Truckee, and the body, alive or dead, thrown into the river. Dr. Curless, a physician called for the prosecution, testified that certain of the wounds found by him upon the body of Ah Gow would necessarily produce death; but whether Ah Gow was dead when he was thrown into the river, or that his death was not caused by drowning, he could not state, for the reason that in the post mortem examination made by him he did not open the body, and therefore could not have examined the heart and lungs, which was necessary to do in order to ascertain with any degree of certainty whether death did or did not result from drowning.

2. It is also urged that the Court erred in giving the following instruction, viz.: "If from the evidence the jury find that the mediate cause of the death of Ah Gow was the wounds inflicted upon him by the defendants, then the fact that he was thrown into the water after the infliction of such wounds is of no consequence; it being claimed to conflict with and nullify other instructions given, in substance, as follows: If the jury believe that cuts were inflicted upon deceased by defendants, and he was then thrown into the river where he was found dead, and are yet in doubt as to whether the death was caused by the wounds or by injuries received in the fall from the bridge, or by drowning, they should find a verdict of not guilty; that to convict they must be satisfied beyond all doubt that the deceased came to his death by wounds and injuries inflicted upon him by the defendants before he was thrown into the river; that if the wounds inflicted while on the bridge were mortal, they must still be satisfied beyond all doubt that his death was not caused either by drowning or by the fall from the bridge, and unless they are so satisfied they should find a verdict of not guilty; that in order to convict the defendants, the jury must be as well satisfied that the deceased did not come to his death by the fall or by drowning as they are that he was found dead.

There was evidence tending to show that the deceased came to his death from the wounds inflicted by the defendants, and that evidence was plainly submitted to the jury under instructions as favorable to the defendants as they had the right to ask — perhaps more favorable. There was no substantial conflict in the instructions to the prejudice of defendants, whatever criticism may arise from the use of the word “mediate.” It is true, as urged by counsel, that people can not conjecture as to the mode of death, on the trial of a capital case; but we apprehend from the testimony in this case, that the jury were not practically called upon to rely upon conjecture or indulge in fanciful suppositions as to the cause of the death of the deceased. We think the evidence fully justified the jury in finding the defendants guilty as charged.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The action is by mandamus, to compel the defendant, under the Act of April 3, 1876, to furnish to the Commissioners of Transportation, created by that Act, certain information. (Stats. 1875-6, p. 783.)

The judgment appealed from is as follows: "In this action, the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendants' answers having been by this Court sustained, and the said defendants having failed to appear and amend their answers within the time allowed by law, therefore it is ordered that the default of the defendants, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, be entered for failure to amend their answers, and that a peremptory writ of mandamus issue."

The Code of Civil Procedure (Section 1088) provided,
* * * "The writ [of mandate] can not be granted by default. The case must be heard by the Court, whether the adverse party appear or not." The judgment must therefore be reversed.

The Act of April 3, 1876, was repealed (without exception or reservation) by the tenth section of the third chapter of the Act of April 1, 1878 (Stats. 1877-8, p. 986); and, from the date last mentioned, the Commissioners of Transportation—to whom the judgment of the District Court commanded defendant to report—ceased to exist. It follows that the proceeding should be dismissed.

EX PARTE THOMAS K. FOLEY.

CRIMINAL COMPLAINT.— The petitioner was convicted under Section 415 of the Penal Code, upon a complaint charging that at a time and place specified
“ the said T. K. Foley . . . did use vulgar and indecent language within the hearing of children, in a loud and bolsterous manner, willfully and unlawfully, all of which is contrary to the form of the statute,” etc.; and upon an application for a discharge upon habeas corpus, it was urged that the judgment was void, because the language alleged to be profane and obscene was not recited in the complaint, and also that the offense which the complaint attempts to charge can only be committed on the public streets of an “ unincorporated town.” Held: That neither objection was tenable.

APPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus.

Julius Lee and J. M. Lesser, for Petitioner.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The petitioner was brought before the Court in Bank, upon habeas corpus, and after hearing was remanded to custody. He prayed to be discharged on the ground that the judgment under which he was held was invalid, for the reason that the complaint on which he was tried charged no offense.

The complaint charges that "defendant [petitioner], on the nineteenth day of October, 1880, at Watsonville, in the County of Santa Cruz, State of California, committed a misdemeanor, as follows, to wit: The said T. K. Foley, at the time and place aforesaid, did use vulgar and indecent language within the hearing of children, in a loud and boisterous manner, willfully and unlawfully, all of which is contrary to the form of the statute," etc.

Section 415 of the Penal Code is as follows: "Every person who maliciously and willfully disturbs the peace or quiet of any neighborhood or person, by loud or unusual noise, or by tumultuous or offensive conduct, or threatening, traducing, quarreling, challenging to fight, or fighting, or who, on the public streets of any unincorporated town, or upon the public highways in such unincorporated town, run any horse-race, either for a wager or amusement, or fire any gun or pistol in such unincorporated town, or use any vulgar, profane, or indecent language within the presence or hearing of women or children, in a loud and boisterous manner, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction by any Court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than ninety days, or by both fine and imprisonment, or either, at the discretion of the Court."

It was urged at the argument that the judgment was void because the language alleged to be profane and obscene was not recited in the complaint. It was also urged that the locus is a material element in the offense created by the statute; that the offense which the complaint attempts to charge can only be committed on the public streets of an "unincorporated town." Counsel for petitioner relied on Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 212, as authority for both these positions.

In Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 212, this Court (after suggesting objections to the validity of a certain ordinance) held that the petitioner was entitled to his discharge, because it affirmatively appeared upon the record of the Police Court that he had been tried and sentenced to be imprisoned for doing an act which was neither a violation of the ordinance nor of any law or statute of the state. He was not tried for a violation of an ordinance prohibiting the use of bawdy, lewd, obscene, or profane words. That charge had been made against him, but it was expressly dismissed in the Police Court. He was tried for having violated an ordinance which made it a misdemeanor for one to "address to another, or utter in the presence of another, words, language, or expressions having a tendency to create a breach of the peace." The complaint not only failed to show that the person was present of whom the words were spoken, or that they were addressed to him, but showed affirmatively that the words were not addressed to such person, and that he was not present. No like objection can be made to the complaint on which the present petitioner was tried and convicted. An offense is distinctly charged in the complaint, and is described in the language of the statute — which is ordinarily sufficient. (1 Bish. Cr. Prac. 359, and cases cited.) Even if it should be admitted — and we do not admit it — that it would have been better pleading to have recited the words, the objection to the omission should have been specially taken, and the failure to recite the words did not render the judgment void.

But we do not understand Section 415 of the Penal Code to provide for the punishment of "vulgar, profane, or indecent language, within the presence or hearing of women or children, in a loud and boisterous manner," only where such language is thus used "on the streets of an unincorporated town."

The statute enumerates several different acts, some of which are declared to be misdemeanors if done in an unincorporated town, and the rest of which are made misdemeanors if done anywhere. Each of the acts made a misdemeanor in case only it is committed within an unincorporated town, is specifically declared to be a misdemeanor if done in such town. Thus: * * * "Or who, on the public streets of any unincorporated town, or upon the public highways of such unincorporated town, run any horse-race, either for a wager or for amusement, or fire any gun or pistol in such unincorporated town." The other offenses defined in the section are not directly connected with the words "unincorporated town," and the definition of such other offense is complete without the element of locality. The purpose of the statute is made still more apparent by the very nature of the acts prohibited in a "town," or (the sense in which the word is used in the statute) collection of dwellings such as constitutes a village (unincorporated). There seems sufficient reason why a horse-race "for amusement," or the firing of a gun or pistol, should be made a criminal offense in such an assemblage of houses and inhabitants, while, in the absence of unmistakable language to that effect, it will not be presumed that it was the intention of the Legislature to subject a citizen who shall discharge a fire-arm anywhere within the borders of the State to imprisonment in the county jail for "firing a gun." The same section very wisely, however, makes it a violation of the criminal law "to fight," or "to use vulgar, profane, or indecent language in the presence of women and children, in a loud and boisterous manner," within and without a "town."

SALARY OF JUDGE — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.—There is nothing in the provision of Section 24, Article vi., of the Constitution, which indicates the intention that a forfeiture of salary should be the result of a failure of a judge to decide all cases within ninety days; but the purpose of the provision was to prohibit the Judge from receiving his monthly salary until all cases submitted for ninety days should be decided.

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus.

A. C. Freeman, for Plaintiff.

MORRISON, C. J.:

This is an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus. The plaintiff is the Superior Judge in and for the County of Placer, and the defendant is the Controller of the State of California.

The petition sets forth "that on the twelfth day of October, 1880, there was due this affiant from the State the sum of $250, his salary as such Judge aforesaid, payable by the State, for the months of August and September, 1880. That on said twelfth day of October, 1880, he applied to said Controller for said salary (meaning for his warrant upon the Treasurer of State for said sum of money due him as aforesaid), and accompanied said application with his affidavit * * * to the effect that no cause in his Court remained undecided that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of ninety days; that thereupon said Controller gave him his warrant for $125, but refused his warrant for the remaining $125.

The answer of defendant is as follows: "That on the thirty-first day of August, 1880, the warrant for the petitioner's salary for the month of August, 1880, was prepared by respondent for delivery to said petitioner; that said warrant still remains in the office of respondent undelivered; that petitioner has not at any time presented to respondent, or filed in the office of Controller of State, any affidavit showing that on the thirty-first day of August, 1880, no cause in petitioner's Court remained undecided that had been submitted to him for decision for the period of ninety days. To this answer the plaintiff interposed a demurrer, and the only question for us to determine is, Does the answer set up any defense?"

The ground taken by the Controller is, that to entitle the plaintiff to his salary for the month of August it must appear that on the thirty-first day of that month no case remained undecided that had been submitted for ninety days. The position taken by the Controller is, in plain language, simply this: That if a Judge allows any cause to remain undecided for the period of ninety days, he forfeits the salary for the month immediately preceding the expiration of such term of ninety days.

The provision of the Constitution is that "no Judge of a Superior Court nor of the Supreme Court shall, after the first day of July, 1880, be allowed to draw or receive any monthly salary unless he shall take and subscribe an affidavit, before an officer entitled to administer oaths, that no cause in his Court remains undecided that has been submitted for decision for the period of ninety days."

There is nothing in the foregoing constitutional provision which indicates the intention that a forfeiture of salary should be the result of a failure to decide all cases within ninety days. But the purpose of the provision was, to prohibit the Judge from receiving his monthly salary until all cases that had been submitted for ninety days were decided. If, for instance, there were cases pending undecided on the thirty-first day of August, which had been submitted for ninety days, the Judge was not entitled at that time to his salary for that month; but if such cases were decided on the first of September, he would then have a right to demand immediately a warrant for his salary for August. We find no difficulty in holding that such is the meaning of the clause in the Constitution (Article vi., Section 24). Demurrer sustained.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. EVANS, J.

A petition for hearing in Bank was filed in this case after judgment, and denied.

John C. Hall, for Appellant.

Charles P. Eells, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.:

Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal in this case on the following facts:

On the sixth day of May, 1880, judgment in favor of plaintiff was entered in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and on the thirteenth day of August of the same year an order was made denying defendant's motion for a new trial. On the thirtieth day of August notice of appeal to the Supreme Court was served on the respondent, and on the eighteenth day of September the notice was filed in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court. On the fourth day of September the undertaking required by the Code was duly filed by the Clerk.

It is claimed, on behalf of the respondent, that the appeal was not taken in the manner required by law, and in support of this proposition the Court is referred to the case of Buckholder v. Byers, 10 Cal. 481, which holds that the filing of a notice of appeal must precede the filing of the undertaking, because until an appeal is taken there is nothing to give effect to the undertaking. That decision was made when Section 337 of the Practice Act was in force, which provided that "the appeal shall be made by filing with the Clerk of the Court, with whom the judgment or order appealed from is entered, a notice, stating the appeal from the same or some specific part thereof, and serving a copy of the notice upon the adverse party or his attorney," and under that section it was held that the filing of the notice of appeal must precede or be contemporaneous with the service of a copy thereof on the adverse party. (Buffendean v. Edmonson, 24 id. 94; Boston v. Haynes, 31 id. 107.)

But the foregoing section of the Practice Act has been materially changed by the Code of Civil Procedure. The law in force at the time the proceedings in this case were had was Section 940, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "an appeal is taken by filing with the Clerk of the Court in which the judgment or order appealed from is entered, a notice, stating the appeal from the same or some specific part thereof, and serving a similar notice on the adverse party or his attorney. The order of service is immaterial, but the appeal is ineffectual for any purpose, unless, within five days after service of the notice of the appeal, an undertaking be filed or a deposit of money be made with the Clerk as hereinafter provided," etc.

It will be observed that the new section has changed the rule previously in force respecting appeals, and has rendered inapplicable the decisions above referred to. As the law now stands, the notice of appeal may be filed with the Clerk on a day subsequent to that upon which the service is made, upon the respondent or his attorney, and the undertaking may be filed before the notice of appeal is filed with the Clerk. It must be filed, however, within five days after service of the notice of appeal, and that was done in this case.

The motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied. So ordered.

THE PEOPLE v. WILLIAM NICHOLS.

RECORDING VERDICT — READING VERDICT — OBJECTION.— Upon a trial for burglary, when the jury came into the Court, and their names were called, the Court asked the jury if they had agreed upon a verdict, and the foreman answered that they had, and handed a paper to the Court; and the Court looked at the paper and handed it to the Clerk, saying: "Mr. Clerk, record the verdict." The defendant asked that the verdict be read before it was recorded, the Court refused the request, and the defendant excepted. The Clerk copied the verdict into the permanent minutes of the Court, read it to the jury, and asked: "Gentlemen of the jury, is this your verdict?" Some of the jurors answered "Yes," and none expressed any dissent. The Court then directed the Clerk to poll the jury. The Clerk thereupon asked each juror: "Is this your verdict?" and each answered in the affirmative, and the jury were then discharged.

Held: There was, in the course pursued by the Court, a palpable irregularity which would never have occurred if the provisions of the Penal Code had been looked to by the Court; but the defendant has not been prejudiced in any substantial right. His exception was simply on the order of procedure, no reference being made to any substantial right claimed by the defendant, of which he might be deprived by the action of the Court. The counsel for the defendant should have put his objections in a form distinctly challenging the attention of the Court to the fact that the course pursued would take away from defendant the timely right of having the jury polled; and not having done so at that time, he can not now be heard to maintain that this Court should pay any attention to it on this appeal.

EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTION AS TO CREDIBILITY OF DEFENDANT AS WITNESS.— The instruction upon this point, referred to in People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 204, approved.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of San Joaquin.

A petition for hearing in Bank was filed in this case after judgment, and denied.

J. H. Budd and L. C. Terry, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

THORNTON, J.:

The defendant was, upon information and trial, convicted of burglary in the first degree, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment. From the judgment defendant appealed. He also moved for a new trial, which was denied, and from the order denying his motion he also appealed.

The cause was submitted to the jury, and they retired for deliberation. As appears from the bill of exceptions, they deliberated two hours and a half before agreeing; and having agreed, they were conducted into the Court by the Sheriff, when their names were called by the Court, and all answered. The Court asked the jury if they had agreed upon a verdict, and the foreman answered that they had, and handed a paper to the Court. The Court looked at the paper, and handed it to the Clerk, saying: "Mr. Clerk, record the verdict." The defendant asked that the verdict be read before it was recorded. The Court refused the request, and defendant excepted. The bill of exceptions further shows that the Clerk copied the verdict from said paper into the permanent minutes of the Court, read it to the jury, and asked: "Gentlemen of the jury, is this your verdict?" Some of the jurors answered "Yes," and none expressed any dissent. The Court then directed the Clerk to poll the jury. The Clerk thereupon asked each juror: "Is this your verdict?" and each answered in the affirmative. The jury were then discharged.

It is provided in the Penal Code that when the jury have agreed upon their verdict, they must be conducted into Court by the officer having them in charge. Their names must then be called, etc. (P. C., § 1147.) When the jury appear, they must be asked by the Court or Clerk whether they have agreed upon their verdict, and if the foreman answers in the affirmative, they must, on being required, declare the same. (P. C., § 1149.) When a verdict is rendered, and before it is recorded, the jury may be polled, at the request of either party, in which case they must be severally asked whether it is their verdict, and if any one answers in the negative, the jury must be sent out for further deliberation. (P. C. § 1163.)

It is urged upon us that the defendant was injured by the course taken by the Court in this case, in ordering the verdict to be recorded before it was read or declared. There was in the course pursued by the Court a palpable irregularity, which would never have occurred if the provisions of the Penal Code had been looked to by the Court. But has the defendant been prejudiced in any substantial right? For by the statute this Court is commanded, after hearing an appeal, to give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects, or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. (P. C., § 1258.) And a further command is laid upon us by Section 1404 of the same Code, in these words: "Neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed by this Code in respect to any pleading or proceeding, nor an error or mistake therein, renders it invalid, unless it has actually prejudiced the defendant, or tended to his prejudice, in respect to a substantial right."

The case of The People v. Rodondo, 44 Cal. 541, which occurred under the Criminal Practice Act, containing provisions identical with Section 1404, Penal Code, above cited (Crim. Prac. Act, § 601), in force before the adoption of the Code, the jury, having agreed on their verdict, were conducted into Court, and, without their names having been called, the Court received the verdict. On appeal it was claimed that the Court erred in receiving the verdict without first calling the names of the jurors. At that time the statute required, as it does now, that, when a jury agreed as to their verdict, they shall be conducted into Court, and "their names must then be called; and if all do not appear, the rest shall be discharged without giving a verdict." (Crim. Prac. Act, § 414; P. C., § 1147.)

The Court held that this was undoubtedly an irregularity in thus receiving the verdict, but, under the provisions of the section of the Criminal Practice Act above referred to, it refused to disturb the verdict, and affirmed the judgment, holding that the irregularity complained of "in no way prejudiced the defendant."

An application of the section (P. C., § 1404) will be seen in The People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 494, as also in People v. Gilbert, 60 Cal. 108, a decision of this Court in bank, opinion filed January 4, 1881. In both of these cases the Court refused to reverse where there was an irregularity, holding that no substantial right of the defendant had been prejudiced.

In the case under consideration the jury were actually polled by the Court, and each juror answered that the verdict was his. It seems to us that the right of polling was in effect and substantially accorded to the defendant.

In this case it is argued that there is a circumstance which makes it to differ from the cases just cited — that is, that the defendant entered an objection and reserved an exception to the ruling. This is so, and the point will be examined.

On referring to the facts as above stated, taken from the bill of exceptions, it will be seen that the objection made by the defendant was to the recording of the verdict before it was read. The defendant asked that the verdict be read before it was recorded. The Court refused the request, and defendant excepted. The exception was not put, on the ground that the defendant was deprived of the right of polling the jury. It was put simply on the order of procedure, no reference being made to any substantial right claimed by the defendant, of which he might be deprived by the action of the Court. The counsel for the defendant, in our opinion, should have put his objections in a form distinctly challenging the attention of the Court to the fact that the course pursued would take away from defendant the timely right of having the jury polled; and not having done so at that time, he can not now be heard to maintain that this Court should pay any attention to it on this appeal. (Martin v. Travers, 12 Cal. 243; Dreux v. Domec, 18 id. 89; Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 21 id. 576; Leet v. Wilson, 24 id. 402.) We think that the judgment or order should neither be reversed on this point.

The instruction excepted to by defendant (the fourth requested by the prosecution) is a copy of one given in The People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 195, 196, which was held not to be error in that case. (Id. 204.) The opinion in that case disposes of all the points made by defendant's counsel as regards this instruction. With the judgment there announced we are satisfied, and dismiss the point without further remark.

The point that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is not well taken.

In reference to the course of procedure adopted in this case by the Court below in receiving the verdict this Court desires to say that they are surprised at the irregularity which was permitted to occur in the matter referred to when the statutory provisions on the subject are so plain and unambiguous. Frequently criminal cases come to this Court on appeal, for the reason that the Court below has neglected to observe the plain provisions of the Penal Code in regard to procedure.

Thus much valuable time is lost by this Court in considering appeals which would never come here if the Judge of the Court below, in directing the trial, would open the Code, place it before him, and observe its requirements; and we suggest to the Superior Courts, in trying all cases, whether civil or criminal, to place before them the statute book, look carefully to its provisions in regard to procedure, and observe them strictly. We know that many Judges do pursue this course, but it is evident to us that some do not. This Court has frequently admonished the trial Courts in regard to these matters. (See People v. Perdue, 49 Cal. 427; Remarks of Court in People v. Ah Gow, 53 id. 628, citing 2 Bish. Cr. Pr., § 831.) And in our opinion it would be well that such admonitions were heeded.

PEOPLE v. THOMAS DYE.

MISCONDUCT OF JURY — CONFLICTING AFFIDAVITS.—Where affidavits as to the misconduct of the jury are conflicting, the ruling of the Court below will not be disturbed.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — APPEAL.—Upon an appeal from a judgment of conviction, the bill of exceptions stated merely that each party "introduced evidence to sustain the issue on their respective parts."

Held: This was enough without any further setting out of the testimony. If the defendant desired to have a more particular statement of the testimony, he was at liberty to have had it done by setting it forth in the bill. With this statement and none other, the objection that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is untenable.

Id.—Id.—CASES DISTINGUISHED.—People v. Fisher, 51 Cal. 219; People v. English, 52 id. 211, distinguished.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Lake. HUDSON, J.

S. M. White, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Respondent.

The Court:

The affidavits and counter-affidavits of the jurors were contradictory. The counter-affidavits denied the statements in the affidavits of the moving party, and showed that the jurors, on a full and fair deliberation, arrived at a verdict. This was the conclusion of the Court below, and we ought not, under the circumstances, to disturb that ruling. That Court held that there was no misconduct of the jury, and we are of the same opinion. We do not intend to admit by what is said above that the affidavits referred to were admissible to impeach the verdict.

The bill of exceptions shows that evidence was before the jury on the issues on which it had to pass. It is stated in the bill that each party "introduced evidence to sustain the issue on their respective parts" — which signifies, in our judgment, that each party offered evidence in order to, or for the purpose of, sustaining the issues on his part. This was enough without any further setting forth of the testimony. The evidence on the material issues was before the jury, as appears from the statement referred to, and on such evidence a verdict of guilty was reached. We see nothing erroneous in this. If the defendant desired to have a more particular insertion of the testimony, he was at liberty to have it done by setting it forth in the bill. The general statement made in the bill was insufficient to show that there was no evidence before the jury on which to base a verdict. That it was so is an entire misconception on the part of defendant's counsel. With this statement and none other in the bill of exceptions in regard to the evidence introduced, we can not see that the objection that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is at all tenable.

What is said above, in our view, is in entire accord with what is held in People v. Fisher, 31 Cal. 319, and People v. English, 52 id. 211.

Judgment and order affirmed.

EX PARTE FREDERICK BERNERT.

LICENSES — MUNICIPALITY — REPEAL OF STATUTE.—Assuming, without deciding, that the Act of March 29, 1878 (Stats. 1877-8, p. 442), relates to municipal as well as State licenses, it simply enumerates certain businesses and occupations, and declares what shall be paid for licenses by each of those specified. It does not operate a repeal of the Act of March 30, 1872 (Stats. 1871-2, p. 737), which authorizes the Board of Supervisors to fix the sum to be paid by different trades, occupations, and businesses or employments carried on or conducted within the limits of the municipality, except to the extent of the particular businesses, etc., specified in the act. Neither does the act expressly or impliedly repeal the first section of the Act of 1872, which limits the punishment of those found guilty of refusing to take out a license as required by any lawful order of the Board of Supervisors.

ID.—ORDINANCE — MISDEMEANOR — PENALTY — JURISDICTION.—The petitioner was convicted in the Police Court of San Francisco, and adjudged to pay a fine of $20, and in default of payment to be imprisoned in the county jail for the period of ten days, for the offense of violating an ordinance entitled "Order No. 1589," portions of which are as follows: "Sec. 1. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of the above order shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both." "Sec. 10, subd. 43. Each proprietor of a billiard-table and pool-table, not kept exclusively for family use, shall pay a license of six dollars a quarter, and for a bowling-alley six dollars a quarter, and for each additional alley five dollars a quarter." By the first section of the Act of March 30, 1872 — under which the authority to enact the ordinance in question was derived — it is provided that any person carrying on any business within the limits of a city which is or shall be required to be licensed, without having first obtained the license therefor, as required by the laws of the State, "or by the lawful orders of the Board of Supervisors of such city and county," shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, "shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days in case the fine is not paid.

Held: By the ordinance and act referred to it is, in effect, provided that the Police Court shall have power to fine only in the sum of one hundred dollars, or a greater sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and that the imprisonment shall be inflicted only in case the fine of one hundred dollars or more is not satisfied by payment. In rendering the judgment, therefore, the Police Court transcended its jurisdiction.

Id.— Id.— Id.— POOL-TABLE— GAMING.— The letting to hire of a pool-table does not necessarily involve gaming for money or value.

Id.— Id.— Id.— Id.— The ordinance only requires those who make a "business calling, or employment" of keeping a pool-table to pay a license, and it is therefore not open to the objection that it imposes a license upon the proprietor of a pool-table not kept for hire.

Id.— Id.— Id.— Id.— APPEAL.— Upon an appeal from a void judgment of the Police Court this Court might remand the case, with directions that defendant be sentenced; but in a proceeding by habeas corpus it can not command the entry of a judgment in the lower Court, and therefore ought not to permit the petitioner to remain in jail upon the conjecture that the Court which pronounced the judgment may become convinced of its invalidity, and then proceed to enter a different judgment.

APPLICATION for release on writ of habeas corpus.

H. G. Sieberst, for Petitioner.

The statute of 1878 embraces the provisions of the statute of 1872, and fixes licenses, and operates as a repeal of all antecedent enactments. (Commonwealth v. Kelliher, 12 Allen, 480; Bartlett v. King, 12 Mass. 537; Commonwealth v. Cooley, 10 Pick. 39; Nichols v. Squire, 5 Id. 168; Davies v. Fairbairn, 3 How. (U. S.) 636.)

D. L. Smoot, District Attorney, and W. O. Graves, contra.

McKINSTRY, J.:

The petitioner was convicted in the Police Court of San Francisco (and adjudged to pay a fine of $20, and, in default of payment thereof, to be imprisoned in the county jail for the period of ten days) of the offense of violating an ordinance entitled "Order No. 1589," portions of which are as follows:

"Section 1. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this order shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both."

"Section 10, subdivision 43. Each proprietor of a billiard-table and pool-table, not kept exclusively for family use, shall pay a license of six dollars a quarter, and for a bowling-alley six dollars a quarter, and for each additional alley, five dollars per quarter."

The authority of the Board of Supervisors to enact the ordinance is derived, as is claimed, from the third section of the Act of March 30, 1872 (Stats. 1871-2, p. 737), wherein it is provided that the Board shall have power, by ordinance, "to license and regulate all such callings, trades, and employments as the public good may require to be licensed and regulated, and as are not prohibited by law."

The first section of the same act provides that if any person shall be engaged in carrying on, pursuing, etc., within the limits of the city and county, any business, etc., which is or shall be required to be licensed, without having first obtained the license therefor, as required by the laws of this State, "or by the lawful orders of the Board of Supervisors of said city and county," he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days in case the fine is not paid."

The first question to be considered is whether Order 1589, which provides that any person who shall violate any of the provisions of the order "shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment of not more than six months, or by both," authorized the sentence which was imposed upon the petitioner. The third section of the Act of March 30, 1872, empowered the municipal government to establish a reasonable penalty for a violation of any license ordinance it might pass, with the condition and limitation (found in Section 1 of the same act) that the penalty should in no case be a fine of less than one hundred dollars, with an imprisonment of not exceeding thirty days in case the fine should not be paid. The first section of Order 1589, therefore, if it be read in the light of the Act of 1872, did not authorize a fine of twenty dollars, or any imprisonment as an alternative. If, however, the order could be read as authorizing a fine of less than $100, the order to that extent would be invalid, since by reason of the first section of the law of 1872, the Supervisors had no power to provide as a punishment a fine of less than $100. But this would not affect the rest of the ordinance.

Counsel for petitioner claims that the Act of 1872 has been repealed by the Act of March 23, 1878 (Stats. 1877-8, p. 442). Assuming, without deciding, that the act of 1878 relates to municipal as well as State licenses, it simply enumerates certain businesses and occupations, and declares what shall be paid for license by each of those specified. It does not operate a repeal of the provisions of the Act of 1872, which authorizes the Board of Supervisors to fix the sum to be paid by different trades, occupations, businesses, or employments carried on or conducted within the limits of the municipality, except to the extent of the particular businesses, trades, professions, occupations, or employments "specified" in the act. Neither does the Act of 1878 expressly or impliedly repeal the first section of the Act of 1872, which limits the punishment of those found guilty of refusing to take out a license as required by any lawful order of the Board of Supervisors.

The power of the Police Court of San Francisco to sentence one guilty of a violation of the ordinance comes from the first section of the Act of 1872, which provides that the party convicted shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days in case the fine is not paid, and from the ordinance—1589—which fixes the maximum of fine at $1,000. The language employed is, in effect, a declaration that the Police Court shall have power to fine only in the sum of one hundred dollars, or a greater sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and that the imprisonment shall be inflicted only in case the fine of one hundred dollars or more is not satisfied by payment. It is prohibitive of a sentence to pay less than one hundred dollars. If the judgment as to the fine be invalid, so is the judgment as to the imprisonment—since the latter is only alternative.

It is urged that petitioner can not be heard to object to a judgment which imposes a less penalty than that prescribed by law, and—if the action of the court was merely erroneous—it is undoubtedly correct to say that we ought not to listen to his complaint. Although when error is shown injury will be presumed, this court will not, on appeal, reverse a judgment for error, unless the defendant appealing has been prejudiced. (People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 171.)

Of the cases cited by the District Attorney to the point that a defendant can not have a judgment reversed which is more favorable to himself than is authorized, it may be remarked that nearly all of them were appeals. There can be no doubt of the correctness of the proposition wherever the lower Court had jurisdiction to render the judgment appealed from. In Ooton v. The State, 5 Ala. 464, the question of the jurisdiction of the lower Court was not considered by the Supreme Court, nor called to its attention. In Barada v. The State, 13 Mo. 94, there was an intimation that the Court below had jurisdiction, in a proper case, to enter the judgment appealed from. In Logan's Case, 5 Gratt. 692, a prisoner had been adjudged to be confined in the penitentiary for two years. The law authorized an imprisonment of not less than five years. On suggestion of error on the face of the record, the Court which had tried the prisoner adjudged him to be confined three years in addition to the two years. A writ of error was refused by the Supreme Court of Virginia.

It is said by Hurd, in his work on Habeas Corpus, p. 334: "Where a prisoner was sentenced to the penitentiary, on conviction for horse-stealing, for one year, the law requiring a sentence for such offense for a period not less than three years, the error was held to be no ground for discharge on habeas corpus." The case referred to by Mr. Hurd — Ex parte Shaw, 7 Ohio St. 81 — would seem fully to support his statement. But an examination of the case will show the decision to have turned upon the assumption that the judgment was not void, because the Court had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, and over the offense and its punishment—a test which has been held not infallible by the Supreme Court of the United States.

With respect to the case now before us, it is indeed true that the Police Court had jurisdiction over the person of the petitioner and of the offense for which he was tried. "It by no means follows that these two facts make valid, however erroneous it may be, any judgment the Court may render in such case. If a Justice of the Peace, having jurisdiction to fine a defendant for a misdemeanor, should render a judgment that he be hung, it would simply be void. Why void? Because he had no power to render such a judgment. So, if a Court of general jurisdiction should, on an indictment for libel, render a judgment of death or confiscation of property, it would, for the same reason, be void. Or if on an indictment for treason the Court should render a judgment of attain, whereby the heirs of the criminal could not inherit his property, which should by the judgment of the Court be confiscated to the State, it would be void as to the attainder, because in excess of the authority of the Court, and forbidden by the Constitution." (Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 176.)

In Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. 339, it was held that a decree under confiscation acts, which in terms ordered all the estate of the defendant (a fee simple) to be sold, was not simply erroneous, but void. The Supreme Court of the United States said: "Doubtless, a decree of a Court having jurisdiction to make the decree can not be impeached collaterally, but under the Act of Congress the District Court had no power to order a sale which should confer upon the purchaser rights outlasting the life of French Forrest."

In the case of the present petitioner, the Police Court had no power to impose a fine of less than one hundred dollars, or any imprisonment except as an alternative or substitute for a fine of one hundred dollars or more. In rendering the judgment, it transcended its jurisdiction. The petitioner can not be deprived of his liberty by means of a void judgment.

It might be admitted that where the law authorizes either one of two distinct kinds of punishment, and a judgment imposes both, the defendant may, by satisfying one of the punishments, relieve himself of the other; and that he will be protected by the constitutional principle, "no man shall be twice punished for the same offense," from any subsequent attempt of the same Court to render the judgment which would originally have been the proper judgment. (Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 176.) But it would not necessarily follow, from this admission, that if an inferior Court should enter a judgment of imprisonment for a longer term, or fine in a larger sum, than it had power or jurisdiction to impose the judgment, as against the objection of defendant, would be valid pro tanto. In Michigan, a Justice of the Peace entered a judgment: "The defendant is fined eight dollars, to pay costs, etc., * * and to stand committed until paid." The Supreme Court, after referring to the statute, said: "The Justice can fine or imprison, or can in his discretion do both, within the limits fixed by the statute; but he can not imprison for an indefinite period of time. The period must be determined and fixed by him judicially, and that, under the statute, can not exceed a period of three months." True, that was an appeal, but the judgment was held to be erroneous, because the Justice had no power to pronounce it. It was, therefore, void. The case was so understood by Mr. Hurd. (See Hurd on Habeas Corpus, 334.)

Gurney v. Tufts, 37 Me. 130, was presented to the Supreme Court of Maine on a return to a writ de homine replegiando. The statute authorized a magistrate to sentence the owner, etc., of liquors, "to stand committed for thirty days in default of payment" (of a fine). A municipal judge had sentenced a defendant to pay a fine of twenty dollars, and that the keeper of the jail keep him, etc., "until he perform said sentence or be otherwise discharged in due course of law." The Supreme Court said: "The magistrate had clearly no authority * * * to impose any such sentence, or to commit for a failure to comply therewith." And the petitioner (the subject of the sentence) was discharged. It is hardly necessary to add that if the judgment is one which the court has no power to pronounce, the constable or other executive officer of the Court can not use it as an ægis for his protection. Robinson v. Spenceley was an action of trespass against a magistrate, which was only maintainable in case his judgment was void. (3 Barn. & Cress. 658.) It was said by Abbott, C. J.: "I am of opinion that the warrant in this case was illegal, not being such as the Justice had authority to make. It was his duty to have pursued the words of the statute. If he had so done, it would have given the party committed the option either of paying the money, or of staying three months in prison and being thereby altogether discharged from the payment. This warrant is for his imprisonment until he shall pay the money, etc. People v. Riley, 48 Cal. 549, was an appeal. The offense for which the defendant was tried was punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. The Court below adjudged the defendant to suffer imprisonment for a term of ten years. This Court reversed the judgment and remanded the cause, with directions to the lower Court "to proceed to judgment." In none of these cases was it suggested that the sentence was good for the statutory term. Nor, if an inferior Court has exceeded the fine it is authorized to impose by law, would it seem that the judgment is valid to the extent of the fine authorized. To justify under a judgment, it must appear that the Court had power to render the judgment when it was rendered. Its validity cannot depend upon the happening of a subsequent event, as that the defendant shall subject himself to part of a single punishment.

But it is not necessary here to decide whether a fine in a greater sum than that authorized by statute or ordinance would render a judgment absolutely void. The judgment of the Police Court in the case before us is certainly void, because it is not one which includes any judgment which that Court has jurisdiction to render in such a case.

It has been suggested that the letting to hire of a pool-table is the carrying on of a species of gambling or immoral pursuit; while the statute only permits the Board to license callings, etc.—"not prohibited by law." We do not take judicial notice that "pool" necessarily involves gaming for money or value; indeed, are able to discover no reason why it should. Even if the expression "not prohibited by law" means more than statutory law, we know that no statute prohibits a game not played for value, and are equally certain that such game violates no common-law prohibition.

It has been suggested, further, that the Board of Supervisors — authorized to license "callings, trades and employment" only — had no power to impose a license tax upon the proprietor of a pool-table simply because he did not keep it exclusively for "family use," but permitted persons visiting his saloon to use it without cost; that the ordinance is invalid because it does not require, as a condition to a license, that the table shall be kept as a calling or employment; that it was let to hire or made a means of profit. But that the ordinance only requires those who make a "business, calling, or employment" of keeping a pool-table to pay a license, is sufficiently apparent from its language. As much would seem to be implied from the very exception "not kept exclusively for family use." The second section of Order 1589, however, makes the meaning manifest. It provides: "It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in or carry on any business, trade, profession, or calling * * * without first taking out or procuring the license," etc. The tenth section contains a schedule of the rates of license to be paid by persons carrying on certain businesses, trades, professions, or callings — among whom are the proprietors of pool-tables not kept for family use, the keepers of "common ball-rooms," "shooting-galleries," etc. In several instances no reference is made to the circumstance that the "business" specified must be conducted for profit. But from the nature of the subject, the purpose — to secure revenue from trades, etc. — for which the ordinance was adopted, from the very definition of the word "license," as well as from the language of the second section in connection with the enumeration of callings, etc., in the tenth, it is apparent that the prohibition (except license is paid) relates to and includes only the businesses, trades, professions, or callings carried on for profit. Indeed, that not conducted with a view to its profit, real or expected, would hardly be a business, trade, profession, or calling.

To conclude: while we hold the ordinance to be valid, we decide the judgment of the Police Court void.

It may perhaps be suggested that petitioner should have been remanded to the custody of the Sheriff, to be by him held under the warrant of arrest issued upon the complaint. The record shows no warrant or service, nor, if there was any warrant, that it was served by the Sheriff. The warrant, if any, may have been served by an officer of the municipal police, and petitioner may have been in his hands until delivered to the Sheriff after judgment. But if it appeared that he was originally arrested by a Sheriff's officer, this circumstance ought not to be determinative of the question. The Sheriff now has the body of petitioner as jailer, not in his capacity as arresting officer. This is not a case in which a party is held under illegal restraint, and another person, or the same in a distinct capacity, is legally entitled to his custody. Here the warrant (if any was issued) has discharged its function. Its office was to give to the Court, by its officer unless bail was given, the control of the defendant arrested, that he might be tried and be present for judgment and execution. When a judgment was pronounced, the Court took the defendant from the sureties, or Sheriff, as the case might be, and placed him in jail. As the sureties on the bail bond would be discharged when a judgment was rendered — although not such a judgment as would authorize the jailer to keep the defendant in prison — because the law does not intend that the liability of the sureties shall depend upon the validity or invalidity of the judgment; so the arresting officer, as arresting officer, is fully protected by a judgment of the Court of which he is the minister — whether the Court regularly pursues its jurisdiction in rendering the judgment or not — from the time that he surrenders the person of his prisoner in accordance with the terms of the judgment.

If this were an appeal from the judgment of the Police Court, and this Court had jurisdiction of the appeal, we might remand the cause, with direction that defendant be sentenced — the judgment appealed from being void. (People v. Riley, supra.) We may suggest that judgment may be pronounced upon petitioner (who has been tried and convicted by a Court of competent jurisdiction but never sentenced), unless, by reason of lapse of time, it would be error now to sentence him. (P. C., § 1449.) But, as we can not command such action, we ought not to permit the petitioner to remain in jail upon the conjecture that the Court which pronounced the judgment (believing that it had power to pronounce it) may become convinced of its invalidity — perhaps after the expiration of the period of illegal imprisonment — and then proceed to fine or imprison him a second time for the same offense.

We are strengthened in our conviction by the circumstance that never, so far as the reported cases are known to us, has it been held, where the return has shown the petitioner to be confined under a void judgment of a Court which had jurisdiction to try him, that he was or could be legally restrained of his liberty under the warrant issued at the commencement of the proceedings against him.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

EX PARTE JAMES L. CRITTENDEN.

CONTEMPT — FINE — IMPRISONMENT.— Upon a judgment imposing a fine for contempt, it is competent for the Court to direct that the party stand committed until the fine be paid.

APPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus.

M. T. Moses, for Plaintiff.

D. L. Smoot, for Defendant.

THE COURT:

The petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt by the Superior Court of San Francisco County, and was ordered to pay a fine of $100, and to stand committed to the county jail for a period of one day for every two dollars of the unpaid portion of the fine. The order of the Court sets forth the facts constituting the contempt, and we are of the opinion that the facts show a case of contempt under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

But it is claimed that it was not competent for the Court to imprison the petitioner under an order or judgment simply imposing a fine. In the case of New Orleans v. Steamship Company, 20 Wall. 392, the Supreme Court of the United States says: "Contempt of Court is a specific criminal offense. The imposition of the fine was a judgment in a criminal case. That part of the decree is as distinct from the residue as if it were a judgment upon an indictment for perjury committed in a deposition read at the hearing. * *. In Crosby's Case, 3 Wils. 188, Mr. Justice Blackstone said: 'The sole adjudication for contempt, and the punishment thereof, belongs exclusively and without interfering to each respective Court.'"

The question of contempt of Court, and the punishment thereof, has recently undergone a thorough examination in the case of Fischer v. Hayes, 7 Fed. Rep. 96. In that case Blatchford, J., says: "It is suggested that Section 725 provides for the punishment of a contempt by a fine or imprisonment, and that, therefore, a commitment for non-payment of the fine is unlawful, because such commitment is 'imprisonment.' There is, however, no commitment or imprisonment if the fine be paid. There is no commitment and fine. The punishment by a fine is fully inflicted, under the terms of the order, if the fine be paid as the order directs, and in such case there can be no commitment. So, if there be a commitment for non-payment of the fine, there must be a discharge as soon as the fine is paid. The payment of the fine is the punishment. The awarding or infliction of the fine is no punishment. The commitment is an incident of the fine. It is not, in any manner, the 'imprisonment' allowed by the statute. The payment of the fine, and a commitment for not paying it, can not co-exist. The commitment is not a separate punishment or imprisonment added to the payment of a fine. It is in view that it has always been held that where a statute authorizes or prescribes the infliction of a fine as a punishment, either for a contempt of Court or for a defined offense, it is lawful for the Court inflicting the fine to direct that the party stand committed until the fine be paid, although there be no specific affirmative grant of power in the statute to make such direction.

The learned Judge then proceeds to cite numerous cases in support of his view of the law.

We are of opinion that it was competent for the Superior Court to make the order complained of in this case, and therefore the writ is dismissed and the petitioner remanded.

EDWARD ROYON ET AL. v. NICHOLAS GUILLÉE ET AL.

Cross-complaint — FINDINGS.— In an action by plaintiffs for money lent defendants jointly, the defendants, by way of cross-complaint, alleged that one of the plaintiffs obtained by undue influence from one of the defendants an instrument in writing, for the payment of certain moneys, which the defendants asked to have adjudged void; but it did not appear from the complaint that the plaintiffs sought to recover upon the instrument referred to in the cross-complaint, nor was there anything in the record to show that the instrument was introduced in evidence.

Held: It does not appear that the allegations of the cross-complaint with respect to said instrument were at all relevant to the case, and therefore no answer was required, and there being no issue upon it, no findings were necessary.

APPEAL from a judgment for plaintiffs in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. WHEELER, J.

Sidney V. Smith, for Appellants.

R. M. Swain, for Respondent.

The Court:

This action was brought to recover money alleged to have been lent by the plaintiffs jointly to the defendants jointly. The defendants denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and by way of cross-complaint alleged that one of the defendants lent to one of the plaintiffs sums of money; and that one of the plaintiffs obtained by undue influence from one of the defendants an instrument in writing for the payment of certain moneys, which the defendants asked to have adjudged void, and to have plaintiffs enjoined from seeking to enforce it. The findings are full upon all the issues raised by the complaint and answer, but there are no finding as to the allegations of the cross-complaint, which was not answered by the plaintiffs.

The only question is, whether the allegations of the cross-complaint are sufficient to entitle defendants to any relief in this action. The transaction to which it refers is alleged to have been between one of the plaintiffs and one of the defendants only; and it does not appear from the complaint that the plaintiffs sought to recover, upon the instrument referred to in the cross-complaint. We have nothing but the judgment roll before us, and there is nothing to show that said instrument was introduced in evidence. It is therefore impossible for us to see that the allegations of the cross-complaint, with respect to said instrument, were at all relevant to the case, and therefore no answer to them was required; and there being no issue upon it, no findings were necessary.

Judgment affirmed.

EX PARTE STEFANO CASINELLO.

ORDINANCE OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION — POLICE POWER — NUISANCE.—The petitioner was convicted of a violation of Section 47 of an order of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, passed July 18, 1880, which reads as follows: "No person shall throw into or deposit upon any public street, highway, or grounds, or upon any private premises, or anywhere except in such place as may be designated for that purpose by the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways, any glass, broken ware, dirt, rubbish, garbage, or filth." The complaint charged that the petitioner "did willfully and unlawfully throw into and deposit upon certain lands at Channel and Fifth Streets, in said city and county, a large quantity of broken ware, dirt, rubbish, garbage, and filth; the said place where the same was thrown and deposited not being a place designated for that purpose by the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways."

Held: The authority to pass the order now under consideration was vested in the Board of Supervisors by the Act of April 25, 1863; but, if there were any room for doubt, the power is clearly conferred by Section 11, Article XI, Constitution; and,

Held, further, that the complaint was sufficient.

APPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus.

A. D. Spivaco and M. Mullany, for Plaintiff.

D. L. Smoot, for Defendant.

MORRISON, C. J.:

On the eighteenth of July, 1880, the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco passed the following order:

"Section 47. No person shall throw into or deposit upon any public street, highway, or grounds, or upon any private premises, or anywhere except in such a place as may be designated for that purpose by the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways, any glass, broken ware, dirt, rubbish, garbage, or filth." And the penalty prescribed for a violation of the order was a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both such fine and imprisonment.

In pursuance of the above order, the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways designated the line of Sixth street, south of Channel, as a "dumping place," or place of deposit.

On the second day of February, 1881, a complaint was filed in the Police Judge's Court of said city and county, charging that the petitioner "did willfully and unlawfully throw into and deposit upon certain lands at Channel and Fifth Streets, in said city and county, a large quantity of broken ware, dirt, rubbish, garbage, and filth; the said place where the same was thrown and deposited not being a place designated for that purpose by the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways of said city and county." On this complaint there was a trial and conviction.

It is claimed, in the first place, that the foregoing complaint is insufficient, and that it charges no offense. To my mind, it is very clear, however, that the complaint charges the petitioner with a violation of the order of the Board of Supervisors referred to above; and the only remaining inquiry relates to the validity of that order. Numerous objections are made to it, such as that it is oppressive, unjust, unreasonable, and also that it is unconstitutional.

The provisions of the Constitution, which, it is claimed, are violated by the order, are Sections 1 and 21 of Article i. But I am unable to discover any application which the constitutional provisions referred to have to the order in question.

The objections that the order is oppressive, unjust, and unreasonable are, in my opinion, not well taken. That dirt, rubbish, garbage, and filth are in their nature nuisances, is too plain to admit of controversy; and that glass and broken ware can be very easily converted into nuisances if thrown about promiscuously, is equally plain.

By the Act approved April 25, 1863, power is conferred upon the Board of Supervisors "to authorize and direct the summary abatement of nuisances; to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health and the prevention of contagious diseases; to provide by regulation for the prevention and summary removal of all nuisances and obstructions in the streets, alleys, highways, and public grounds of said city and county," etc.

But the delegation of police power to the Board of Supervisors by the Constitution also is in very large and general terms. Section 11 of Article xi. is as follows: "Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." No reference has been made to any general law on the subject, and I am not aware of the existence of any statute which attempts to regulate the matter now under consideration, except the Act of 1863.

Speaking of the police power, in the case of Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 85, Shaw, J., says: "The power we allude to is rather the police power—the power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same. It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power than to mark its boundaries or prescribe limits to its exercise."

And Redfield, C. J., delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Vermont, in the case of Thorpe v. The Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company, 27 Vt. 149, says: "The police power of the State extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State."

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 62, uses the following language: "The power here exercised by the Legislature of Louisiana is, in its essential nature, one which has been, up to the present period in the constitutional history of this country, conceded to belong to the States, however it may now be questioned in some of its details. * * * The power is, and must be from its very nature, incapable of any very exact definition or limitation. Upon it depends the security of social order, the life and health of the citizens, the comfort of an existence in a thickly populated community, the enjoyment of private and social life, and the beneficial use of property." The learned Judge was here speaking of the Act of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, passed March 8, 1869, concerning and regulating slaughter-houses.

I will content myself with a reference to one additional authority on this subject, and that is the case of Ex parte Shrader, on habeas corpus, reported in 33 Cal. 279. In that case the petitioner was convicted, in the Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco, of keeping and maintaining a slaughter-house within certain limits, in violation of an order of the Board of Supervisors. The order was framed in pursuance of the Act of 1863, already referred to. The Court there say: "By its first section the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco is authorized, among other things, 'to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health and the prevention of contagious diseases.'

* * * It is apparent that the Legislature could confer power upon the Board to pass the order if it could have enacted it directly in the form of a statute in the first instance. The real question to be determined, then, is, whether the power of the Legislature to legislate concerning the public health is so narrowed by constitutional restraints, that it can not regulate the business of slaughtering cattle in populous towns by limiting its prosecution to particular localities or quarters therein. We must hold in favor of the power, unless its unconstitutionality is clear. (Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 162.)" The order was sustained by the Court, and the prisoner was remanded.

It is very clear to me that the authority to pass the order now under consideration was vested in the Board of Supervisors by the Act of April 25, 1863; but if there were any room for doubt, the clause in the Constitution (Section 11 of Article xi.) is too plain to admit of more than one construction: "Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Here we have the authority clearly and expressly conferred by the organic law of the State, and that it is wisely conferred will admit of no doubt.

The regulation in this case, instead of being arbitrary, unreasonable, or unjust, was a wise and salutary one, calculated to promote the welfare and best interests of the city, and was, in its nature and purpose, a salutary police regulation, designed to protect the safety and health of the inhabitants of the City of San Francisco.

The writ is dismissed and the petitioner remanded.

MAYHEM — DEFINITION.— The biting off the ear of a human being is mayhem.

APPEAL from an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to an indictment in the Superior Court of the County of Colusa.
HATCH, J.

A. L. Hart, Attorney General, for Appellant.

Jackson Hatch, for Respondent.

The COURT:

The indictment charges that the defendant committed the crime of mayhem, by biting off with his teeth a portion of the left ear of one M., and thereby disabled and disfigured said ear.

The Penal Code, § 203, makes the disabling or disfiguring of a member of the body of a human being mayhem. It is alleged in this indictment that the said M. is a human being, and that his left ear is a member of his body. We think that the allegations of the indictment are sufficient to constitute the crime of mayhem, and that the demurrer was improperly sustained.

Order reversed, with direction to the Superior Court of Colusa County to overrule said demurrer.

GEORGE D. BLISS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS — APPEAL — INJUNCTION.— Application for writ of prohibition to forbid the Superior Court from proceeding further in an action, until the determination of an appeal from an order in the action refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction.

Held: It is only of orders or judgments which command or permit some act to be done that a stay of proceedings can be had. The order appealed from in this case is not of that character, hence the stay of proceedings has not the legal effect of suspending the jurisdiction of the Court over so much of the action as is not affected by the order.

APPLICATION for writ of certiorari.

M. Lynch, for Plaintiff.

Burt & Pfister, for Defendant.

McKEE, J.:

This is an application for a writ of prohibition to forbid the Superior Court of Santa Clara County from proceeding further in an action against the petitioner and another defendant, until the determination by this Court of an appeal from an order made by the Court below refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction issued in the action.

The action was brought to have the defendants to it interplead with each other, as to their respective rights to a sum of money, which the plaintiffs in the action admitted that they owed to one or other of them. For the purpose of having the rights of the defendants to the money adjudged by the Court, they brought the money into Court, and had a temporary injunction issued to restrain the defendants from commencing or prosecuting any suit against them on account of the money. The action was tried and the plaintiffs had judgment, but, on appeal, this Court, at the September session, 1880, reversed the judgment. (See Pfister v. Wade, 56 Cal. 43.) When the remittitur was filed in the lower Court, the petitioner, as one of the defendants, moved to dissolve the injunction, which was denied, and he appealed from the order to this Court, where the appeal is now pending.

In contemplation of law, the injunction does not injure the petitioner, because his rights to the money in controversy between him and his co-defendant in the action are secured by the injunction bond. (Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130.) Yet it is contended on his behalf, that, as he obtained a stay of proceedings by giving an appeal bond of $1,000, on his appeal from the order refusing to dissolve the injunction, the stay, by operation of law, suspends all proceedings in the lower Court until the determination of the appeal, and that the Court below is exceeding its jurisdiction in attempting to try the case. But it is only of orders or judgments which command or permit some act to be done that a stay of proceedings can be had. (Hicks v. Michael, 15 id. 109; Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, supra.) The order from which the appeal has been taken is not of that character. Hence, the stay of proceedings has not the legal effect of suspending the jurisdiction of the Court over so much of the action as is not affected by the order. A Court has power to proceed upon any matter in an action not affected by the order appealed from. (C. C. P., § 496.)

Although the Court has in this instance denied a motion to dissolve the temporary injunction issued in the action before it, it may, on a final hearing of the case, decide that the plaintiffs were not entitled to it. But if it should ultimately decide otherwise and make the injunction perpetual, the petitioner, as defendant, will be entitled to his motion for a new trial, or to an appeal; so he can not be injured. We can not suppose that the Court below in its proceedings will disregard the opinion of this Court already rendered in the case. At all events, in the proceedings taken by the Court below, in allowing the plaintiffs to file an amended complaint, and requiring the defendants to answer it, we see no excess of jurisdiction.

Writ denied.

SWAMP LAND DISTRICT — PUBLIC CORPORATION — INJUNCTION.— A swamp land district, organized by the Board of Supervisors under the Act of March 25, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 316), is a public corporation, and the validity of its corporate existence can not be collaterally attacked or questioned.

1a.— ASSESSMENT.— The fact that a large quantity of the land lying within the district and subject to taxation or assessment has been voluntarily omitted from the assessment-list by the commissioners — though perhaps a good ground for enjoining the collection of the assessment — is not sufficient to enjoin the reconstruction or repair of the levee; non constat but there is a sufficient fund already collected to defray the expenses of such reconstruction and repair.

Id.—The fact that the levee was originally constructed without the previous adoption of a plan for the protection of the district, as provided for in Section 10 of the Act, constitutes no good reason why the levee, after having been constructed, should not be repaired in places where broken or washed away.

Id.—An allegation in the complaint, that the effect of repairing the levee "will be to dam up the waters and increase the same in volume, until said levee will break and permit said waters to flow down to and upon plaintiff's land and destroy the fences and trees thereon," is in the very nature of things a simple expression of opinion on the part of the plaintiff, and can not be accepted as the statement of a positive existing fact. The mere opinion of the plaintiff that the scheme is impracticable affords no reason in law for arresting the work by injunction.

APPEAL from a judgment for defendants in the Tenth District Court in and for the County of Sutter. KETSER, J.

J. L. Wilbur, Creed Haymond, and A. L. Hart, for Appellants.

S. J. Stabler and J. S. Belcher, for Respondents.

MORRISON, C. J.:

Plaintiff filed his complaint in the late District Court of Sutter County, against defendants, who then constituted the Board of Supervisors of that county, and prayed "that the defendants be forever restrained and enjoined from reconstructing or repairing said levees, or any of them, or from in any manner damming up or obstructing the natural flow of waters into and through the said Butte Creek Slough, and from damming up or obstructing in any manner the natural channels through which the waters that flow into and upon said district and are drained therefrom." We have given the prayer of the complaint, because it illustrates the object and purpose of the suit. The complaint is very long and comprehensive, containing as it does something of a history of Levee District No. 5, in and for the county of Sutter. The first allegation in the complaint which we will consider is, that the district was not legally established, for the reason that the petition to the Board of Supervisors was not signed by more than one half of the land-owners within the district, as was required by Section 21 of the Act of March 25, 1868. (See Laws of 1867-8, p. 316.) It was held in Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406, that the district organized by the Board of Supervisors under the foregoing statute became a public corporation, and that the validity of its corporate existence can not be collaterally attacked or questioned. The complaint also contains an averment that a large quantity of the land lying within the district and subject to taxation or assessment has been voluntarily omitted from the assessment list filed by the Commissioners in the office of the County Clerk of Sutter County. If this were a proceeding to enjoin the collection of the tax, we are not prepared to say that the omission complained of would not constitute good ground for enjoining the collection of the assessment. (See Levee District No. 1 v. Huber, 57 Cal. 41.) But, as has already been shown, this is not a proceeding to enjoin the collection of the tax, but is simply intended to stop the reconstruction or repair of the levee; non constat but there is a sufficient fund already collected to defray the expenses of such reconstruction and repair.

The allegation that the levee was originally constructed without the previous adoption of a plan for the protection of the district, as provided for in Section 10 of the Act, constitutes no good reason why the levee, after having been constructed, should not be repaired in places where broken or washed away. But we are not to be understood as saying that the adoption of a plan was at any time essential; for Section 3 of the Act provides that "the County Surveyor of the County of Sutter shall be ex officio engineer of all such levee districts in the county, and shall make such surveys, levels, and estimates, superintend all works, and shall give general direction for all their construction, subject to the control of said Board of Supervisors."

The only remaining point in this case which we deem it necessary to notice is, that the effect of repairing the levee, as is claimed by plaintiff, "will be to dam up the waters and increase the same in volume, until said levee will break and permit said waters to flow down to and upon plaintiff's land and wash away and destroy the fences and trees thereon." This averment is, and can be, in the very nature of things, a simple expression of opinion on the part of the plaintiff, and can not be accepted as the statement of a positive existing fact. The intention of the statute, in authorizing the formation of the district, was to adopt a plan and scheme for the protection of the lands within the district from the encroachment of the waters; and the mere opinion of the plaintiff that the scheme is impracticable, affords no reason in law for arresting the work by injunction.

PEOPLE EX REL. S. C. HASTINGS v. A. P. JACKSON,
ET AL.

LOCATION OF SCHOOL-LAND WARRANT ON UNSURVEYED LAND — ACTION TO SET ASIDE PATENT — LAW OF THE CASE.— In June, 1853, a school-land warrant issued under the Act of May 3, 1852, was located by the relator's predecessor in interest upon the land in controversy, then unsurveyed. October 1st of the same year the land was surveyed. December 24th of the same year the location was presented to the Register of the United States Land Office of the district wherein the land was located, and was by him accepted and approved. In February, 1857, the defendant located two school-land warrants upon the land, and obtained a patent for it from the State in March, 1863. The land was not listed by the United States until February, 1870. This action was brought to set aside the patent.

Held: It does not appear that anything has transpired since the commencement of the action of Hastings v. Jackson, 46 Cal. 234, to change the relation which then existed between the parties, or to materially affect their rights in the premises. The grounds upon which the plaintiff in that case claimed relief are those upon which the plaintiff in this case claims relief, and the Court in that case passed upon all the questions involved in this, except that he declined to consider whether the State could avoid its conveyance to Jackson. It must be admitted that the patent to Jackson was prematurely issued, and that until after the certification of the land over to the State, the patent could not convey the title. Still, upon a valid location made after survey and before certification, the locator was in a position to demand and compel the issuance of a patent whenever the land so located should be certified over to the State. The State, therefore, can not avoid the patent on the ground that it was prematurely issued. Nor was the validity of the location affected by failure to publish a notice of the locator's application to the Register for a certificate of location. The State certainly was in no way prejudiced by the failure to publish such notice; and no one can take advantage of the omission without showing that he was in some way prejudiced by it.

Id.—Id.—Id.—ACT OF JULY 23, 1866, "TO QUIET LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA."—The Act of Congress above referred to can not be so construed as to affect a valid location made prior to its passage. It would cure the invalidity of the first location if no intervening right had accrued in the mean time; but a valid location was afterwards made before the passage of the Act, which it was clearly not the intention of Congress to interfere with.

APPEAL from a judgment for the defendant in the Seventh District Court in and for the County of Solano.

The validity of the respective titles involved in this case were before the Court in The People ex rel. Hastings v. Jackson et al., 24 Cal. 630; Hastings v. Devlin, 40 id. 358; and Hastings v. Jackson, 46 id. 234. The present case is an action to set aside the patent issued to Jackson, and judgment went for the defendant on a demurrer to the complaint.

Cope & Boyd, for Appellants.

It is the settled doctrine of this Court that title to the lands embraced in the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant of September 4, 1841, does not pass to the State until the particular parcel thereof has been listed to the State by the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States. (Chant v. Reynolds, 49 Cal. 217, and cases cited; 5 U. S. Stats. at Large, 455, § 8; 10 id. 346; Hastings v. Jackson, 46 Cal. 243; Toland v. Mandell, 38 id. 42.)

Having no title to the lands at the time of the making of her patent to Jackson, she could not confer any title thereto upon him.

The patent was the act of officers of the State, acting without authority of law. Those officers were only authorized to issue patents for lands in the cases provided by law. The patent having been issued without authority, it is invalid, and should be set aside. (The People v. John Carrick, 51 Cal. 328; Chant v. Reynolds, 49 id. 218.)

The location made by Thomas was made in strict conformity with the requirements of the Act of 1852, and was made in the year 1858. The location by defendant Jackson was made in the year 1857, nearly four years subsequently. Neither location was sufficient to invest the locator with the title to the lands.

On the twenty-third day of July, 1866, Congress passed an Act entitled "An Act to quiet land titles in California." (14 U. S. Stats. at Large, p. 218.) Thomas was a purchaser in good faith, under the laws of the State, within the meaning of the first section of the Act. He paid value for his land warrant. He paid the Surveyor and County Clerk's fees. (Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 262; Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 id. 69.)

It became the duty of the officers of the State to notify the proper officers of the general government of her selection, and if upon investigation the land should be found subject to selection, the Commissioner of the General Land Office was required to certify it to the State in the usual manner. The notice was given and the land was listed over to the State, February 10, 1870. The effect of this listing was to invest the State with the legal title to these lands in trust for the purchaser from her, whose title was confirmed by the first section of the Act of Congress. Who was the beneficiary under this Act? It is evident that Thomas, if there had been no other selection but his, would have been the beneficiary.

Let us see what effect the selection by Jackson had upon Thomas' rights. The Act of Congress of 1866 operated equally upon all purchasers in good faith from the State, and in the case provided for in Section 1, confirmed the titles thus acquired. It created no distinction between different purchasers of the same lands, and recognized none. (Le Roy v. Cunningham, 44 Cal. 599.) Where the Act of Congress is so operative, the question must be settled by priority of right. And in this case, Thomas' selection being prior in point of time to Jackson's, he had the prior right and thereby became the beneficiary. (Field v. Seabury, 19 How. 332.)

In the Acts subsequent to that of 1852, dealing with the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant, the Legislature of this State declared that nothing in these Acts contained should be construed to invalidate or injure the rights that parties have acquired by purchase and location of any school-land warrant, pursuant to the Act of May 3, 1852. (§ 4, Act of April 30, 1857; Laws, p. 356; § 12, Act of April 25, 1858; Laws, p. 248.)

And in such Acts provision is only made for the sale of the unsold portion of the five hundred thousand acres. (See § 1, Act of April 25, 1858; Laws, 248; § 2, Act of April 27, 1863; Laws, 591; § 51, Act of March 28, 1868; Laws, 507.) Whether the selection and location authorized by the Act of 1852 was binding on the United States is an immaterial question. It is binding on the State and her grantees.

The State acquired the title in trust for her grantee, the beneficiary. (Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 262; People v. Shearer, 30 id. 648.) A court of equity will control the legal title in the hands of the trustees, so as to protect the just rights of others. (Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 248; Salmon v. Symonds, 80 id. 801; O'Connell v. Dougherty, 32 id. 462; Carpentier v. Montgomery, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 496.)

Wheaton & Scriener, for Respondents.

The complaint shows that in fact neither Thomas nor Hastings ever had any equities in the land whatever. The Act of 1852, under which the land warrants were sold, only allowed the warrants to be located on lands "within the State of California, subject to such location." (Hastings v. Devlin, 40 Cal. 363.) The allegations of the complaint in this case are no broader than were the proofs in the case above cited. The trouble with these allegations is that they do not, if true, constitute any selection of the land under any law of the State or United States. The Legislative Act of 1852 did not once refer to the United States Land Office or the United States Register. It did not provide for filing the warrants in the United States Land Office, or anywhere else, or for surrendering the warrants in any form, or for writing the word "surrendered" across the face thereof, or for the issuance of any certificate by the United States Register. All these proceedings were unauthorized by State or national law, and were utterly idle and void proceedings. (Hastings v. Jackson and Devlin, 46 id. 244.)

It is evident that the law of 1852 did not intend to provide for the transfer of any legal or equitable interest in the land. It gave no other relief on the location of its warrant than a naked right of possession, until the land should be surveyed by the United States Government. The provisions of the law of 1852 conflicted with the United States law which made the grant. These provisions, even had they been valid, limited the rights which could be obtained under the Act to a mere right of possession, and possibly to a right to obtain a patent by complying with the terms of the future legislation, yet expected and indicated in Section 14, provided the location made under the Act should be made to correspond with the expected United States survey, when made as stated in Section 14. In view of the fact that there is no allegation in the complaint that the location of Thomas, under the Act, ever was made to correspond with the subsequent United States survey, and there is no allegation that the provisions of the subsequent laws for obtaining a patent were complied with, we think it clear that neither Thomas nor Hastings ever could or ever did acquire any rights or equities in the land in dispute.

The complaint does not negative the regularity of the proceedings under and by which Jackson located his warrants and obtained his patent.

The patent issued to Jackson according to law, and it was issued by the officers authorized to issue it. It was not void upon its face. It was not prohibited by law, and was not issued without authority. The State, at least, is concluded by it. (Durfee v. Plaisted, 38 Cal. 83.) It is true that no title vested in the State under the law of July, 1866, until the lands were "certified over to the State," etc. (Collins v. Bartlett, 44 id. 371.) This provision in the law of July, 1866, could have no application to Jackson's selection, which was made several years before, and was made upon the land after survey by the United States, and was a valid selection when made.

But suppose the title to the land did not vest in the State till February, 1870, the patent to Jackson still passed such title when it did vest in the State. The law of 1859, Section 4, declared that "such patents shall vest in the grantee therein named a good and valid title, in fee simple, to the lands therein described." Surely such a patent would vest in the patentee any title subsequently acquired by the State, whether such title came by listing the lands or otherwise. It is equally sure that such subsequently acquired title would not have vested in Hastings by his Sheriff's deed, even if it had passed to Thomas.

The Act of Congress of July 23, 1866, has no effect upon the case, one way or the other. All that it could do, and all that it undertook to do, was to make good to the State the selections which had been illegally made under the laws of the State. It could not and did not undertake to pass any title to the grantees of the State. In its terms and operation it was limited to making good to the State its former grant from Congress. It could have no effect upon the particular land in dispute, even in confirming it to the State, for the reason that prior to 1863 Jackson had made a valid selection of the land in accordance with the State and United States laws, and his selection had been recognized as valid, and acted upon as valid, by both the United States and the State.

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

Thomas to whose interest the relator has succeeded, attempted in June, 1853, to locate a school-land warrant upon the land in controversy. That attempt was made in the manner prescribed by the Legislature, but was ineffectual because the land was then unsurveyed, and not subject to selection. (Hastings v. Jackson, 46 Cal. 234.) On the first of the succeeding October, the land was surveyed by the Government of the United States. On the twenty-fourth of December, 1853, "said location was presented to the Register of the United States Land Office of the district wherein the same was located, and was by him duly accepted and approved." This is characterized in Hastings v. Jackson, supra, as an unauthorized proceeding, which no law, State or Federal, justified. In Hastings v. Devlin, 40 Cal. 358, the Court said: "We know of no statute of California or of the United States authorizing the performance of the acts set forth in the certificate of Gift, Register of the Land Office at Benicia, of December 24, 1853." It was accordingly held, in Hastings v. Jackson, supra, that the plaintiff in that case, who is the relator in this proceeding, bore no such relations to the property, which was the same in that case as in this, as would entitle him to call in question the title of the defendants, who were the same in that case as in this.

In February, 1857, the defendant Jackson located two school-land warrants upon the land and obtained a patent for it from the State in March, 1863. The land was not listed by the United States to this State until February, 1870. In September, 1871, the United States Land Commissioner canceled Jackson's location and sent back to him the warrants which he had located on the land. This was done after the land had been listed to the State, and the Commissioner had no power over the subject after that. (Hastings v. Jackson, supra.) It does not appear anything has transpired since the commencement of the action of Hastings v. Jackson, supra, to change the relations which then existed between those parties, or to materially affect their rights in the premises. The grounds upon which the plaintiff in that case claimed relief are those upon which the plaintiff in this case claims relief, and the Court, in that case, passed upon all the questions involved in this, except that it declined to consider whether the State could avoid its conveyance to Jackson because the land was not listed to the State when he obtained the patent for it, or because no notice of his application to locate his warrants upon the land was published as required by law, for the reason that the plaintiff was not in a position to raise those questions.

A point, however, is raised in this case which does not appear to have been before considered, i. e., that the Act of Congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An Act to quiet land titles in California," made Thomas' premature location valid. The argument, as we understand it, is that neither the defendant nor the relator had acquired the title to the land prior to the passage of that act, and that the equity of the relator, being older, is the stronger.

It must be admitted, we think, that the patent to Jackson was prematurely issued. Section 2 of the Act of April 30, 1857, authorizes the issuance of a patent after the certification of the land located to the State. But we can not see how the State could avoid the patent on that ground. After the land had been certified over to the State, the locator was entitled to a patent upon the presentation of a register's certificate, or other satisfactory evidence that his location had been duly made. A valid location might have been made after the land had been surveyed by the United States, and before the land was certified over to the State. That is, valid in the sense that if after the location was made, the land was certified over to the State, the locator would be entitled to a patent. As between him and the State, his right to the land was fixed by a location upon it in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State. But the title remained in the United States until after the certification of the land over to the State. Before that event, a patent from the State would not convey the title, for the obvious reason that the State had none to convey. Still, upon a valid location, made after the survey, and before the certification by the United States, the locator was in a position to demand and compel the issuance of a patent whenever the land so located should be certified over to the State. Therefore, if Jackson's location was a valid one, and no patent had been issued to him, he would be entitled to have one issued to him now. We are, therefore, unable to perceive that the State can avoid the patent heretofore issued, on the ground that it was prematurely issued.

Aside from the claim that the relator acquired a prior and superior right to that of Jackson to the land, we find but one other objection to the validity of his location, and that is, that no notice of his application to the Register of the Land Office for a certificate of location was published, as the law required it should be.

The law, however, does not make the validity of the certificate or patent dependent upon the publication of that notice, which was required to be given in order that adverse claimants might be heard in opposition to the application if they chose to be. But they were not concluded by the granting of the certificate, with or without notice. The State certainly was in no way prejudiced by the failure to publish such notice; and no one can take advantage of the omission without showing that he was in some way prejudiced by it. This objection was not pressed at the argument, and does not appear to be much relied on, although it is adverted to in one of the briefs.

The point upon which the learned counsel for the relator mainly rely is, that the location of Jackson, although made after the survey of the land by the United States, was equally invalid with that of Thomas', which was made before said survey, because both were made before the land had been certified by the United States over to the State, and that neither would be valid except for the Act of Congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An Act to quiet land titles in California."

If Jackson's location was invalid, Thomas undoubtedly has the superior right to the land under that Act. But we are unable to discover that Jackson's location was invalid. It was not made until after the land had been surveyed, and, as we understand the law, a valid selection and location might then be made, and the person making it be entitled to a patent from the State, whenever the land so selected and located should be certified over to the State by the United States. If this view of the law be correct, it necessarily follows that the Act of Congress last above referred to can not be successfully invoked in behalf of the relator. - No one will maintain, we think, that that Act could be so construed as to affect a valid location made prior to its passage. It would cure the invalidity of Thomas' location if no intervening right had accrued in the mean time. But a valid location made between the date of Thomas' location and the passage of the Act would constitute an intervening right, which it was clearly not the intention of Congress to interfere with.

We think that the demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was properly sustained, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

PEOPLE ex REL. GABRIEL HAINES v. W. A. HENRY.

ELECTION OF POLICE JUDGE — MUNICIPAL OFFICER — DEFINITION — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.— A Police Judge, though a judicial officer, is also a municipal officer, and is not one of those mentioned in Section 10 of Article xxii. of the Constitution.

APPEAL from a judgment for the defendant in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento.

The action in the Court below was brought to determine the title to the office of Police Judge of the City of Sacramento. The relator claimed the office by virtue of an election held in November, 1880; the defendant, by virtue of an election in September, 1879.

S. Solon Holl, for Appellant.

Henry Edgerton, W. B. C. Brown, and W. A. Anderson, for Respondent.

Ross, J.:

A Police Judge is undoubtedly a judicial officer, but he is a judicial officer of a municipality. He is, therefore, a municipal officer, and is not one of those mentioned in Section 10 of Article xxii. of the present Constitution. (In re Stuart, 53 Cal. 748; Barton v. Kalloch, 56 Cal. 95; Uridias v. Morrill, 22 id. 473; People v. Provines, 34 id. 520; Political Code, §§ 4355, 4370.)

This disposes of the claim of the relator to the office of Police Judge of the City of Sacramento. But the purpose of the action was to oust the respondent as well as to install the relator.

Respondent was elected to the office at the general election held in September, 1879. He was elected by virtue of the Act of the Legislature approved April 1, 1864, and of those provisions of the present Constitution continuing in existence Police Courts and changing the time of holding judicial elections from October to the day of the general elections in the month of September.

The Act of April 1, 1864, is entitled "An Act to provide for the election of the Police Judge of the City of Sacramento at the time of the election of other judicial officers," and declares: "The Police Judge of the City of Sacramento shall be elected at the special judicial election to be holden on the third Wednesday in October, A. D. 1865, and every two years thereafter, and shall take office on the first day of January next succeeding his election, and shall hold for two years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

The evident purpose of this act was, as its title indicates, to provide for the election of the Police Judge of the City of Sacramento at the time of the election of other judicial officers. Until the adoption of the present Constitution such judicial elections were held in the month of October, but by the provisions of that instrument the time of holding them was changed to the day of the general elections in September. Accordingly, at the general election in September, 1879, the judicial officers of the State were elected. At that time the respondent was voted for and elected Police Judge of the city of Sacramento. And although he was not elected on the third Wednesday in October, he was elected at the time of the election of the other judicial officers, which was in accordance with the obvious intent and meaning of the Act of April 1, 1864; and having been elected in substantial compliance with the law, and having qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, we think his tenure ought not to be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

R. WITTENBROCK v. JOHN BELLMER ET AL., AND WILLIAM KLEINSORGE, INTERVENOR.

NEW TRIAL — PARTIES — LAW OF THE CASE — CASE OVERRULED. — Judgment was entered in this case in favor of the plaintiff and of the intervenor, but a new trial was granted, which on a former appeal (reported 57 Cal. 12) was affirmed as to the plaintiff, but reversed as to the intervenor on the ground that the notice of motion was not addressed to or served upon him.

Held: In the absence of notice to all the adverse parties, the Superior Court should have denied the motion for a new trial as to all the parties. That point was not made or considered by this Court on the former appeal, and the appeal was decided upon different principles; but the ruling of the Court upon the former appeal has become the law of the case.

Re.— Id.— Id.—JUDGMENT—APPEAL.—Where a new trial has been granted as to some of the antagonistic parties, the findings are set aside which determine the rights of such parties, and as to them the case stands as if it had never been tried; but the judgment and findings, in so far as they purport to determine the rights of the moving parties, and those as to whom the new trial has been denied, continue to exist, and the judgment is appealable.

MORTGAGE—PLEDGE—MARSHALING OF SECURITIES.—B. and K., partners, mortgaged land held by them in common, and at the same time pledged certain stock (found by the Court to be partnership assets) to secure the mortgage debt. Shortly afterwards they partitioned the land between them, and K., having paid one half of the debt, obtained from the mortgagee a release of his land from the mortgage. B. and K., as partners, were adjudicated bankrupts, and the mortgagee delivered the stock to the intervenor, their assignee in bankruptcy, who claimed the right to detain the same. This action was brought by the assignee of the mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage.

Held: There can be no doubt that the intervenor, as assignee in bankruptcy, can have no property in the stock which is not subject to the lien of the mortgage, and that the appellants may insist that it be sold, and the proceeds applied to the mortgage note to reduce the lien on the land and the personal liability of D.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Sacramento County. DENSON, J.

A petition for hearing in Bank was filed in this case after judgment, and denied. The facts were as stated in the opinion and in the syllabus.

A. C. Freeman, for Appellants.

Creed Haymond and L. S. Taylor, for Respondents.

The Court:

As the case stands, a new trial on motion of the defendants John and Maria Bellmer has been granted as to plaintiff and denied as to the defendant or intervenor, William Kleinsorge. (Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12.) The defendant or intervenor, William Kleinsorge, and the defendants John Bellmer and Maria Bellmar, occupied antagonistic positions in the action. In the absence of notice to all the adverse parties, the Superior Court should have denied the motion for a new trial as to all. That point was not made or considered by this Court at the former appeal, and the appeal was decided upon different principles. The ruling of the Court at the former appeal is the law of this case.

But the effect of the ruling upon the judgment of the lower Court is a matter now for the first time to be considered.

The present appeal is from the judgment of the Superior Court, and respondent moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that there was no judgment when the appeal was taken.

A motion for a new trial is an application for a re-examination of the issues of fact. (C. C. P., § 656.) It is an application to have the verdict or decision set aside, and is not addressed to the judgment. (Id., § 657.) When the new trial is granted as to all the parties, the whole judgment falls as an incident to the vacation of the verdict or decision. Where a new trial has been granted as to some of the antagonistic parties (the cause having been tried by the Court), it is apparent that the findings are set aside which determine the rights of such parties, and as to them the case stands as if it had never been tried. The judgment, so far as it affects the rights of the moving party, and the adverse parties with respect to whom the new trial has been granted, comes to naught with the findings by which it was supported. But the judgment and findings, in so far as they purport to determine the rights of the moving party and those as to whom the new trial had been denied, continue to exist, and the judgment is appealable. The motion to dismiss should therefore be denied. The Court below found "that John Bellmer [defendant], for the purpose of securing the payment of said note [the note to secure which the mortgage was given], and as a part of said transaction, and for no other purpose, pledged to said corporation fifteen shares of stock of said corporation, by indorsement thereon and assignment thereof, which stock then and theretofore stood in the name of said John Bellmer on the books of said corporation, which said stock was delivered to said corporation. That said stock is now worth $1,590."

The findings show that the stock thus pledged to the Germania Building and Loan Association, the corporation referred to, was never specially assigned to plaintiff. The stock was delivered by the corporation to defendant, William Kleinsorge, who claims the right to detain the same as assignee in bankruptcy of John Bellmer and Charles Kleinsorge, bankrupts, as part of the partnership assets of said John and Charles.

The note and mortgage were executed by John Bellmer and Charles Kleinsorge, and it clearly appears in the findings that the stock was pledged by both "as part of the same transaction." The transaction occurred February 18, 1875, and John Bellmer and Charles Kleinsorge were not adjudicated bankrupts until February 27, 1878. There is no suggestion that the pledging of the stock was fraudulent, or that the pledgors were indebted at the time of the contract between the corporation and themselves.

There can be no doubt that William Kleinsorge, as assignee in bankruptcy, can have no property in the stock which is not subject to the lien of plaintiff as assignee of the promissory note, and that the appellants may insist that it be sold and the proceeds applied to the mortgage note, to reduce the lien on the land and the personal liability of John Bellmer.

Motion to dismiss denied, and judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

W. B. TREADWELL v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF YOLO COUNTY.

ELECTION OF COUNTY OFFICERS — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.— Application for writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Supervisors of Yolo County to take steps preparatory to the holding of an election on the first Wednesday of September, 1881, for certain county officers. Application denied. (McKINSTRY and ROSS, JJ., dissented; MORRISON, C. J., expressing no opinion.)

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus.

W. B. Treadwell, for Plaintiff.

George F. Baker and W. B. C. Brown, for Defendants.

SHARPSTEIN, J.:

Application for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Supervisors of Yolo County to take steps preparatory to the holding of an election on the first Wednesday of September of this year, for the election of certain county officers, as provided in Section 4109 of the Political Code as it stood prior to March 7, 1881, when the Legislature attempted to amend it.

The petitioner insists: 1. That the amendatory Act, if constitutional, does not dispense with the holding of an election this year for the officers enumerated in his petition; 2. That if it does, it is repugnant to that provision of the Constitution which prohibits the extension of the term of any officer "beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed." (Const., Art. xi., § 9.)

The Act of March 7, 1881, is entitled "An Act to amend Section 4109 of 'An Act to establish a Political Code,' approved March 12, 1872, relating to the election and terms of office of county, city and county, and township officers, and to repeal Sections 4024, 4027, and 4111 of said Political Code."

By comparing this Act with that of which it purports to be amendatory, it will be seen that an attempt is made to completely revise Section 4109. As it originally stood, that section provided for the holding of county elections on the same day that general elections were held, under the late Constitution. The present Constitution has changed the time of holding general elections from the first Wednesday of September to the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November. The intention of the Legislature to make a corresponding change in the Code in relation to the time of holding elections for county and township officers is sufficiently manifest in the amendment of March 7, 1881. The effect of such a revision upon the provisions of the section revised is the point which we will first consider.

In Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 617, the Court says: "We are of opinion that it was their (Congress') intention to make a new law so far as the present law differed from the former, and that the new law, embracing all that was intended to be preserved of the old, omitting what was not so intended, became complete in itself and repealed all other law on the subject embraced within it. The authorities on this subject are clear and uniform." (Citing United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88; Henderson's v. Tobacco, id. 652; Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537; Commonwealth v. Cooley, 10 Pick. 36.)

In this case the intention of the Legislature to revise in the later Act the entire subject-matter of the former one, appears more plainly than it did in any of the cases above cited. And whenever that intention clearly appears, the subsequent Act operates as a repeal of the former, although it contains no express words to that effect. An amendment of a statute will operate precisely as though the subject-matter of the amendment had been originally incorporated in the statute amended, as regards any action had after the amendment is made. (Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161.)

It does not seem to us that under the authorities there can be any doubt as to the operation of the Act of March 7, 1881. If constitutional, it completely superseded the section which it amended and revised. (State v. Andrews, 20 Tex. 230.)

Its constitutionality is attacked on the ground that if it dispenses with the holding of an election of county officers this year, it in effect extends the terms of the present incumbents. It is not claimed that it expressly or directly attempts to do anything of the kind. But it is claimed that such would be the necessary result, because the present incumbents are entitled to hold their respective offices until their successors are qualified. The Code so provides, but if that provision of the Code is repugnant to the Constitution, the Code must give way, and the result would be that all of these offices would become vacant at the expiration of the terms for which the incumbents were elected, and such vacancies would have to be filled in the manner prescribed by law. And if there be no mode provided by law for filling them, they must be filled in the mode provided by Section 8 of Article v. of the Constitution. If either Act is unconstitutional, it is the one which provides that officers shall hold after their terms have expired, and not the one which changes the time of holding the election.

Application denied.

THORNTON, J., concurred.

MYRICK, J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment, upon the ground that, in my opinion, there can be, under the Constitution, no election the present year.

McKEE, J.:

The Constitution of 1879 excepted from the operation of its provisions upon the subject of election of county officers, and their official duties and terms of office, the first election held after its adoption. (§ 20, Art. xx.) It required that the officers to be chosen at the election of 1879 should be elected at the time and in the manner then provided by law. (§ 10, Art. xxiii.) The laws regulating that election were not disturbed, but remained in full force and effect as to all officers whose election, duties, and terms of office were to be afterwards regulated and fixed by the Legislature. By them the time and mode of election had been prescribed, and the terms of office had been fixed. (P. C., Art. ii.) And it had been also provided that the officers elected under them should continue to hold until their successors were elected and qualified. (P. C., § 879.) Officers elected at the election of 1879, therefore, continue to be, by the law of their election, officers de facto and de jure until the election and qualification of their successors. (People v. Tilton, 37 Cal. 614; People ex rel. Stratton v. Oulton, 28 id. 44, 383; People v. Whitman, 10 id. 38.)

But the successors of the officers elected in 1879, under then existing law, could not be elected until the Legislature, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by Section 5, Article xi., of the Constitution, gave effect to constitutional provisions upon the subject of elections by the passage of a general and uniform law for the election in the several counties of the State, of such county, township, and municipal officers as, in its judgment, the public convenience might require, and prescribing their duties, and fixing their terms, and so regulating the subject of elections as to enable the people of the State to adjust themselves to the requirements of the Constitution, which provided for future elections to be held in even-numbered years. (§ 10, Art. xxii.) The Legislature discharged the duty devolved upon it by the passage of the Act of March 7, 1881. This Act took effect immediately upon its passage, and all the constitutional provisions upon the subject of the election of county officers, their terms and duties, as enforced by the Act, became operative; and all the provisions of the Political Code upon the same subject were repealed. There is, therefore, no law in existence which authorizes an election to be held in accordance with the organic and statutory law of the State until the year 1882.

The Act of March 7, 1881, is a law which makes the election of all county officers, and the officers to be elected under it, subject to the provisions of the Constitution. Elections for such officers are only to be held in even-numbered years; the compensation of such officers shall not be increased after their election, nor during their terms of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he shall be elected. (§ 9, Art. xi.) But, as I had occasion to observe in Woods v. Election Commissioners, 58 Cal. 561, the officers elected at the election of 1879 are not within the intent and meaning of these constitutional provisions, because they were elected by authority of the Constitution itself, under laws which commanded them to hold their respective offices until their successors were elected and qualified under legislation, which was necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution upon the subject. Therefore I concur in the judgment.

(MORRISON, C. J., did not express any opinion in the case.)

McKINSTRY, J., dissenting:

I dissent. I am able to discover no constitutional objection to Section 879 of the Political Code, which reads: "Every officer must continue to discharge the duties of his office, although his term has expired, until his successor has qualified." The section does not operate to extend the term of any officer "beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed." (Constitution of California, Art. xi., § 9.) It is prospective in its operation, and applies only to officers elected or appointed after it was enacted. As to such an officer, his term is not extended, but the section referred to forms part of the law which establishes his term. He is elected or appointed in view of the possible event that his successor may not qualify within the definite period which constitutes his term in case his successor shall qualify within such period. Section 879 should be read in connection with the other provisions of the Code relating to terms of office, and, so read, each officer is elected or appointed for a definite period, and such additional time, if any, as may elapse between the expiration of the definite period and the qualification of his successor. Nor can resort properly be had to the words "although his term has expired," to modify or control the evident intent of the Legislature, as expressed in Section 879. The other provisions of the Code which relate to the term of any officer are to be read with the condition that the term fixed by such provisions shall be continued until the successor shall qualify.

If the Act of March 7, 1881 (Stats. 1881, p. 72), is to be construed to repeal or abrogate Section 4109 of the Political Code, as the same stood prior to that date, then either the county officers who shall be elected in Yolo County under the Act of March 7, 1881, or those who may be "appointed" ad interim by the Governor or other appointing power, will be the successors of the present county officers.

If those who shall be elected under the Act of March 7, 1881, will be the successors of the present officers, the Act necessarily extends the terms of the present officers. The present officers were elected to hold office until the first Monday in March, 1882, or until those elected in 1881 should qualify. If the Act of March 7, 1881, has repealed the section of the Code under which they were elected, the present officers — as a direct consequence of that Act — will continue in office until the first Monday after the first day of January, 1883, or until those elected in 1882 shall qualify. The act therefore extends the terms of the present officers beyond the period for which they were elected, and, so construed, is violative of Section 9, Article xi. of the Constitution.

The section of the Constitution applies as well to the terms of officers elected before as to those elected after the Constitution went into operation. It is a limitation upon the power of the Legislature chosen under the present Constitution, and there is nothing in the language employed which can be supposed to authorize an extension of the terms of those in office when the limitation took effect.

It has been suggested that the effect of the Act of March 7, 1881, will be to create a vacancy as to each county officer from the first Monday in March, 1882 — to be filled by the appointing power. But it is clear that the Act can not be held to make such vacancy as can be filled by the Supervisors, or by any officer other than the Governor. Section 996 of the Political Code defines the vacancies which may thus be filled, and declares that such vacancies shall occur only by reason of certain acts or omissions of the "incumbent," before the expiration of his term.

It is said, however, that the Governor has power to fill the vacancies until the next election by the people. (Const., Art. v., § 8.) Thus, to construe the Constitution and the Act of March 7, 1881, is to declare that the power has been transferred to the Governor to appoint all county officers (whose terms are supposed to be affected by the legislation we are considering) to hold from the first Monday of March, 1882, until the first Monday of January, 1883. There is nothing in the language of the Act of March 7, 1881, to indicate that such concentration of patronage was within the contemplation of the Legislature, and if anything is clear from the Constitution as a whole, and from many of its provisions separately considered, it is a design that matters of local interest shall be regulated and conducted by officers selected by the people of the several counties, towns, and cities, or by those appointed by such as are so selected. It would seem to be the evident intent of the present as well as former Constitution to limit the executive patronage. (People v. Mizner, 7 Cal. 519.)

But in case the Act of March 7, 1881, should be construed as entirely abrogating Section 4109 of the Political Code, the question would remain, Will vacancies occur such as the Governor is authorized to fill? Sections 2, 15, and 16 of Article v. of the present Constitution — except in certain particulars not affecting any question involved in the present controversy — are like Sections 2, 16, and 17 of the same article of the former Constitution. In People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 45, it was said: "The Constitution itself clearly defines the sense of the phrase 'vacancy in the office of Governor' as used in the sixteenth section, by specifically enumerating in the succeeding section the instances which devolve the duties of the Executive upon the Lieutenant-Governor. It will be seen that all the instances mentioned are such as can only occur after the term of the Governor has commenced to run. * * * When the Constitution clearly enumerates the events that shall constitute a vacancy in a particular office, we must suppose all other causes of vacancy excluded." With reference to the second section of the fifth article, the Court in the same case said: "By this section it is provided that 'the Governor shall be elected, etc., and shall hold his office two years from the time of his installation, and until his successor shall be qualified.' This language is exceedingly plain. The term of the office is fixed at two years certain, with a contingent extension. When this contingency happens, this extension is as much a part of the entire term as any portion of the two years." "If the Governor-elect fail to qualify, from any cause, the Governor would hold over until his successor be elected and qualified." The Court proceeded to apply the definition of the word "vacancy" in the phrase "vacancy in the office of Governor" to the office of Controller, and held that it was only where a vacancy thus defined occurred that the Governor had power to appoint a Controller — adding: “If the Controller-elect fail to qualify from any cause, the Controller holds over until his successor is elected and qualified. It is only where there is no incumbent of the particular office to hold over that the system will allow the appointment of the Executive to fill the office.”

If Section 879 of the Political Code is valid, and constitutes a portion of the law fixing the terms of county officers, the principles applied to the construction of the clauses of the former Constitution are applicable to the present Constitution and the Statutes which relate to terms of county officers. These officers, like the Governor, hold office until their successors qualify. They continue to be the incumbents until successors are elected and qualify. If there is a failure to elect a successor, no vacancy occurs to be filled by the Governor. There is nothing in the nature of things — in the absence of express provision to that effect — which requires that the incumbents should be supplanted by those in whose selection the people have no voice. Indeed, the whole argument that the Governor may fill the county offices in case there should be no election this year, seems based upon the proposition that Section 879 of the Political Code, which authorizes every officer to continue to discharge the duties of his office until his successor is qualified, is repugnant to the provision of the Constitution which prohibits the Legislature from extending the term of any officer beyond the period for which he was elected. (Art. xi., § 9.) We have endeavored to show that Section 879 is not obnoxious to that objection. The purpose of the prohibition of the Constitution is sufficiently obvious. It is to relieve members of the Legislature from the solicitations of partisan office-holders, and to remove any temptation for those in office to employ their influence to secure a continuation of official life without any appeal to the popular voice. The terms of county officers may be fixed in advance, but no man in office can have his term extended by an act of the Legislature.

The Act of March 7, 1881, provides that the successors of the present county officers shall take office (if they shall then have qualified) in January, 1883, instead of March, 1882; Section 879 of the Political Code (which has not been repealed) provides that the present officers shall continue in office until their successors shall qualify. If section 4109 of the Political Code is dead for every purpose, the terms of the present county officers have been extended by the Act of March 7, 1881. We can not, under the Constitution, give such an effect to that Act.

Nor is it necessary, in order to prevent the Act referred to from operating an unconstitutional extension of terms of office, that we should hold the Act to be absolutely void. There is no necessary conflict between the several provisions of the Constitution mentioned by counsel. There can be no doubt that the Legislature might have legislated in such manner as that their work would have accorded with all the provisions of the Constitution.

It seems to have been assumed by counsel that the Legislature could not comply with the mandate of the Constitution "to provide for the election or appointment" of officers in the several counties, "prescribe their duties and fix their terms," without incidentally violating the prohibitory clause that no officer's term shall be extended "beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed;" and that when the Legislature fixed terms of office to commence in January, 1883, if the effect was to extend the terms of the present officers, it was an effect necessarily resulting from obedience to the constitutional mandate. But certainly a clause might have been inserted in the Act of March 7, 1881, in substance — "This Act shall not be construed to extend the term of any officer." The Constitution inserts this clause — it may plainly be read by all expounders of the law. It is not necessary to assume, however, that it was the legislative intention to extend the term of any officer. The Act of March 7, 1881, simply provides that certain officers shall be elected at a certain election, their terms to commence at a certain date thereafter, Full force and effect can be given to the Act without holding it to mean that there shall be no election of such officers in the mean time. There is nothing in the Constitution which prohibits the shortening of the term of the present county officers, or of those who shall be elected this year, by an Act of the Legislature. The Act may fairly be construed as providing for a future system of biennial elections and terms of office commencing in 1882, and not until then superseding the present system. So construed, it violates no provision of the Constitution. Even admitting that the Act of March 7, 1881, was intended to repeal Section 4109 of the Political Code, the repeal by implication can have no greater effect than would a distinct repealing clause. If the Act had, in terms, repealed the section of the Code, the Constitution would have intervened and prevented the repeal from becoming absolute. But the Act is prospective, and is to be read as if it had declared "hereafter the several county officers shall be elected at the general election in 1882," etc. There is no attempt to interfere with the present system until that election arrives. (P. & A. Tel Co. v. Commonwealth, 66 Pa. St. 72.)

It has been further urged, that there can be no election of county officers this fall, because there is no law providing for a general election this fall. It is said that the Act of April 16, 1880 (Amnts. 1880, p. 77), amends Section 1041 of the Political Code, by providing that the general elections shall be held on the even instead of the odd numbered years. But that Act does not directly refer to the terms of any class of officers, or in any way determine what officers shall be elected at the general election. It is not pretended that its effect was to shorten the terms of county officers, but, on the contrary, that, in connection with the Act of March 7, 1881, it has extended them until such officers shall be succeeded by those elected in 1882. As has been said with reference to the Act of March 7, 1881, it is not necessary to declare the Act of April 16, 1880, absolutely void in order to construe it so that it shall not violate the Constitution by extending the term of any officer.

The Act of April 16, 1880, provided that there should be a general election in 1880 and every second year thereafter; but there was no law for the election of county officers on an even-numbered year until March 7, 1881. Neither of these statutes can be construed to extend the term of such officers. There was no law providing for the election of the county officers in 1880 or 1882, which was operative in the year 1880. So far as such officers are concerned, the election must be held in 1881, because to construe the Act of April 16, 1880, as changing the time of their election from 1881 to 1882 would be to extend the terms of such officers. Nevertheless, a general election must be held in 1882, and at that election county officers should be elected as successors of those elected in 1881. This construction of the statutes of 1880 and 1881 will accomplish the purpose of the provision of the Constitution which requires the Legislature to provide for the election of county officers and to fix their terms, without violating the other provision, which prohibits the extension of the term of any officer beyond the period for which he was elected.

Ross, J.:

'I dissent. For the reason stated in my concurring opinion in the case of Wood v. Election Commissioners, 58 Cal. 561, the Act of the Legislature approved March 7, 1881, and generally known as the Hartson Act, is, I think, a valid constitutional law, prospective in its operation, and provides for a future system of biennial elections on the even-numbered years, commencing in the year 1882.

In my view, therefore, the determination of the present case depends on the question, whether, independent of the Hartson Act, there is any existing law requiring an election for county officers to be held in the month of September of this year. If there is, the Hartson Act can not operate to postpone such election; because that would be in effect to extend the terms of office of the present incumbents beyond the period for which they were elected. Those incumbents were elected at the general election held in September, 1879, by virtue of Section 1041 and 4109 of the Political Code, which were then in force, and then read as follows:

Section 1041: "There must be held throughout the State, on the first Wednesday of September, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three and in every second year thereafter, and also on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November in each bissextile or leap year, an election to be known as the general election."

Section 4109: "All county and township officers, except judicial officers, assessors, and supervisors, must be elected at the general election held in September, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and every two years thereafter, and hold office commencing in 1882, and not until then superseding the present system. So construed, it violates no provision of the Constitution. Even admitting that the Act of March 7, 1881, was intended to repeal Section 4109 of the Political Code, the repeal by implication can have no greater effect than would a distinct repealing clause. If the Act had, in terms, repealed the section of the Code, the Constitution would have intervened and prevented the repeal from becoming absolute. But the Act is prospective, and is to be read as if it had declared "hereafter the several county officers shall be elected at the general election in 1882," etc. There is no attempt to interfere with the present system until that election arrives. (P. & A. Tel Co. v. Commonwealth, 66 Pa. St. 72.)

It has been further urged, that there can be no election of county officers this fall, because there is no law providing for a general election this fall. It is said that the Act of April 16, 1880 (Amdts. 1880, p. 77), amends Section 1041 of the Political Code, by providing that the general elections shall be held on the even instead of the odd numbered years. But that Act does not directly refer to the terms of any class of officers, or in any way determine what officers shall be elected at the general election. It is not pretended that its effect was to shorten the terms of county officers, but, on the contrary, that, in connection with the Act of March 7, 1881, it has extended them until such officers shall be succeeded by those elected in 1882. As has been said with reference to the Act of March 7, 1881, it is not necessary to declare the Act of April 16, 1880, absolutely void in order to construe it so that it shall not violate the Constitution by extending the term of any officer.

The Act of April 16, 1880, provided that there should be a general election in 1880 and every second year thereafter; but there was no law for the election of county officers on an even-numbered year until March 7, 1881. Neither of these statutes can be construed to extend the term of such officers. There was no law providing for the election of the county officers in 1880 or 1882, which was operative in the year 1880. So far as such officers are concerned, the election must be held in 1881, because to construe the Act of April 16, 1880, as changing the time of their election from 1881 to 1882 would be to extend the terms of such officers. Nevertheless, a general election must be held in 1882, and at that election county officers should be elected as successors of those elected in 1881. This construction of the statutes of 1880 and 1881 will accomplish the purpose of the provision of the Constitution which requires the Legislature to provide for the election of county officers and to fix their terms, without violating the other provision, which prohibits the extension of the term of any officer beyond the period for which he was elected.

Ross, J.:

'I dissent. For the reason stated in my concurring opinion in the case of Wood v. Election Commissioners, 58 Cal. 561, the Act of the Legislature approved March 7, 1881, and generally known as the Hartson Act, is, I think, a valid constitutional law, prospective in its operation, and provides for a future system of biennial elections on the even-numbered years, commencing in the year 1882.

In my view, therefore, the determination of the present case depends on the question, whether, independent of the Hartson Act, there is any existing law requiring an election for county officers to be held in the month of September of this year. If there is, the Hartson Act can not operate to postpone such election; because that would be in effect to extend the terms of office of the present incumbents beyond the period for which they were elected. Those incumbents were elected at the general election held in September, 1879, by virtue of Section 1041 and 4109 of the Political Code, which were then in force, and then read as follows:

Section 1041: "There must be held throughout the State, on the first Wednesday of September, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three and in every second year thereafter, and also on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November in each bissextile or leap year, an election to be known as the general election."

Section 4109: "All county and township officers, except judicial officers, assessors, and supervisors, must be elected at the general election held in September, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and every two years thereafter, and hold office for two years from the first Monday of March next after their election."

Read in connection with Section 1041, as it must be, Section 4109 provided for the election of the officers therein mentioned at the general election held on the first Wednesday of September, in the year 1878, and every two years thereafter. Both sections were continued in force by the provisions of the new Constitution, until such time as the Legislature should alter or amend them, or pass such other laws as should be inconsistent therewith—all, however, subject to that other provision of the Constitution which declares that the term of no county, city, town, or municipal officer shall be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed.

In 1880, the Legislature, with a view to require all elections to be held on the even-numbered years, amended Section 1041 of the Political Code so as to make it read as follows: "There must be held throughout the State, on the first Wednesday after the first Monday of November, in the year 1880, and in every second year thereafter, an election to be known as the general election;" and at the same session, but in an independent act, attempted to amend Section 4109 so as to require the county officers to be elected at such general election to be held in the even-numbered years, commencing with the year 1880. This latter act, however, was declared invalid by this Court in Leonard v. January, 56 Cal. 1. Section 4109 of the Political Code therefore remained unchanged. By its provisions the county officers are required to be elected at the general election to be held on the first Wednesday in September, 1881. In view of the constitutional inhibition against the extension of the term of any county, city, town or municipal officer beyond the period for which he is elected, neither the Hartson Act nor the amendment of 1880 to Section 1041 of the Political Code, in my opinion, can or should be so construed as to prevent the election contemplated by Section 4109 of the Political Code, but rather that they should be construed prospectively, thus conforming to all the provisions of the Constitution on the subject, and establishing a system of biennial elections in the even-numbered years, commencing with the year 1882. The term of the officers who should thus be elected in 1881 would be shortened, but there is no constitutional objection to any act of the Legislature shortening the term of any officer. As the result of the judgment of the majority, the officers elected in 1879 will, in my opinion, continue to hold office until their successors are elected and qualified.

S. NEWCOMB ET AL. v. JAMES B. TISDALE ET AL.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY UNDER URGENT NECESSITY.—In an action to recover damages for the destruction of crops, etc., caused by defendants cutting a levee or embankment across Wilkin's Slough, the defendants justified under an alleged urgent necessity to save life and property from destruction; and the evidence tended to show that such necessity existed, under the stress of which they acted. The Court, in effect, instructed the jury, that if the levee or embankment was constructed in pursuance of plans reported to the Board of Supervisors of Colusa County, etc., then the act of the defendants was unlawful, and they were responsible in damages for any injury sustained by the plaintiffs.

Held: This instruction took from the jury the defense set up, and in effect directed them to disregard it; for this error, judgment reversed. (MYRICK and McKEE, JJ., dissenting.)

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the County of Colusa. HATCH, J.

J. C. Ball and Jo Hamilton, for Appellants.

The law of necessity invoked by the appellants was conclusive, and the Court below erred in disregarding it. (2 Kent's Com. 338, 339; 1 Hilliard on Torts, 97; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 73, 74; Russell v. The Mayor etc., 2 Denio, 474; The Mayor etc. v. Lord, 17 Wend. 285; S. C., 18 id. 129, 130; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 1 Zab. 257, 258; Hale v. Lawrence, 1 id. 729, 730.)

A. L. & T. J. Hart, for Respondents.

THORNTON, J.:

In this action, which was brought to recover damages for the destruction of crops, etc., caused by defendants cutting a levee or embankment across Wilkin's Slough, the defendants justified under an urgent necessity to save life and property from destruction. The evidence tended to show that such necessity existed, under the stress of which they acted. The Court instructed the jury if the levee or embankment across Wilkin's Slough, the cutting of which is complained of, was constructed in pursuance of plans reported to the Board of Supervisors of Colusa County of Reclamation District No. 108, then the defendants had no right to cut the levee without the consent of the owners thereof, and if they did so cut it, their act was an unlawful act, for which they were responsible in damages for any injury sustained by plaintiffs.

This instruction took from the jury the defense set up, and in effect directed them to disregard it.

This was repeated in the direction given by the learned Judge to the jury when he read to them Request vii. of defendants.

For this error, the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

ROSS, McKINSTRY, and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., concurred.

MYRICK, J., dissenting:

This action was brought to recover damages for the wrongful and unlawful cutting of an embankment of earth on the west side of the Sacramento River, in Colusa County, whereby water was caused to flow from said river and flood and inundate the lands of plaintiffs and destroy plaintiffs' growing crops of grain. The plaintiffs resided and had growing crops on the west side, and the defendants with their families resided on the east side of the river.

The defendants in their answer averred that at times the said river is subject to great floods and overflows; that when the river becomes full of water the bed of the river is insufficient to hold the body of water; that along the river there are several natural outlets for the drainage of the river, which was designed by nature, and which do and did carry off the surplus water, and thereby ease the volume of water flowing in the stream; that on the westerly side of the river

one of these natural outlets was called Wilkin's Slough, which with other outlets in their natural state act as outlets for the surplus water and tend to ease the flow at times of high water; that except for the relief from said natural outlets the river at times of excessive high water is liable and does break over its banks, floods the whole country for miles in extent, and does great damage to the property of persons on the easterly side of the river, and washes away their houses and endangers the lives of defendants and others; that before and on the twenty-second of December, 1879, from excessive floods from above, the river became and was full of water to its utmost capacity; that it was still rising; that its condition threatened, and public calamity was thereby rendered imminent; that it became and was necessary, in order to arrest such public calamity, and to save the lives of persons residing on the easterly side of the river, that said natural outlets should be rendered free from obstruction; that the defendants and many others consulted together, and it was resolved to be and it was necessary, in order to prevent public calamity and to save the lives and property aforesaid, that the obstructions in said outlets should be removed; that said Wilkin's Slough had become and was filled up and obstructed so that it was unable to receive said surplus water, or to act as a natural outlet; that the defendants, in order to prevent the threatened public calamity, proceeded to remove the obstructions from said slough, in order to ease and prevent the flow of the water over said country as aforesaid — all of which acts were necessary and proper, and done from stress of necessity, and to save life and property as aforesaid.

There is no averment that the other outlets referred to were filled up or obstructed; there is no distinct averment that the said other outlets were insufficient to carry off the surplus water; neither is there any averment that the removal of the obstructions in Wilkin's Slough accomplished the result desired, or eased the flow, or saved life or property.

The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict of $1,000 in favor of plaintiffs returned; for which amount, with costs, judgment was rendered. Defendants' motion for a new trial was denied, and the appeal was taken.

sides of the river levees had been constructed; that on the west by the Reclamation District, that on the east by the defendants. The levee on the west had the effect to raise the waters of the river three to four feet, and to threaten to overflow defendants' lands from two to three feet; and defendants had constructed their levee six to seven feet high, which had, so far, afforded protection. Some water had run over the levee in places, but how much, or with what result, does not appear. Defendants had also stopped up two smaller sloughs, which had formerly served as outlets for the waters of the river. Besides, at the time the defendants cut the levee the waters of the river were subsiding; had already receded three to seven inches.

Assuming, under the facts as presented and the law applicable thereto, that the Reclamation District was properly formed and the levee legally constructed and maintained, I do not see that the defendants were justified in cutting the levee, and in causing the injury complained of.

I do not think it necessary to pass upon the instruction given to the jury "that the flooding," etc. (vi., p. 17, Transcript), nor upon the instructions asked for by the defendants as to what is a nuisance and their right to remove it; the matters therein contained were not applicable to this case. Even if it be conceded that the levee was a nuisance, the defendants had no right to cut it and thus cause the waters to flow into the slough in such volume as to exceed the capacity of the slough and overflow its banks.

McKEE, J., concurred in the foregoing dissenting opinion.

SAN FRANCISCO GAS LIGHT COMPANY v. JOHN P. DUNN, AUDITOR, ETC.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION — CONTRACT FOR SUPPLY OF GAS — POWER OF SUPERVISORS TO PROVIDE FOR LIGHTING STREETS — DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.—A contract was entered into between the City and County of San Francisco, May 24, 1869, containing the following provision: "Upon the expiration of the term of five years, hereinbefore limited, the party of the first part (unless it shall elect and notify the party of the second part of its election to advertise for proposals, as hereinafter provided) shall purchase and take from the party of the second part all the gas required for lighting said City as aforesaid for another term of five years, dating from the expiration of the term, hereinbefore limited, and pay therefor at such rates as shall be agreed upon by a majority of a commission to be constituted: one commissioner to be appointed by the party of the first part, one by the party of the second part, and one by the two appointed. The contract was renewed under this provision in 1869; and afterwards, in 1879, after the taking of the appropriate steps, the following resolution was passed, on the seventh day of July of that year, by the Board of Supervisors: Resolved, that the rates to be charged for gas to be supplied to the City and County of San Francisco, by the San Francisco Gas Light Company, during the term of five years from the nineteenth day of May, 1879, as fixed by the commission, composed of J. O. Rountree, J. B. Haggin, and J. O. Eldridge, appointed and acting under and in pursuance of the contract existing between said City and County and said company, be and are hereby accepted, adopted, and approved, and the report of said commission was hereby adopted, ratified, and confirmed." In November, 1879, a claim for the amount due for the preceding month was presented by the plaintiff, and approved by the Board of Supervisors, and afterwards, having been presented to the defendant, and he having refused to audit the same, an appeal was taken to the Board of Supervisors, who finally approved and allowed the said demand; but notwithstanding such allowance, the defendant still refused to audit the same; and the petitioner applied for a writ of mandate.

Held: The Board of Supervisors had no lawful authority to delegate to persons not members of that Board the power to fix and determine upon the amounts to be paid by the City and County for gas, or to alienate from the Board its power of final determination with regard to such amounts; and the provision of the contract of May 24, 1869, for the renewal of that contract, was therefore void.

The resolution of July 7, 1879, is, however, to be read as if the report referred to were incorporated in it; and thus read, it fixes the rates which the city and county agreed to pay. Thus read, the final determination with respect to the rates to be paid was exercised by the Board of Supervisors, and not by the commission.

In the absence of an express limitation as to the period of time for which a contract may be made by the Board of Supervisors, the Court is not prepared to declare that such a contract for five years would be unreasonable. It may therefore be assumed, for the purposes of this decision, that the contract of 1879 is valid as an independent contract, unless prohibited by express statutory provision.

The proviso of the first section of the Act of April 3, 1876 (Stats. 1875-6, p. 854), prohibits the making of any contract for any purpose "binding said city for a longer period than two years;" and unless this proviso was repealed by the subsequent Act of February 25, 1878 (Stats. 1877-8, p. 111), the contract of 1874 was one which the Supervisors were not empowered to make, and any claim based upon such contract one which they had no authority to allow. It is, however, unnecessary to decide in this case whether or not the proviso was repealed.

after having been published five successive days, according to law, taken up and passed by the following vote:

"Ayes—Supervisors Foley, Mangels, Danforth, Rountree. Farren, Acheson, Scott, Haight. Noes—Supervisors Talbert, Smith, Gibbs, Brickwedel.

"(Signed) JOHN A. RUSSELL, Clerk."

The rates fixed by the "commission" were before the Board in the report of Supervisor Rountree. The resolution is, of course, to be read as if the report referred to were incorporated in it; and thus read, it fixes the rates which the City and County agreed to pay. Thus the "final determination," with respect to the rates to be paid, was exercised by the Board of Supervisors, and not by the "commission."

Section 74 of the Consolidation Act empowers the Board "by regulation or order * * * to provide for lighting of streets," and by Section 71 it is enacted "that the street-light fund shall be applied and used in payment for lighting the streets of the city, and for the repair of lamp-posts in pursuance of any existing or future contracts of the said City and County." It is not disputed that under these provisions of the charter the Supervisors have power by "order," duly published, to contract for the lighting of the streets. As we construe resolution 13,725 (new series), they did so contract.

It is urged, however, that the Board had no power to make such contract to run for a period of five years.

We entertain no doubt that the power conferred upon the Supervisors, "by resolution or order," to provide "for lighting the streets" includes a power to enter into an appropriate contract for carrying into effect the major power. The power to provide for lighting the streets has been held, however, to be a governmental power, to be employed by the legislative department of the local government; such as can not be ceded away, nor used in such manner as shall control or embarrass future legislation. "No legislative body can part with its powers by any proceeding so as not to be able to continue the exercise of them. Such body has no power, even by contract, to control and embarrass its legislative powers and duties." (Cooley's Con. Lim. 205.)

In East St. Louis v. Gas Light Company, the Supreme Court of Illinois said: "We do not think there can be a doubt that the power conferred on the city council to provide for lighting the streets and provide the means to pay for the same by taxation is legislative power." (10 Rep. 109, and cases therein cited.) It is not to be inferred, however, that a subsequent Board of Supervisors may disregard every contract entered into by their predecessors, or annul every such contract, even by former legislative act. The power of the members of the Board to determine, on behalf of their constituencies, that it is expedient to secure the lighting of the streets, by a company or individuals, upon certain terms, is legislative. But when a contract (which the Board is authorized to make) is entered into between the Supervisors and a company or individuals, the corporation is as much bound by it as is any other person by his contracts. If, however, under pretense of carrying into effect a legislative power, conferred, the Board shall enter into such a contract as was evidently not intended to be authorized, or such as shall amount to a cession of the right of future legislation, the contract is invalid. In East St. Louis v. Gas Light Company, 10 Rep. 109, it was held that a contract giving to a company the exclusive privilege of lighting that city for thirty years was invalid. But in the absence of an express limitation as to the period of time for which a contract may be made, we would hold, perhaps, that the contract with the plaintiff for five years was not beyond the power of the Supervisors. The exigencies of the present case do not demand a determination of that question. We only say we are not now prepared to declare that such a contract, for five years, must necessarily embarrass the Supervisors or disable them from performing their legislative or governmental functions. (Dillon's Mun. Corp. 61.)

While, therefore, the attempt, by the clause of the contract of 1869 above recited, to transfer to "Commissioners" the power conferred by the charter upon the Supervisors, of determining what rates it might be expedient for the city and county to pay to a gas company five years in advance, is of no force or effect, because the Board had no power thus to cede to others their legislative function (and of this the Supervisors were fully informed by their legal adviser long and was an action of the Board which they were empowered to take, by Sections 71 and 74 of the Consolidation Act. They were not legally bound to allow the claim by reason of the contract of 1869, or of any "renewal" of that contract. But the gas had been furnished the city, and they were fully empowered to provide for its payment such sum as it was worth. They have allowed a claim which they were authorized to allow, in such amount as the Board should deem reasonable and just. We must presume that they were of opinion that $22,514.80 was the fair value of the gas furnished and repairs done by plaintiff, during the month of October, 1879. Neither the Auditor nor this Court has power to review the judgment of the Supervisors with reference to the amount allowed to plaintiff as the actual value of the gas furnished and repairs made. As we have seen, the city and county is not bound by the contracts of 1869, 1874, or 1879, and no duty is cast upon the Board to audit or allow any claim of plaintiff, according to the rates mentioned in any one of those contracts. But each time a claim is presented by plaintiff, which is allowed in whole or in part by the Board of Supervisors, the latter employ their legislative function of deciding it to be expedient for the city and county to pay at the rates named in the bill, and also enter into a fresh contract to pay the sum allowed. This, as we have seen, they have power to do.

The allegation in plaintiff's petition, that the Board of Supervisors allowed the claim as "based" on the contract of 1869, can not influence the decision of this case. The allegation is not one of fact upon which an issue could be framed. The Board of Supervisors allowed the claim, and the defendant here, a ministerial officer, has no discretion to reject it; nor has he any authority to refuse to pass it unless the Board exceeded its powers in allowing it. The only facts capable of proof with respect to the allowance of the claim are proved by the record of the proceedings of the Board, which shows only the presentation of the claim and (after proper publication) the votes of the Supervisors allowing it in whole. That the members of the Board mistook the law, or supposed they were bound by an invalid contract when they voted to allow the claim, does not appear from the record of their proceedings, and can never be made to appear legally until some method is invented for proving the unspoken thoughts of men. The presumption is, that they did their duty; and this presumption is not weakened by the circumstance that they had before them the opinion of the former legal adviser of the Board that the contract of 1869 expired in 1874, nor by the further circumstance that they had also before them the Act of 1876, which absolutely prohibited such a contract as was attempted in 1879.

Neither plaintiff nor defendant in the present action is at liberty to aver or admit the motive which induced members to vote for the allowance of the claim, except so far as the motive can be established by their formal and recorded action. The defendant here can only object that the Board had no power to allow the claim, and—without any intimation or suggestion that too much was, in fact, allowed—we say the members of the Board had the power to allow many times the actual value of the gas consumed if they dared to violate their official duty. They alone had power to determine the real value—their judgment is conclusive—and it is not a function of the Courts to make a contract for them, nor to set aside a contract which they had the capacity to make.

It follows that the authorization upon the Street Light Fund for the payment of the amount allowed was regular.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

MYRICK, McKEE, and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., concurred.

Ross, J., dissenting.

I concur in that portion of the opinion of Mr. Justice McKinstry (and in the reasoning by which it is supported) wherein he holds that the contract relied on by the petitioner is one which the Board of Supervisors had no power to make, and therefore no power to allow any claim by virtue thereof. And for that very reason I can not concur in the judgment. As I read the record, the claim of the petitioner is based on the contract, and its allowance was obtained by virtue of the contract, and not otherwise. The petition itself, in effect, so states, and that fact is so declared in the briefs of the counsel for the respective parties. I entertain no doubt that the and power of gas and the rate to be charged for each thousand feet—the standard illuminating power to be not less than that of sixteen candles, and the rate to be not more than three dollars per thousand cubic feet. It further provides that no person shall furnish gas to any such city, or its inhabitants, of less power or for a greater price, under penalty of one thousand dollars.

In the former opinion we said: “The members of the Board had the power to allow many times the value of the gas consumed if they dared to violate their official duty. They alone had the power to determine the real value—their judgment is conclusive—and it is not a function of the Courts to make a contract for them, nor to set aside a contract which they had the capacity to make.” In view of the provisions of the Act of March 4, 1878, above referred to, it is manifest that the language quoted from the former opinion must be received with the condition that the Board has no power to allow more than three dollars for every one thousand cubic feet of gas furnished.

4. It has been further urged by counsel for respondent that the “demand” should have referred to the act of the Legislature last cited. But a reading of the Act of March 4, 1878, will show that it furnishes no authority for any demand upon the treasury of the city and county.

As we said in the former opinion, the demand of the plaintiff refers to subdivisions of Section 71 of the Consolidation Act, which provide for the creation of a “Street Light Fund,” and for the application of such fund to the lighting of streets and the repairing of lamps and posts. The reference is distinct to the law authorizing the payment of the demand by title, date, and section. It is a more appropriate reference than would have been one of Section 74 of the Consolidation Act, which in general terms confers power on the Board “to provide for lighting the streets.”

5. Further, with respect to the Act of March 4, 1878, we are asked by counsel for respondent to assume—in the absence of any evidence, and of any averment in the pleadings, to that effect—that the Supervisors violated the act by allowing more than three dollars a thousand for gas, and that the officers and agents of plaintiff have subjected themselves to the penalty therein provided. For aught that appears in this case, every requirement of the Act of March 4, 1878, has been fully complied with by the Board of Supervisors.

6. It was suggested by respondent that this Court should set aside the allowance of plaintiff's demand, because the rates allowed are not "reasonable." In aid of this view resort was had to the proposition—supported by innumerable adjudications—"Municipal by-laws must be reasonable. Whenever they appear not to be so, the Court must, as a matter of law, declare them void." The statement as applied to the facts of the case before us involves some confusion of thought and expression. The power of the Board of Supervisors to pay for gas furnished comes from the statute and not from any by-law. The statute confers on the Board the power of determining what is just and reasonable compensation for gas which may be supplied; with the proviso that not more than three dollars per thousand feet shall be allowed. By-laws, or ordinances (an equivalent word), are in the nature of local laws, and the cases established that they must be reasonable; that is to say, they must not be oppressive, nor inconsistent with the principles of the Constitution or of the common law having relation to the liberty of the citizen or the rights of private property. Even with respect to an ordinance apparently unreasonable, the Courts will not hold it to be unreasonable if the Legislature, by a constitutional law, has expressly authorized the municipality to adopt it. If the allowance of a claim can be called an ordinance at all—within the meaning of the rule as to reasonable ordinances—the Consolidation Act in terms empowers the supervisors to allow demands for various supplies, including gas, in such sums as in their judgment may be just. This Court constitutes no part of the municipal government.

The question before us is simply, Does the law confer on the Board of Supervisors the power of deciding what shall be paid for gas supplied—with the single limitation that the maximum allowed shall not exceed three dollars per thousand feet?

If it be true, as stated by counsel, that the Supervisors have allowed or paid too much for gas (a fact of which we can not

The proceeding which is here provided for is somewhat, if not quite, analogous to that provided for in cases where appeals are taken from one Court to another. It is usual in such cases to send a remittitur from the appellate to the lower Court, containing the decision of the former, which the Clerk of the Court below is required to attach to the judgment roll, and enter a minute of the judgment of the appellate Court on the docket, against the original entry. That the duty which he is required to perform is purely ministerial, no one can doubt. Neither can it be doubted that the appellate Court would compel him to perform it, even if the Court of which he was Clerk should order him not to make the proper entry. Nor would an appellate Court, in a proceeding by mandamus to compel the Clerk to make such an entry as the law requires to be made in such cases, permit its jurisdiction to render the decision which it had rendered to be questioned.

A decision by an appellate Court is final when the law declares it shall be final. Is it conceivable that when the Legislature declared that a decision of the Board of Supervisors should be final, it meant that it should not be final? That an appeal should lie from it to the Auditor, and that his decision should be final? Nothing of the kind is expressed in the act, and as the direct reverse of that is expressed, I may safely add that nothing of the kind is implied.

But it is urged that this reasoning will not apply to a case in which the Board of Supervisors have no power to allow a demand — in which their action is ultra vires. It will probably be conceded that the Board has all the power which the law confers upon it, and that while acting within the scope of the powers so conferred, its action can not be held to be, in any sense, ultra vires. Among the powers conferred upon the Board is that of "providing for lighting the streets." That undoubtedly implies the power to pay for it, unless it can be obtained for nothing.

But it is said that they can not pay for what they have had because they contracted for more than the law authorized them to contract for. On the other hand, it is contended that there was no law in force at the time the contract was made which forbade its being made for the period specified in it. And it is further contended that if there was, it would not absolve the municipal corporation from the obligation to pay for what it has consumed. Now, these are questions which arose when the demand of the plaintiff was presented to the Board of Supervisors for allowance. And it had to be presented to and approved by that Board before it could be allowed by the auditor, "or in any manner be recognized or paid." (Sec. 85, Consolidation Act.) And unless so presented within one month after it accrued, if in the power of the holder to present it within that time, it would become forever barred by limitation of time. (Id., sec. 90.) Now, if the Board of Supervisors had no jurisdiction to pass upon that demand, it was worse than idle to present it to them, because they had no power to allow or disallow it. But the question upon which its allowance or disallowance hinged was one which had to be decided before the demand could properly be allowed or disallowed. If the contract was a valid one, the demand was a valid one, and it was the duty of the Board to allow it. And, as before stated, that question had to be decided by the Board. The demand had to be presented to it, and if allowed by it, to be presented to the Auditor. If disallowed by him, the party aggrieved had a right to appeal to the Board, and the decision of the Board on that appeal is by law made final. If that be so, what is the use of having an Auditor? asks the respondent's counsel. If it be not so, what is the use of having a Board of Supervisors? might be asked with quite as much propriety. If it was the design of the Legislature that the decision of the Auditor should be final, it is impossible to conceive why an appeal from that decision should have been provided for, with the further provision that the decision of the appellate tribunal should be final.

I am unable to find anything in the Consolidation Act which, to my mind, indicates an intention to clothe the Auditor with the supervisory powers which it is claimed in this case that he possesses.

It seems to me that he is placed where he is to check what may be termed the hasty or inconsiderate action of the Board of Supervisors upon demands presented to it. That after a demand has been allowed by it, it must be presented to and examined by him before it can be paid. If there are in his last considered here it was agreed by all of the judges who expressed an opinion on the point, that the contract entered into between the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco and the Gas Company, in May, 1879, was invalid, because expressly prohibited by the Act of the Legislature approved April 3, 1876. At that time the subsequent Act of February 25, 1878, was not called to the attention of the Court, and consequently was not considered. It is now urged on behalf of the company that this latter Act repealed by implication the Act of April 3, 1876, and that therefore the contract in question was not prohibited by law, but was one the Board of Supervisors was empowered to make.

An Act of April 3, 1876, is entitled "An Act to confer additional powers upon the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, and upon the Auditor and Treasurer thereof," and is in these words: "If at the beginning of any month any money remains unexpended in any of the funds set apart for maintaining the municipal government of the City and County of San Francisco, and which might lawfully have been expended the preceding month, such unexpended sum or sums may be carried forward and expended by order of the Board of Supervisors in any succeeding month; provided, that said Board of Supervisors shall not hereafter make any contract for any purpose binding said city for a longer period than two years."

The enacting clause of this statute, as will readily be seen, relates entirely to the disposition of certain unexpended funds of the city. It is this enacting clause that it is said was impliedly repealed by the Act of February 25, 1878. And the argument is that such repeal of the enacting clause necessarily repealed the proviso. That depends on the nature of the proviso. Unboubtedly the office of a proviso generally is, as was said by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Minis v. The United States, 15 Pet. 445, "either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extended to cases not intended by the Legislature to be brought within its purview." Yet, that a proviso may contain provisions broader than the enacting clause, and lay down a general rule of a permanent nature applicable to all cases, is impliedly admitted by the Court in the same case. (15 Pet. 445.) In construing a statute, as in construing a contract, deed, or other instrument, the paramount object is to ascertain—from the language employed—the intention of the party making it. What, then, did the Legislature intend when it said, in the proviso to the Act of April 3, 1876, that “said Board of Supervisors shall not hereafter make any contract for any purpose binding said city for a longer period than two years”?

This language, it seems to me, is very explicit, and prohibits the making of any contract, for any purpose, binding the city for a longer period than two years. In no respect can it be satisfied by confining its operation to the unexpended balance of the city funds referred to in the enacting clause. To do this would be to restrict, where the obvious meaning of the language employed admits of no restriction. It was the unmistakable intention of the Legislature, I think, to deprive the Board of Supervisors of the power of entering into any contract which, by its terms, purported to bind the city for any longer period than that named in the proviso. Inasmuch, therefore, as this prohibition was not confined to the subject-matter of the enacting clause, it follows necessarily that the implied repeal of the latter could not have the effect of repealing the prohibition—more especially in view of the rule that repeals by implication are not favored. (Sedgwick on the Construction of Stat. and Const. Law, 2d edition, pages 105, 106.)

The objection made to the Act of 1876, on the ground that the subject of the proviso is not stated in the title of the Act, can not be sustained for the reason that the Act was passed prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, and it is settled by a long line of decisions in this State that the provision in the old Constitution requiring the subject of the Act to be expressed in its title was merely directory. With respect to laws passed under the old Constitution, we are bound by those decisions, although it is otherwise with respect to those passed under the new.

The Board of Supervisors having had no power to make the contract in question, it had no power to allow any claim based upon it. As I read the record in this case, the claim of Gray & Gale, for Respondents.

There was no error in denying the motion for a nonsuit, for two reasons:

1. No sufficient grounds were stated for the motion. The statement that "there was no evidence to sustain the action without specifying wherein the evidence was insufficient" did not aid the Court, and might as well not have been made. (Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 267; McGarrity v. Byington, 12 id. 429; People v. Banvard, 27 id. 470; Sanchez v. Neary, 41 id. 485.)

2. On the merits the motion was properly denied. It was admitted "that the ancestors of plaintiffs owned and possessed the premises in dispute, and that at their death it descended to plaintiffs" (these respondents). If it descended to them from their ancestors, it was their property, unless they had been in some way legally divested of their title. It is not claimed that they were, unless it was by the fraudulent deed obtained by Greenfield and his mortgage to Hefner.

We know of no rule of law or equity whereby the beneficiaries of a trust can thus be deprived of their property while under legal disability and unable to defend their rights.

We do not question the rule of law relied upon by appellant, "that where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the acts of a third party, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer." The rule has no application to this case. The respondents were under age, had nothing directly or indirectly to do with the transaction, and negligence can not be imputed to them.

Hefner took with notice. There was nothing to indicate that there had been any transfer of the property prior to the Safford deed, except the record of the pretended sale of Greenfield to himself, which, under the decisions of this Court, was not voidable only, but absolutely void. Furthermore, it appears from his own testimony that he knew that Judge Safford held the property in trust under the Town Site Acts, and under those acts the patent creating the trust expresses the object and purposes of the trust, and any sale or transfer in violation of such trust was absolutely void. (See Civil Code, § 870; 2 R. S. (U. S.) 435; Statutes of Cal. 1867-8, p. 692; Belmont v. O'Brien, 12 N. Y. 394-405; Briggs v. Davis, 20 id. 21; S. C., 21 id. 577.) This rule applies to purchasers in good faith as well as to any others.

These respondents are the beneficiaries of the trust held by Judge Safford, so far as the property in question is concerned. (Le Roy v. Cunningham, 44 Cal. 599; McCreery v. Sawyer, 52 id. 257, and cases there cited.)

The above cases go no further than to hold that the deed is sufficient evidence as against one who shows no right to the property. In this case it is admitted that the property in dispute was owned and possessed by respondents' ancestors, and that it descended to them. Judge Safford could not sell or convey the property to any one but them. All this was known to appellant Hefner when he took his mortgage, and he must be held to have taken with notice.

THORNTON, J.:

In this action, which was brought to declare the defendant Greenfield a trustee for the plaintiffs of the real property described in the complaint, Hefner intervened, and in his intervention set up the title of Greenfield and a mortgage executed by the latter to him, the judgment of foreclosure in an action against Greenfield to foreclose the mortgage, sale under such judgment by the Sheriff, and a deed by the Sheriff to him.

The cause was tried by the Court, and judgment was rendered against Greenfield, decreeing him a trustee for the plaintiffs, and that he convey to them, and also a judgment that Hefner take nothing by his intervention, and that it be denied.

The Court rendered the following decision:

"1. Mary Greenfield died intestate in said county in April, 1866, and at the time of her death she was the wife of John Greenfield.

"2. That the said Mary Greenfield died seised and possessed in her own right of the lands and premises described in the complaint, and the same were her separate property.

"3. That at her death she left her surviving five minor children, to wit, Lizzie Coffey, Mary Ellen Coffey, John A. J.

of them, to cheat or defraud the intervenor of his interest in the property in controversy herein.

"14. On an accounting these plaintiffs would not, nor would either of them, owe the defendant Greenfield any sum of money whatever for advances made by him for their support and maintenance, or otherwise; nor is there any collusion between the defendant Greenfield and these plaintiffs, or either of them, to conceal the facts or to cheat or defraud the intervenor.

"15. On or about the eighteenth of December, 1869, the said John Greenfield obtained an order from the Probate Court of said county for the sale of the premises, and afterward sold the same and became himself the purchaser at such sale; but the said order of sale was made by said Court without authority of law, the notice required by law not having been given; and the said sale was made under said invalid order, without first giving sufficient notice thereof; the order of sale and the said sale were both null and void, and the said Greenfield did not thereby acquire any right, title, or interest in or to the said property.

"As conclusions of law, I find that the defendant, John Greenfield, took and held the legal title to the lands and premises described in the complaint in trust for the children of the said Mary Greenfield, deceased; that he never has had or held any other right or interest to or in said property, or any part thereof, except as such trustee for the said heirs of Mary Greenfield; that the plaintiffs are entitled to have and receive from the said defendant, John Greenfield, a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of the said lands and premises, and to judgment accordingly."

Hefner appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

On the trial, after the plaintiffs had closed their evidence, Hefner moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiffs had not introduced any testimony tending to sustain the action. The motion was denied and Hefner excepted.

The motion was properly denied. It is settled law in this State that a party moving for a nonsuit should state in his motion precisely the grounds on which he relied, so that the attention of the Court and the opposite counsel may be particularly directed to the supposed defects in the plaintiff's case. (People v. Banward, 27 Cal. 470; Sanchez v. Neary, 41 id. 487; Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 id. 267; McGarrity v. Byington, 12 id. 429.) The general ground above stated did not comply with the rule, and therefore the Court did not err in denying the motion. We have, however, examined the evidence, and are of opinion that there was testimony tending to sustain the action.

It appears from the findings that Mary Greenfield died intestate in April, 1866, and that at the time of her death she was the wife of defendant, John Greenfield; that on her death she left five minor children, who inherited all her property. It was admitted on the trial (as appears from the statement) that the ancestors of the plaintiffs owned and possessed the premises in dispute, and that at their death it descended to the plaintiffs — four of the minor children above referred to, and the administrator of another who died in 1878, before the commencement of this action, are the plaintiffs.

The lots in controversy constituted a part of the lands derived by the town of Oroville under the Act of Congress of March 2, 1857 (see 14 U. S. Statutes at Large, 541), and the Act of the Legislature of this State approved March 30, 1868 (see Stat. 1867-8, p. 692).

On the death of Mary Greenfield, defendant John Greenfield was by the Probate Court of the County of Butte appointed guardian of the minor children above mentioned, except one (William T. Coffey), who was at that time residing in New York, and has never since resided in this State. No guardian was ever appointed for his estate. While John Greenfield was such guardian he obtained this deed mentioned in the findings from Safford, County Judge, in his own name and for his own benefit. Such deed was null and void as to his wards, by the provisions of Section 18 of the Act of the Legislature of March 30, 1868, above referred to (see Stat. 1867-8, p. 698), and was voidable as to William T. Coffey.

By the provisions of the same section any party injured or aggrieved by such action on the part of the guardian is allowed to bring an action for the recovery of his interest, at any time within five years after the discovery of such fraud.

It appears from the findings that the plaintiffs had not known of the deed of the County Judge to defendant Greenfield until the latter part of 1878 or the beginning of 1879. This action was commenced on the 26th of March, 1879.

It will be observed that all of the acts of defendant Greenfield occurred during the minority of the children and heirs of Mary Greenfield. The eldest of these heirs (William T. Coffey) attained his majority in 1875, and the deed of the County Judge to Greenfield was executed in 1878.

It is contended that Hefner occupied the position of an innocent purchaser without notice. Nowhere in his pleadings is any such averment made. On the contrary, the fair inference from the matters set up by him is that, as matter of law, he concluded that the title to the lots in question was in John Greenfield, and, on this conclusion, dealt with him.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are hereby affirmed.

So ordered.

FORMER APPEAL — LAW OF THE CASE — PRACTICE.— The questions presented were determined on former appeal. (See 53 Cal. 709.)

APPEAL by defendant from the judgment of the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District in and for the County of Humboldt. HAYNES, J.

Action of ejectment. This is the second appeal in this case to the Supreme Court. The case on the first appeal will be found reported in 53 Cal. 709. The judgment of the former Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court below, and ordered judgment to be entered on the findings for the plaintiff for the possession of the land, and for rents and profits, as admitted by the defendant's answer unless the plaintiff should elect to have a new trial. On the filing of the remittitur in the Court below, the plaintiff waived his right to have a new trial, and moved the Court for judgment on the findings and the admission in the answer, as ordered by the Supreme Court. Judgment was given accordingly on the fifteenth day of December, 1879. Defendant, on the twenty-eighth day of February, 1880, appealed to this Court.

S. M. Buck, for Appellant.

J. J. DeHaven, for Respondent.

The Court:

The questions now presented were finally determined on the former appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

PATRICK ROGERS ET AL. v. DAVID MAHONEY ET AL.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION — PROBABLE CAUSE — INSTRUCTION.— In an action for malicious prosecution the Court in its charge said: "The jury in an action for malicious prosecution are not to determine whether the facts amount to a probable cause; but it is the province of the Court to determine that question. I have determined that question, gentlemen, when I tell you that the very fact that this man was arrested and liberated in the Police Court gave him a right of action."

Held: The charge was erroneous, in that the Court determined that the facts mentioned established conclusively want of probable cause.

Id.— Id.— CHARGE OF COURT — EXCEPTION — PRACTICE.— Defendants' counsel excepted "to that part of the charge about probable cause," reciting the first sentence employed by the Court in treating of the subject.

Held: The exception to the portion of the charge objected to was sufficiently specific.

APPEAL from a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Twelfth District Court of the City and County of San Francisco. DAINGERFIELD, J.

John M. Burnett and Frederick Hall, for Appellants.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondents.

The Court:

This cause was heard in Department One of this Court, and its opinion filed March 20, 1882. (9 Pac. C. L. J. 220.) Subsequently the Court granted a hearing in Bank, which has been had. We are satisfied with the opinion of the Department; and for the reasons therein given the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

The following is the opinion of Department One, referred to:

After charging at some length, the Court proceeded: "The jury, in an action for malicious prosecution, are not to determine whether the facts amount to a probable cause; but it is the province of the Court to determine that question. I have determined that question, gentlemen, when I tell you that the very fact that this man was arrested and liberated in the Police Court gave him a right of action," etc.

There was such conflict in the evidence as left it proper that the question of the existence of the facts on which the want of probable cause depended should be passed upon by the jury, ~~unless~~ the Court below was correct in holding that the bare facts that the woman called man in the instruction) was "arrested and liberated" in the Police Court gave her a cause of action. The charge was erroneous, in that the Court determined that the facts mentioned established conclusively want of probable cause. The rule as laid down by the Court would certainly simplify the trial of this class of actions. If correct, the law might be thus formulated: First, where plaintiff has been arrested, charged with an offense, and convicted, his action for malicious prosecution will not lie; second, where he has been arrested, charged, and discharged, and these facts are proven to the satisfaction of the Court, the case of plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution is made out, because malice may be inferred from want of probable cause. It needs but to state the second position to show that it can not be successfully maintained.

The exception to the portion of the charge objected to was sufficiently specific under the rule laid down in Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 146; Sill v. Reese, 47 id. 348; and Robinson v. W.

P. R. R. Co., 48 id. 409. The whole charge can not be excepted to generally. The exceptions should be sufficiently specific to call the attention of the Court to the alleged error. Here the counsel excepted "to that part of the charge about probable cause," reciting the first sentence employed by the Court in treating of that subject. We think this was enough.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for new trial.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF H. W. DEAN, DECEASED.

ESTATE OF DECEASED PERSONS — APPEALABLE ORDER.—An order of the Superior Court setting aside a decree of settlement of the final account of an executor and vacating a decree of distribution is not an appealable order.

APPEAL by executor from an order vacating decree of settlement of final account, and decree of distribution, made by Superior Court of the County of Santa Barbara. HINES, J.

Administration of estate of deceased person.

On the thirteenth day of July, 1876, E. W. Dean, the appellant, as one of the executors of the estate of H. W. Dean, deceased, the other executor having removed from the State, rendered to the Probate Court of Santa Barbara County a final account of his administration, and at the same time a petition for final distribution.

On July 25, 1876, the Probate Court made an order purporting to allow the account, distribute the estate, and to discharge the executors.

After finding that the notice of hearing of the settlement of account and petition for distribution was defective, the Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, on the application of Nellie T. Bassett, a party interested in the estate, and after hearing, on September 5, 1881, ordered and adjudged "that the decree made and entered by the Probate Court of the county of Santa Barbara, on the twenty-fifth day of July, 1876, in the matter of the estate of H. W. Dean, deceased, approving, allowing, and settling the final accounts of E. W. Dean, and finally and fully discharging said Dean and Sylvester Trull from the further execution of their trusts, be and the same is hereby vacated and set aside; and that E. W. Dean, executor of the estate of H. W. Dean, deceased, be and is hereby required to file with the clerk of the Court, within thirty days, a further inventory of the property belonging to said estate which has come into his hands, and also an account of all money received by him belonging to the said estate, and for and on account thereof, and of all money paid out by him on account of claims duly presented and allowed."

After settlement of his bill of exceptions, the executor, E. W. Dean, took this appeal.

R. B. Canfield, for Appellant.

W. C. Stratton, for Respondent.

WILLIAM H. BROADRIBB, AN INSANE PERSON, BY H. GOODCELL, JR., HIS GUARDIAN, v. LUTHER C. TIBBETTS ET AL.

APPEALABLE ORDER.—The defendant appealed from an order of the Court below denying his motion for judgment by default against the plaintiff H. Goodcell, Jr., guardian of William Broadribb, insane, for the sum of one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and forty-four cents, and that said Goodcell be removed from the position of guardian, as prayed in defendants' cross-complaint. Held: The order is not an appealable order.

APPEAL by defendant Luther C. Tibbetts from an order of the Superior Court of the County of San Bernardino denying motion for judgment by default on cross-complaint. ROLFE, J.

Action of foreclosure of mortgage. The action was brought against defendant Luther C. Tibbetts and Eliz M., his wife. The transcript contains what purports to be the answer and cross-complaint of the defendant, Luther C., appearing in propria persona as the defendant in the case, but contains no evidence of their service or filing except the following:

"Demand for judgment. (Title of court and cause.) Now comes defendant Luther C. Tibbetts and asks for and demands judgment by default against H. Goodcell, Jr., guardian for William Broadribb, insane, for the sum of one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and forty-four cents, and that said Goodcell be removed from the position of guardian of the estate of William H. Broadribb, or the person and estate of said Broadribb, and that all of said Goodcell's acts as guardian be set aside, and that the note and mortgage now in the hands of the said Goodcell be put into the hands of Edward Broadribb, guardian of the person and estate of said William H. Broadribb, and that Edward Broadribb be authorized and empowered to go on and settle up the estate of William H. Broadribb, and report to this Court upon the pleadings in the before-entitled action, for the following reason: A copy of plaintiff's complaint was served on defendant December 6, 1881, and that within ten days thereafter defendant served on plaintiff's attorneys copy of answer and a cross-complaint, and put the original answer and cross-complaint on file in the Clerk's office of this county, and that more than ten days have expired and plaintiff has neither got an extension of time, demurred to defendant's answer and cross-complaint, made a motion to strike out, nor answered the same. Luther C. Tibbetts, Defendant in person. Indorsed: Filed January 3, 1882."

This demand for judgment was denied by the Court below, and the defendant Luther C. gave notice of appeal. Respondent moved in this Court to dismiss the appeal.

A. B. Paris and R. E. Bledsoe, for the motion.

Luther C. Tibbetts, in propria persona, contra.

The Court:

The appeal in this case is "from the order of said Court [the Superior Court of San Bernardino County] denying defendant's motion for judgment by default against H. Goodcell, Jr., guardian of William Broadribb, insane, for the sum of one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and forty-four cents, and that Goodcell be removed from the position of guardian, as prayed in defendants' cross complaint."

Section 963, C. C. P., enumerates the cases in which an appeal may be taken from a Superior Court to the Supreme Court, and the order above specified is not embraced in said enumeration.

Appeal dismissed.

ET AL.

RECEIVER OF RAILROAD — FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE — REMEDY — MANDAMUS.

— Application for a writ of mandamus to compel the receiver of a railroad appointed in a foreclosure suit to operate the road.

Held: There is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, if the plaintiff is entitled to any, in the cause and court in which the defendant was appointed receiver.

APPLICATION for alternative writ of mandamus.

The affidavit states in effect that by an order made on the twenty-first day of December, 1879, by the Fifteenth District Court in and for the County of San Francisco, in an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon the Placerville and Sacramento Railroad Company, then pending in said Court, and now pending in the Superior Court of said City and County, the defendant was appointed receiver of said railroad and authorized to take possession and control of the same, and that under the said order, which still continues in full force and effect, he entered upon and took possession and control of the said railroad, and of all of its rights, privileges, and franchises, and thence hitherto has and still does keep and retain possession of the same, but that he has failed and refused, and still fails and refuses, to operate the same.

No briefs on file.

The Court:

The application for the alternative writ of mandate is denied. There is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, if the petitioner is entitled to any, in the cause and court in which McLane was appointed receiver. (C. C. P.; § 1086.) The petitioner should make his application to that forum.

DAMAGES FOR FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

APPEAL by the defendant, the San Bernardino Gas Light Company, from the judgment of the Superior Court of the County of San Bernardino, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. ROLFE, J.

Action of foreclosure of mechanics' lien.

The action was brought to foreclose a lien for material furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant Davis, as a contractor, in the construction of a building belonging to the defendant, the Gas Light Company. The defendant Davis made no defense. The Gas Light Company appeared and answered. Upon a trial being had, judgment went for the plaintiff.

Boyer & Gibson, for Appellant.

Paris & Goodcell, for Respondent.

The Court:

The only issue presented by the answer of the defendant, the San Bernardino Gas Light Company, was as to the filing by plaintiff of his claim. The findings of the Court below are full as to the filing of the claim. There is no merit in the appeal; it was evidently taken for delay. The judgment is affirmed, with twenty-five per cent. damages.

APPEAL from a judgment for the defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. WILSON, J.

A petition for hearing in Bank was filed in this case after judgment, and denied.

L. Aldrich and E. D. Wheeler, for Appellant.

Mich. Mullany, for Respondent.

THE COURT:

The action is brought to recover the possession (or the value thereof) of certain grain sown and harvested by defendant upon lands to which he claimed title, and of which he had the actual adverse and exclusive possession. The action can not be maintained.

In Halleck, Executor, v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 574, a demurrer to the complaint had been sustained in the Court below upon the ground that the complaint showed the title to land to be involved in such sense as precluded the action. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's testator was seised and possessed of certain real estate at the time of his death, and that the executor, ever since his appointment, had been in possession of the same; that persons (whose names were not designated) had entered upon the lands without authority and cut down timber growing thereon, to the amount of three hundred cords; that defendant afterward also entered upon the premises, without authority, and removed the wood thus cut, and still detained it, etc. There was no suggestion or pretense that the defendant, or any other person than plaintiff and his testator, ever had possession of the land on which the wood was cut.

It was said by the Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment of the District Court, that the complaint in Halleck v. Mixer did not show title to the land to be involved in such sense as to preclude the action. "In all cases where the owner of real estate sues for property severed from the freehold, the action must rest upon the proof in the first instance of title or right of possession (or possession) taken previous in the plaintiff; and, if the position of the respondent were tenable, no action for the recovery of said property would ever lie. If the complaint alleged the title, it would, upon his argument, be demurrable; if it merely alleged ownership of the property, the party would be excluded on the trial from the proof of his title, or be nonsuited on its production. The true rule is this: The plaintiff out of possession can not sue for property severed from the freehold, when the defendant is in possession of the premises from which the property was severed—holding them adversely in good faith under claim and color of title; in other words, the personal action can not be made the means of litigating and determining the title to the real property as between conflicting claimants. But the rule does not exclude the proof of title on the part of the plaintiff in other cases, for it is, as we have already observed, upon such proof that the right of recovery rests. * * *

A mere intruder or trespasser is in no position to raise the question of title with the owner so as to defeat the action." The Court then cites with approval Harlan v. Harlan, 15 Pa. St. 513.

This was the case of Harlan v. Harlan. The plaintiff was the purchaser of certain real estate, being a cotton manufactory. Certain machinery in the mill passed to him as a part of the freehold. A fixture, part of the machinery, was detached by the former owner, and it was held that the purchaser of the real estate could maintain replevin for it.

Certain cases were cited by counsel as authority to the point that the action would not lie; but Roger, J., commenting upon those cases, pointed out the distinction between them and the case then at bar.

In the case of Harlan v. Harlan, the title to the real property was not disputed by the defendant, and the Court suggested that it might be that the mere assertion of a title would avail little. "The Court looks to the substance, and where it appears in truth it is a trial of title, then it is properly ruled that replevin is not the proper action, but that it must be tried in another form."

It was said in Elliott v. Powell, 10 Watts, 453, as was also said in Halleck v. Mixer, supra, it is a mistaken supposition that title to real estate may not be incidentally tried in a transitory action, much less that replevin can not be maintained where the plaintiff can make title to the chattel only by making title to the land from which it was severed. (See also Heath v. Ross, 12 Johns. 140; Goff v. Hawks, 5 J. J. Marsh. 341; Player v. Roberts, Wm. Jones, 243.) The cases cited by the Pennsylvania Court in Harlan v. Harlan indicate the true rule. In Mather v. Trinity Church, 3 Serg. & R. 509, S. C., 8 Am. Dec. 663, it was ruled that trover for gravel from land does not lie by one who has the right of possession against one who has the actual adverse possession "and sets up title to it" — that conflicting claims of title can not be tried in the action of trover. To the same effect, Baker v. Howell, 6 Serg. & R. 476; Brown v. Caldwell, 10 id. 114; S. C., 13 Am. Dec. 660. The cases go to the point that where the property sued for has been severed from plaintiff's land, he can show his ownership of the chattel by showing his ownership of the land unless defendant has, and had when the property was severed from the freehold, adverse possession of the land, claiming title thereto. Of course, to exclude plaintiff's right to sue for the personal property, defendant must have the adverse possession, claiming title. If a tenancy or quasi tenancy exists, the defendant and occupant not claiming to be owner of the personal property, as owner of the realty, the reason for precluding the personal action does not exist. (Harlan v. Harlan, supra; Farrant v. Thompson, 5 Barn. & Ald. 826; Mooers v. Wait, 3 Wend. 104; S. C., 20 Am. Dec. 667.)

But we find nowhere (except in Kimball v. Lohmas, 31 Cal. 159), that, with respect to the right of a plaintiff to resort to replevin, a distinction exists between a defendant in adverse possession of the land, claiming title by writing, and a defendant in adverse possession, claiming title without any written foundation for the claim. The distinction seems to have been suggested by a phrase employed in the opinion of Halleck v. Mixer, with reference to a holding adversely "in good faith," etc.

But the case now before us differs in two respects from Kimball v. Lohmas: 1. The defendant claims a right to the possession under color of title. 2. The grain, the subject of the present controversy, was sown while defendant was in the adverse possession of the land. It did not exist, even potentially, while plaintiff had possession of the land — if plaintiff ever had possession of the land.

The present is also unlike the case of Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513. There the hay, the subject of controversy, was cut from the meadows set in grass by plaintiff's testator. And besides, in that case, the District Court of the State, "having given the law on the subject very clearly" (in favor of plaintiff's right to maintain the action), and inasmuch as it related to "a doctrine not affected by the Constitution or laws of the United States," the Supreme Court of the United States held, they "must take it to have been correctly expounded to the jury." (96 U. S. 515.)

There is no precedent for an action like the present, and no good reason why this should be made a precedent.

We can not say the Court abused its discretion in disallowing plaintiff's motion to file a second amended complaint. It does not appear from the transcript that any proposed amendment was served or presented, or that the notice of motion pointed out the precise amendment which plaintiff would ask leave to make or file.

ACTION TO RECOVER PERSONAL PROPERTY — CROP GROWING ON LAND HELD ADVERSELY.

APPEAL from a judgment for the defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. WILSON, J.

Mich. Mullany, for Respondents.

The COURT:

On the authority of Martin v. Thompson, supra, judgment and order affirmed.

[No. 6,861. — In Bank.]

December 22, 1882.

JOHN BRICKELL v. DAVID F. BATCHELDER ET AL.

FORECLOSURE — MORTGAGE — PROMISSORY NOTE — INTEREST — DEFAULT — PRE-MATURE COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.— When the interest on a promissory note is made payable monthly, and the note contains the additional clause following: "Any interest remaining due and unpaid shall be added monthly to the principal, and bear interest at the same rate;" and where the mortgage securing said note provides that in case default shall be made in the payment of the principal sum, or the interest thereon, or any part thereof, according to the terms of the note, the mortgagee is empowered to proceed to sell the mortgaged premises in the manner prescribed by law; and further, that out of the proceeds of such sale the mortgagee shall retain the principal sum, with interest, costs, and charges of sale, and attorney's fees; and further, where a subsequent mortgage, between the same parties, contained the stipulation that all arrearages of monthly interest then existing, or thereafter to accrue upon the prior note, shall bear interest from the date respectively at which they have accrued, or shall accrue, at a higher rate than that expressed in the note—

Held: Taking the terms of said note and mortgage together, the mortgagee has the right on default in the monthly payment of the interest, to commence an action to foreclose.

Id. — SAME.— Held, further, the power given in the mortgage "to proceed to sell in the manner prescribed by law," is in substance the same as a power to proceed to sell by means of an action to foreclose.

MORTGAGE — CONSTRUCTION.— The clause in the mortgage, giving the right to sell in case of default, refers to a default in the payment of interest, not to a default in adding it, when unpaid, to the principal; the right to dispose of the interest due and unpaid, in the mode prescribed in the note, was given to the mortgagee, not to the mortgagors; the mortgagee might delay it, or waive it, but a delay in exercising this right could not be construed as depriving him of it.

CASE DISTINGUISHED. — The clause in the mortgage, above quoted, is entirely unlike that in Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Johnson, 58 Cal. 99.

MORTGAGE — CONSTRUCTION. — The stipulation contained in the subsequent mortgage aforesaid merely refers to the rate of interest which the arrearages of interest referred to in it are to bear, increasing the rate, and nothing more. The clauses in the mortgages and note are to be considered together.

ID. — TAXES — DEFAULT. — Where a mortgage contains the covenants, that the mortgagors shall pay all taxes upon the mortgaged premises, and that, in default thereof by them, the mortgagee shall be empowered to sell, such default gives the mortgagee the right to proceed to foreclose, if there is no other. It makes no difference that the mortgagee, has the right to pay the taxes and charge them to the mortgagors, the same to become part of the mortgage lien. The right to foreclose is not waived or lost, or the default condoned by the mortgagee on his paying the taxes and charging the mortgagor.

ID. — ID. — ID. — CASE CRITICISED AND DISTINGUISHED. — Williams v. Townsend, 81 N. Y. 411.

CONSIDERATION. — In drawing instruments of any kind where a consideration is essential, it is not necessary, nor is it the practice, to repeat the consideration upon the insertion of every several promise or covenant. Where a sufficient consideration is expressed, none can be implied.

CONTRACT OF MARRIED WOMAN. — Section 167 of the Civil Code, under which a married woman was unable to make a contract for the payment of money, was changed by the Legislature of 1873-4, taking effect July 1, 1874, so that a married woman could make such contract, and bind herself by note and mortgage. A mortgage executed by a married woman June 1, 1874, was binding upon her.

JURY. — The point whether the recognition by a married woman of an obligation for the payment of money, void when made, after the disability to so contract had been removed, did not make the obligation binding upon her, noticed but not decided.

APPEAL from a judgment for the plaintiff in the Twenty-third District Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco. THORNTON, J.

Sol. Hydenfeldt, Jr., S. Hydenfeldt, and Hydenfeldt & Jefferson, for Appellant.

The Court erred in overruling the demurrer.

At the time the note and mortgage for thirty-six thousand dollars were made and delivered, June 1, 1874, the defendant, Maria Baker Batchelder, was and still is a married woman, and could make no contract for the direct payment of money. (C. C., § 167, before repeal.) Neither could she dispose of the community property, for the law placed the control and disposition of it during life and cover-ture in the husband. Therefore, she could, at the time this note and mortgage were made, make a contract of such character only in reference to her separate estate; and in order for the complaint to state a cause of action against her, it should contain an allegation that the contract was made in reference to her separate estate or property, and the condition of the property should also be stated. There being no allegation of this kind, the complaint is fatally defective. (Coats v. McKee, 26 Ind. 223; Robson & Allen v. Shelton & Husband, 14 La. An. 712; Sexton v. Fleet, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.), 8-10; Murray et al. v. Keyes et al., 85 Pa. St. 384; Wallace v. Bippin, 2 Bay (S. C.), 112; Trimble v. Miller, 24 Tex. 214; Covingtons v. Burleson, 28 id. 368.)

The defendant, Maria Baker Batchelder, being unable to make a contract for the direct payment of money on June 1, 1874, simply joining in the note with her husband, made it the obligation of the husband alone. (Shartzer v. Love, 40 Cal. 93; Brown v. Orr et al., 29 id. 120; Althof v. Conheim, 38 id. 233.)

The Court erred in overruling the demurrer, for the further reason that at the time of the commencement of this action nothing was due on the thirty-six-thousand-dollar note of June 1, 1874, and therefore the suit to foreclose the mortgage was premature. (Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Johnson, 53 Cal. 99; Williams v. Townsend, 81 N. Y. 411; Jones on Mortgages, 1175.)

The note and mortgage of June 1, 1874, upon a legitimate construction, do not authorize a foreclosure upon the breach of any condition before the first day of June, 1879. But if there should be any doubt in this, then the clause above quoted in the third mortgage must of a certainty set it at rest. A new contract is made, increasing the rate of interest, and expressly provides what shall be done, not only with the interest in default, but for the interest that shall accrue, viz., all interest in default, whether past or future, shall bear interest at the rate of one per cent., and be added to the principal. (Haggerty v. The Allaire Works, 5 Sandf. 230-237.)

Again, to give the construction asked for by counsel for respondent to this mortgage is to declare in favor of a penalty, and, in effect, it would work a forfeiture of the contract.

Now, it is a universal rule of courts of equity never to enforce either penalty or a forfeiture. (Story's Eq. Jur., vol. 2, sec. 1319.)

"Contracts under which a forfeiture is claimed to have accrued should be construed strictly, and the facts urged in support of the forfeiture ought to be clear and explicit, and not be left to inference or argument." (Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 56; Colman v. Clements, 23 id. 248; Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 id. 237; Waring v. Crow, 11 id. 367.)

By increasing the rate from ten to twelve per cent. upon the interest in arrears, and all interest to accrue and be in arrears on the mortgage of June 1, 1874, the mortgagee was increasing and adding to his debt the sum of eight hundred and seventy-five dollars. This is the consideration by which the clause in the mortgage of February 20, 1877, is governed.

Parties can make a certain agreement between themselves for a consideration referable to this agreement alone, and at the same time bind themselves in the contract to carry out or extend the terms of a foreign contract, based upon an entirely different and separate consideration. (Parsons on Contracts, 5th edition, vol. 2, page 217.)

The Court erred in giving judgment against the defendant, Maria Baker Batchelder, for deficiency after sale. (Butler v. Baber, 54 Cal. 178.)

The mortgage gives the mortgagee no right to consider the whole principal sum and interest due, with the right to foreclose upon default in the payment of taxes by the mortgagors. (Jones on Mortgages, vol. 2, sec. 1175; Williams v. Townsend, 31 N. Y. 411, 412.)

E. J. and J. H. Moors, for Respondent.

Defendants' demurrers were all properly overruled.

If default is alleged, in that interest was not paid, or that taxes were neglected to be paid by defendants and were paid by plaintiff, and not repaid to him, does it not plainly follow that the right to foreclose and sell at once arose upon such default?

Defendants' neglect to pay the taxes, and their payment by plaintiff to prevent the sale of the mortgaged premises for such taxes, gave plaintiff the complete right of action to foreclose at once, and collect the whole debt. How otherwise can plaintiff be "empowered to sell the premises above described in the manner prescribed by law, and out of the proceeds of such sale retain the above amount of $36,000, with interest," etc.?

The decisions applicable to this branch of the case are: Whitcher v. Webb, 44 Cal. 127; Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Johnson, 53 id. 499; McKissick v. Cannon, 4 P. C. L. J. 285.

The mortgage is exactly in accordance with the approved forms in like cases. (See Spaulding's Law Encyclopedia and Forms, ed. 1887, p. 345.)

The general principles applicable to this case, in this regard, are also laid down in 1 Jones on Mortgages, §§ 71-77; Chick v. Willets, 2 Kan. 384, 385; id. 54; Rubens v. Prindle, 44 Barb. 336; Broderick v. Smith, 26 id. 539; 37 id. 60; 15 How. Pr. 434; 24 id. 400.

Judgment was properly entered on the complaint, and answers upon the ground stated, because the answers failed to deny the facts alleged. They do not deny the genuineness and due execution of the notes and mortgages. "In such cases there can be no issue of fact upon the tenor or effect of the instrument." (Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 473, 474; Sacramento Co. v. Bird, 31 id. 67-73; Corcoran v. Doll, 32 id. 83-88.)

Every denial is of some conclusion of law, made to negative, not some fact stated by the complainant, but some legal conclusion only. Such denials are mere evasions. (Lighter v. Menzel, 35 Cal. 460; Burke v. Table Mountain W. Co., 12 id. 403, 407; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 id. 22, 27; Nelson v. Murray, 23 id. 338; Lightner v. Menzel, 35 id. 452; Castro v. Wetmore, 16 id. 379; Christy v. Dana, 42 id. 174; Kinney v. Osborne, 14 id. 113; Towdy v. Ellis, 22 id. 659; Higgins v. Wortell, 18 id. 330, 333.)

The notes and mortgages now before this Court, having, as they do, the signatures of both husband and wife, properly acknowledged and certified, are valid and binding on both parties and on the property for all purposes, and would have so been at any time for more than twenty-five years past. It matters not whether the property in question belonged to the husband or to the wife, or was that of the community. (Marlow v. Barlew, 53 Cal. 456; Perry v. Kelley, 52 id. 334.)

As part consideration for the increase of two per cent. per year on the arrearages of interest, the mortgagee was lending $2,000 additional. Will it reasonably be inferred that he lent this further sum and waived his right to foreclose and get his principal of $36,000 on default of payment of interest, taxes, etc., for so paltry an advantage, and yet carefully guard that right on all the inferior sums in all subsequent mortgages, and notably in the very mortgage containing the supposed waiver? Should not the waiver be explicit, and not left to inference or argument? (Racouillat v. Sansevain, 32 Cal. 376; McNeil v. Shirley, 38 id. 202; Saunders v. Clark, 29 id. 299; Civil Code, §§ 1697, 1698.)

THORNTON, J.:

This is an appeal prosecuted by defendants from a judgment of foreclosure in an action brought on several notes and mortgages executed to secure their payment. The notes are four and the mortgages three in number, and are all set forth in hæc verba in the complaint.

It is contended on behalf of appellants that the action was prematurely brought; that when it was instituted nothing was due, at least on the note and mortgage of first of June, 1874. In the discussion of this contention, our attention is called to the following matters which are disclosed by the record. The note first in order of time is in these words:

"SAN FRANCISCO, June 1, 1874.

"$36,000. Five years after date, without grace, for value received, we jointly and severally promise to pay to John Brickell, or his order, the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars in gold coin of the United States, of the standard fineness now established by law, with interest thereon, payable monthly at the rate of ten per cent. per annum in like coin until paid. Any interest remaining due and unpaid shall be added monthly to the principal, and bear interest at the same rate. This note is secured by mortgage of even date herewith.

"DAVID F. BATCHELDER,

"MARIA BAKER BATCHELDER."

And to the following stipulation, among others which appear in the mortgage above referred to:

"But in case default shall be made in the payment of the said principal sum or the interest thereon, or any part thereof, according to the terms of said promissory note, or in the performance of any of the covenants hereinafter expressed, then said party of the second part, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, are hereby empowered to proceed to sell the premises above described, with all the appurtenances, in the manner prescribed by law.

"And out of the money proceeding from such sale, the party of the second part shall retain the above amount of thirty-six thousand dollars, with interest as aforesaid, together with the costs and charges of such sale, and two per cent. upon the said principal and interest for lawyers' fees, which shall become a debt from said party of the first part upon filing the complaint in foreclosure, and the amount of all such other charges as are herein mentioned; and the overplus, if any there be, shall be paid by the party making such sale on demand to the party of the first part, heirs and assigns."

In February, 1877, a note was executed by defendants to plaintiff, of which the following is a copy:

"SAN FRANCISCO, February 20, 1877.

"$2,000. On the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine (1879), without grace, for value received, we jointly and severally promise to pay John Brickell, or order, two thousand dollars in gold coin of the United States, with interest thereon until paid, at the rate of one and a quarter per cent. per month, payable monthly in gold coin. Any interest which remains due and unpaid shall be added monthly to the principal, form part thereof, and bear interest at the same rate.

"DAVID F. BATCHELDER,

"MARIA BAKER BATCHELDER."

A mortgage was executed by defendants to the payee of this note to secure payment, bearing the same date with the note, containing the following stipulation, inter alia, to which we are directed, and on which reliance is placed:

"It is further agreed and understood that all arrearages of monthly interest now existing, or hereafter to accrue, upon that certain note and mortgage made by said David F. Batchelder and Maria B. Batchelder to said John Brickell, dated June 1, 1874, (mortgage recorded in Liber 407 of Mortgages, at page 180, City and County of San Francisco), shall bear interest from the date respectively at which they have accrued, or shall accrue, at one per cent. per month, the same to be added monthly to the principal thereof."

In regard to the note and mortgage of June 1, 1874, we are of opinion that, taking the terms of the note and the stipulation above quoted from the mortgage, the plaintiff had the right, on default in the monthly payment of the interest, to commence an action to foreclose. The interest by the terms of the note was payable monthly, and there was a default in its payment, so alleged and not denied.

It would be difficult to detect any difference between a stipulation empowering a mortgagee to proceed to foreclosure on such default, and one giving authority on like default "to proceed to sell" "in the manner prescribed by law." The law prescribes but one mode of sale in the case of mortgaged property, and that is at public outcry, by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment of foreclosure. (C. C. P., §§ 684, 726, 744.) The power given in the mortgage by the clause just above quoted is to proceed to sell in the manner prescribed by law—which, in our judgment, is in substance the same as a power to proceed to sell by means of an action to foreclose. The power to proceed to sell in the manner prescribed by law being given, all means given by law to render such power effectual are also conferred; that is, all means necessary to effectuate a sale in the mode established by law are given. The power to use the lawful means necessary and proper to carry out the express power is conferred and given by an implication as strong and clear as if it was expressed in so many words. (C. C., § 1656.) This is a familiar and well-established rule in the construction of powers. (See Story on Agency, Secs. 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 73; Wharton on Agency, Sec. 187.)

Let it be observed here that the choice of means is not left at large. It is limited to that which the law furnishes, and such means the plaintiff is allowed by the language of the contract to adopt. But it is urged that the proper interpretation of the language of the note shows that such remedy was not to be allowed to plaintiff; that his only right, if the interest was not paid every month, was to add it to the principal and to have interest on it at the rate which the principal bore. To admit the soundness of this position would be to lay out of view the terms of the note, which binds the makers to pay the interest monthly. It would be to discard and reject the rule which requires one in looking for the true meaning of an instrument to accord to every word its just and proper meaning. (C. C., §§ 1639-1641; Broom's Leg. Maxims, 555 — Ex-antecedentibus, etc.)

Some stress is laid on the words "according to the terms of said promissory note," and attention is invoked to the use of the plural "terms," and it is said that "terms" refer as well to the clause of the note relating to the interest remaining due and unpaid, that "it shall be added monthly to the principal," etc., as to the clause relating to the payment of interest monthly. But it should be observed that the clause in the mortgage refers to a default in the payment of the interest or any part thereof, not to a default in adding it when unpaid to the principal. Indeed, such a default must refer to something to be done by the mortgagors. It could scarcely refer to something with which the mortgagors had nothing to do. The right to dispose of the interest due and unpaid in the mode prescribed in the note was given to the plaintiff mortgagee, not to the mortgagors. A failure to so dispose might arise from the concession of the plaintiff, and not from any default of the mortgagors, except by a default in paying the interest monthly. The language of the note and mortgage gave to the mortgagee the right on default to proceed to foreclose. He might delay it or waive it, but a delay in exercising this right could not be construed as depriving him of it.

The clause in the mortgage above quoted is entirely unlike that in Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Johnson, 53 Cal. 99. This dissimilarity will be apparent on comparing the clauses in the respective mortgages. Hence, the decision in that case can not rule the case under consideration.

But it is said that the clause above set forth in the mortgage of the twentieth of February, 1877, entirely alters the agreement made by the note and mortgage of June 1, 1874, and that the effect of such clause is to postpone the payment of the note of June 1, 1874, with all unpaid interest on it, until the maturity of the note, five years after its date.

If the language is any indication of intent — and we must hold it to be indicative of the intent of or thought in the minds of the parties — we can not perceive how any such conclusion can be reached. If we collate and compare the note and stipulations in the respective mortgages, it must clearly appear that the stipulation of 1877 merely refers to the rate of interest which the arrearages of interest referred to in it are to bear — increases the rate from ten per cent. per annum to twelve per cent. per annum, and nothing more. The interest on the note at the rate fixed on is still to be paid monthly, and if it was not paid monthly, the party on whom the obligation rested to pay was still in default, and the stipulation in the mortgage of June 1, 1874, applied to it, and authorized the plaintiff to proceed to foreclose by suit. The agreement that the interest at the increased rate should be added to the principal remains unchanged, except the modification introduced by the clause in the mortgage of 1877.

In fine, the stipulation in the mortgage of 1877 only affects the note of June 1, 1874, and only affects that part referring to the interest not paid when it fell due monthly. It was only intended to modify the term of the note in relation to interest remaining due and unpaid, which was to be added to the principal. The effect was to modify the note, and that only in the particular above referred to, and to make it read as it had originally down to and including the words “payable monthly at the rate of ten per cent. per annum in like coin until paid,” and as to the remainder of the note, to read, “all arrearages of monthly interest now existing, or hereafter to accrue on this note, shall bear interest from the date respectively at which they have accrued, or shall accrue, at one per cent. per month, the same to be added monthly to the principal thereof. This note is secured by mortgage of even date herewith.”

We must construe these clauses and the first note together. This is the rule which ordinary foresight would indicate in order that the intent of the parties might be detected. The rule on this subject is well established by decided cases. They are numerous. We will refer to some of them: Doe v. Whitehead, 2 Burr. 704; Davies v. Bush, 1 McCle. & Yo. 58; Crop v. Norton, 2 Atk. 74; Osborn v. Phelps, 19 Conn. 63, 39; Isham v. Morgan, 9 id. 374; Thompson v. McClenachan, 17 Serg. & R. 110; Jackson v. Dunsbagh, 1 Johns. Cas. 92; King v. King, 7 Mass. 496; Chickering v. Lovejoy, 13 id. 51; Perry v. Holden, 22 Pick. 269; Stow v. Tift, 15 Johns. 458; S. C., 8 Am. Dec. 266; 2 Smith's L. C. 517. This rule is adopted as part of our statute law by the provisions of the Civil Code, Section 1642: "Several contracts relating to the same matters, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially the one transaction, are to be taken together," and when this is done the other rules in relation to interpretation must be applied, observing that "however broad may be the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract." (C. C., § 1648.)

The clause in the first mortgage, giving the right to foreclosure, remained and was applicable to the modified terms of the note, and the clause in the mortgage of 1877 was a recognition by all the parties of the note and mortgage of June 1, 1874, as subsisting and valid from 1877, with the modification from the last date. We can not see that construction can make this matter any plainer. Further discussion would be "wasteful and ridiculous excess." No extent of argument could make it any plainer than the words employed make it.

Again, it is covenanted by the parties to the mortgage of June 1, 1874, "that the party of the first part [the mortgagors] shall pay all taxes upon the above-described premises," etc., and if the party of the first part, "in the performance of any of the covenants hereinafter expressed" (of which the covenant in relation to the payment of taxes, etc., is one), should make default, then the party of the second part (mortgagee) is empowered to sell the mortgaged premises. (See this stipulation fully set forth above.)

There was default in payment of taxes for the fiscal year 1877-8, amounting to $580.45. Such default gave the plaintiff the right to proceed to foreclose, if there was no other. It makes no difference that the mortgagee had the right to pay the taxes and charge them to the mortgagors, the same to become part of the mortgage lien. The right to foreclosure was not waived or lost, or the default condoned by the mortgagee plaintiff on his paying the taxes and charging the mortgagors as above, nor by the stipulation which appears above in the mortgage of 1877.

If the case of Wilhams v. Townsend, 81 N. Y. 411, is in conflict with what is stated above, we cannot accept it as law here, whatever it may be in New York. In that case an action was brought to enjoin the sale of mortgaged premises situated in the city of Buffalo, under a statutory foreclosure. The plaintiff, on the eighth of May, 1853, executed to assignor of defendant a bond and mortgage to secure the payment of $2,640, in ten years from the date thereof, with annual interest. The mortgage contained a condition as follows: "And shall also pay all assessments, taxes, and charges on said premises to be charged on the same, and in case of default in paying the same," the mortgagee and her representatives might discharge such assessments, taxes, and charges, and collect the same, with interest, from the time of such payment under the mortgage, in the manner specified in the condition of the bond.

The condition in the bond relating to the question in this case was in these words: "And shall also pay all assessments, taxes and charges on the premises described in the mortgage bearing even date herewith and collateral hereto, and in case of any default in paying the same, the said" (obligees) "may discharge said assessments, taxes, and charges, and collect the same, with interest from the time of payment, as part of this bond and the said mortgage." The mortgage contained a power of sale, providing that if default should be made in the payment of all or any part of the said principal sum of $2,640, or the assessments, taxes, and charges, as aforesaid, or of the interest thereof, at the time or times when the same ought to be paid, in such case the mortgagees were empowered to sell the same at public vendue, etc., and out of the moneys arising from such sale to keep and retain in their hands the said sum of $2,640, together with such assessments, taxes, and charges, as shall have been paid by them, together with all costs, charges, and expenses on account of such sale or sales. In 1856, taxes amounting to $33.66 were assessed by the city of Buffalo on the mortgaged premises, for which they were sold at auction by the comptroller of the city on the twenty-seventh of May, 1857, for taxes, interest, and expenses, then amounting to $36.75. The premises were bid off by one Viele as agent of defendant, and certificates in pursuance of the charter were issued to Viele, who took them in his own name for convenience of transfer. On the first of August, 1857, the defendant commenced a foreclosure under the statute by advertisement in one of the Buffalo newspapers. There was nothing then due of the principal or interest secured by the mortgage. Before the day of sale mentioned in the advertisement, plaintiff paid to the proper officer the amount legally necessary to redeem from the tax sale, and defendant refusing to discontinue the proceedings for foreclosure, the plaintiff commenced this action to restrain the sale. The plaintiff had judgment at special term, which was affirmed by the general term, and defendant appealed.

The opinion of the Court by Davis, J., in which all concurred, announces in the opening sentence this proposition, that, "by the condition of the bond and mortgage, the defendant undoubtedly had a right, after failure by the plaintiff to pay the taxes assessed on the mortgaged premises, to pay and discharge the same, and thereupon to collect the amount so paid by suit upon the bond or by foreclosure of the mortgage." It is then held that a purchase at a tax sale is not a payment of the tax so as to enable the mortgagee to proceed for a foreclosure, and not being paid, the action could not be maintained. This proposition is discussed at much length—which really disposed of the question on which the case was made to turn by the Court. The learned Judge then proceeds: "But it is urged that the failure of the plaintiff to pay the tax was a breach of the condition of the mortgage, and gave defendant a right to foreclose and collect the whole amount secured. There is no clause of the mortgage making the whole sum due on failure to pay the interest, or on breach of any condition. The clause which authorizes the retention by the mortgagee of the whole amount secured after a sale of the premises does not have the effect claimed for it; nor do I think it would countervail the provision of the statute which requires a sale in parcels, when that is practicable, and prohibits a sale of more than sufficient to pay the amount actually due, with the expenses of sale. (3 R. S., 5th ed., p. 800, § 6.) But no right to foreclose would accrue upon a simple failure of the mortgagor to pay the taxes. To give that right, it is essential that the holder of the mortgage shall have paid off and discharged the assessment or tax, otherwise no money has become due which the mortgagee is entitled to retain on a sale. The language of the mortgage settles this, for it provides that 'such assessments, taxes, and charges as shall have been paid by them' may be retained."

It will be observed that the learned Judge states, "there is no clause in the mortgage making the whole sum due on failure to pay the interest or on breach of any condition. The clause which authorizes the retention by the mortgagee of the whole amount secured after a sale of the premises does not have the effect claimed for it."

The clause in the mortgage is set forth above. It is in the power of sale, which provides that if default be made in the payment of taxes, etc. (see above), then and in such case the mortgagees were empowered to sell at public vendue, and out of the moneys arising from such sale or sales, to keep and retain in their hands the said sum of two thousand six hundred and forty dollars, together with such assessments, taxes, etc.

If such language does not authorize a party to proceed for a statutory foreclosure on failure to pay taxes by the mortgagor, it would be difficult to find any sufficient reason why. Words could not make it plainer, unless it be held that a power "to sell the premises at public vendue" does not vest such authority. But it is said by the learned Judge, there is no clause of the mortgage which makes the whole sum due, on failure to pay the interest, or on breach of any condition. As to what is said of interest, it may be laid out of view, as all the interest had been paid, and the statement as to interest is correct; but as to the breach of any condition, the Judge was surely mistaken. There was a condition in the mortgage to pay all taxes, etc., and the right to sell the mortgaged premises was given on failure by the mortgagor to pay. How then can it be said it was not given on breach of any condition? But it is said the clause which authorizes the collection of the moneys arising from the sales does not make the whole amount due, and there is no clause in the mortgage to make it due. Then the mortgagee is authorized to proceed to sell and retain out of the proceeds all the principal and taxes, etc., and still there is nothing due. What does such language mean? Is it to be discarded as meaningless? No repugnancy appears which would compel its being disregarded. Is it not the fair construction that the default occurring, the mortgagee is allowed to proceed for the whole amount of principal as due, to collect it and apply it as directed? Is not this implied as strongly and clearly as language could make it, and is it not true that "all things that in law or usage are considered as incidental to a contract, or as necessary to carry it into effect, are implied therefrom"? (C. C., § 1656. The last clause of this section is not applicable here, and is not quoted.) If he is allowed to sell, certainly the whole is due under the rule just above quoted.

Further in regard to this case: no right to foreclose, it is said in the opinion, on simple failure of the mortgagor to pay the taxes. Why? The clause relating to the power of sale above quoted gives it in clear and plain words. It seems to us that the Judge was mistaken in saying the right of the mortgagee to proceed to sell only arose on payment of the taxes by her. The language employed speaks another way. The right to retain was given when paid by her. The mortgagee was not bound to pay the taxes. The judgment so holds (Williams v. Townsend, 31 N. Y. 415), and the right to retain was only given where it was necessary to enable her to retain, i. e., when she paid. It was useless for any purpose until she had paid. The only reason this term as to payment of taxes was inserted was to make it clear that the mortgagee might retain when she did pay them. It was not to abridge the right to proceed to sell before given, but to give authority to retain when paid, which payment might occur when the proceedings were pending, and which the mortgagee might be compelled to make to protect her security.

Unless the judgment in the case cited proceeds on some rule peculiar to the jurisprudence of New York, and not stated in the opinion (for the reason that it was so well known to the Court that it was unnecessary to state it), we can not see how the conclusion reached by Davis, J., can be sustained.

The clause in the mortgage in this case is different from the one in the New York case, as construed by that Court. It authorizes the mortgagee, on failure to pay the interest, or any part of it, according to the terms of the note, or on failure to perform any of the covenants hereinafter expressed, of which the covenant to pay taxes is one, to proceed to sell the premises in the manner prescribed by law, and out of the money arising from the sale to retain the whole sum of $36,000, with interest as aforesaid, together with costs and charges of such sale, and lawyers' fees, and the amount of all such other charges as are mentioned in the mortgage, and the surplus, if any there be, to be paid to the mortgagors. The prior payment of the taxes was not essential to commence the action, and if it was, the mortgagee had paid them before commencing it.

It is not apparent that any question has been made by counsel for appellants as to the consideration of the agreement, made by the above-quoted clause from the mortgage of 1877. It was sustained by sufficient consideration—the consideration which sustained the mortgage of 1877 sustained the agreement made by this clause. This is evident from the language with which the clause commences, "It is further agreed and understood," which places it in the same category with all the other promises of the mortgage agreement, and makes the same consideration applicable alike to all. The same consideration sustains each and every pact or promise in the agreement. "Verba illata in esse videntur." (Broom's Leg. Maxims, 645, 646, et seq.) The words above quoted are words of reference. In other words, it may be said that every pact or promise in the mortgage springs out of, or is born of and fed by, the same consideration. (See notes to Roe v. Transmarr, 2 Smith's L. C. 515, et seq.) In drawing instruments of any kind where a consideration is essential, it is not necessary, nor is it the practice, to repeat the consideration upon the insertion of every several promise or covenant. The mention of it once is generally considered sufficient. (C. C., §§ 1614, 1641.) Haggerty v. The Allaire Works, 5 Sandf. S. C. 231, is cited by counsel for appellants. To what point arising in the case it is applicable we can not perceive. In that case it was held that the interest on a bond and mortgage was properly computed at seven per cent. per annum, raised by agreement from six per cent. from a certain date in December, 1842. Two reasons were given: "1. Because the agreement for raising the interest from six to seven per cent. was valid in law, the consideration of forbearance being necessarily implied, and the continuance of the agreement being co-extensive with the forbearance; 2. Because it was sufficiently proved that the agreement was adopted and acted upon by the defendants, and it was therefore unimportant whether it was originally made by Allaire under their authority."

We presume this judgment of the Court to be correct, but it is no authority to construe the covenant in the mortgage of 1877 above referred to, to be sustained by the consideration of forbearance, and that therefore the mortgagee agreed to forbear until the maturity of the note of June 1, 1877, five years after date. There being a sufficient consideration expressed in the mortgage of 1877, none can be implied; as was done in the case cited. "Expressum facit cessare tacitum." (Broom's Leg. Maxims, 630. See rules for interpretation of contracts, C. C., division 3, part 2, title 3.)

The Section 1175, from Jones on Mortgages, a portion of which is quoted in brief for appellants, sustains the views taken in this opinion. (See the section and cases cited in it, particularly Pope v. Durant, 26 Ia. 233; O'Connor v. Shipman, 48 How. Pr. 126.) Williams v. Townsend is referred to in it. That has been above considered. No further observations as to this citation of appellants are requisite.

At the time the note of first of June, 1874, was executed by the defendants, Batchelder and his wife, a married woman was unable to make a contract for the payment of money. Such was the express language of Section 167 of the Civil Code. (Butler v. Baber, 54 Cal. 178.) This section was changed by the Legislature of 1873-4, so that a married woman could make such a contract and bind herself by note and mortgage. (Parry v. Kelley, 52 Cal. 334; Wood v. Orford, id. 412; Marlow v. Barlew, 53 id. 458; Alexander v. Bouton, 55 id. 19, 20.) But this did not go into effect until the first of July, 1874.

Consequently the note of June 1, 1874, at the time of its execution, did not bind the wife.

It is conceded by respondent, that the note of June 1, 1874, was not binding on the defendant, Maria B. Batchelder, and never bound her personally, and though the facts in the case show strong grounds to hold otherwise, in consequence of the recognition by her for a new consideration, in the clause quoted from the mortgage of 1877, of this note in all its terms as a valid obligation, such recognition having been made when the disability to contract for the payment of money no longer existed, yet as the point is conceded, we say nothing further in regard to it; intending by this to leave the point open for decision should it again come before us. The mortgage of 1874 and the other mortgages are, in our opinion, binding on Mrs. Batchelder, the above-named defendant.

When the notes appearing in the record, other than the note of June 1, 1874, were executed by the defendant Maria, she was competent to make such notes, and they bind her.

It follows from the above that the Court below erred in rendering a personal judgment against Mrs. Batchelder on the note of June 1, 1874, and the interest on it, and the decree will be modified in that regard. In other respects the judgment is correct and is affirmed.

Counsel for respondent will prepare a decree modified in accordance with the views herein expressed, and present it on notice to the Chief Justice of this Court.

MORRISON, C. J., and MYRIOK and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., concurred.

After the foregoing decision was rendered, a rehearing was had in Bank, upon which the following decision was rendered:

The COURT:

This case was heard before Department One of this Court, and its opinion filed June 24, 1881. (7 Pac. C. L. J. 733.) Subsequently, a hearing before the Court in Bank was granted. Such hearing having been had, an opinion by the Court in Bank was filed May 30, 1882. (9 id. 515.) Thereafter a rehearing in Bank was granted. Such rehearing has been had. We are satisfied with the views expressed in the opinion of the Court in Bank; and for the reasons therein given, the Court now makes the same order, and gives the same judgment as therein contained.

THE SAN FRANCISCO GAS COMPANY v. HENRY BRICKWEDEL.

MANDAMUS — DEBT OF MUNICIPALITY — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. — Mandamus to the defendant, as Auditor of San Francisco, to compel him to audit certain bills for gas furnished the city. The defense set up in the answer was: 1. That the revenue for the year in which the indebtedness was incurred had been exhausted at the time of the presentation of the bills; and, 2. That the plaintiff was indebted to the city and county in a larger amount for taxes.

Held: Under Section 18 of Article xi. of the Constitution, no indebtedness or liability can be incurred by a municipality (except in the manner therein stated) exceeding in any year the income and revenue actually received by it. In other words, each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year.

Id. — Id. — TAXES — DEBT — DEFINITION. — THORNTON, J., concurring in the leading opinion, was also of the opinion that a tax is a debt within the meaning of Section 82 of the Consolidation Act; and that under that section the plaintiff, if the allegations of the answer were true, was not entitled to the writ.

Id. — Id. — Id. — McKINSTRY, J., was of the opinion that the writ ought not to issue, and therefore dissented from the order of reference.

APPLICATION for writ of mandamus to Henry Brickwedel, Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco, to compel him to audit certain demands for gas furnished to said city and county.

Clement, Osmend, & Clement, for Plaintiff.

John F. Swift and J. F. Cowdery, for Defendant.

Ross, J.:

We think it clear that when the framers of the present Constitution said, as they did by Section 18 of Article xi. of that instrument, that "no county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district shall incur any indebtedness or liability, in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose," etc., they meant that no such indebtedness or liability should be incurred (except in the manner stated) exceeding in any year the income and revenue actually received by such county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district. In other words, that each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year. The system previously prevailing in some of the municipalities of the State by which liabilities and indebtedness were incurred by them far in excess of their income and revenue for the year in which the same were contracted, thus creating a floating indebtedness which had to be paid out of the income and revenue of future years, and which, in turn, necessitated the carrying forward of other indebtedness, was a fruitful source of municipal extravagance. The evil consequences of that system had been felt by the people at home and witnessed elsewhere. It was to put a stop to all of that, that the constitutional provision in question was adopted. The change was eminently wise. A somewhat similar provision in the old Constitution with respect to State indebtedness saved the people of the State a vast amount of money. (People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 503; Nougues v. Douglass, 7 id. 65.)

We have neither the right nor the disposition, by judicial interpretation, to take away the wholesome restriction upon municipalities thus imposed by the Constitution. Of course, in giving effect to this radical change from the pre-existing condition of things, it will not be strange if some shall be found to suffer. But it must be remembered that all are presumed to know the law, and that whoever deals with a municipality is bound to know the extent of its powers. Those who contract with it, or furnish it supplies, do so with reference to the law, and must see that limit is not exceeded. With proper care on their part and on the part of the representatives of the municipality, there is no danger of loss.

From the petition and the answer before us we are unable to ascertain the facts essential to the proper determination of the petitioner's application. The answer sets up affirmatively certain matters of fact, which are by the law deemed denied by the petitioner. For the purpose of ascertaining the ultimate facts in respect to the income and revenue of the city and county for the fiscal year 1881-2, and in respect to the disposition and disbursement of that income and revenue, and in respect to petitioner's demands, we must refer the cause for proof and findings.

Ordered that the cause be and is hereby referred to Honorable J. F. Finn, Judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, who will, on proper notice to the respective parties, take proof and report findings of fact to this Court in accordance with the views above expressed.

MYRICK and MoKEE, JJ., concurred.

THORNTON, J., concurring.

I concur in the view taken by Justice Ross of the twelfth section of Article xi. of the Constitution, and desire to say what follows in addition.

The demands preferred by the petitioner in this case, for which the writ of mandate is asked, amount to the sum of $178,648.98.

It is set forth in the answer to the petition that there is due by the petitioner, the San Francisco Gas Light Company, to the Treasury of the City and County of San Francisco, the sum of $195,465.38, for taxes, for fiscal years 1880-1 and 1881-2, no part of which has been paid — an amount, it will be seen, largely in excess of the demands of the petitioner.

It is contended on behalf of respondent that petitioner is indebted for these taxes as above stated, and as the amount of indebtedness exceeds the amount of the demands of petitioner, the Auditor is justified in not allowing these demands; and to support this contention, we are referred to Section 82 of the Consolidation Act. By this section it is provided, inter alia, that "no demand upon the Treasury shall be allowed by the Auditor in favor of any person or officer in any manner indebted thereto, without first deducting the amount of such indebtedness."

We have no doubt that the petitioner, though a corporation, is a person within the meaning of the clause above quoted. We can not conclude that the law-makers intended to make one rule for natural persons and another for artificial persons as to the subject-matter of this clause. The word "person" here is intended to include persons both natural and artificial.

If this indebtedness for taxes bring the petitioner within the provision above quoted from the Consolidation Act, the Auditor is justified in not allowing the demands.

The question to be determined is the effect of the delinquency of a person in the payment of taxes, on his right to have a claim allowed against the City and County Treasury.

It will be observed that the language quoted from the above-mentioned Section 82 is broad and general. It refers to a person "in any manner indebted thereto," i. e., to the City Treasury. Taxes are not debts due by contract, express or implied. Such is the remark made in the opinion in Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 350, by Field, C. J., in relation to the proper meaning of the word "debts" in the Act of Congress passed twenty-fifth of February, 1862, commonly known as the Legal Tender Act. Referring to the provision in that Act, which declares that the notes issued under its authority shall be "a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private," the opinion proceeds: "Taxes are not debts within the meaning of this provision. A debt is a sum of money due by contract, express or implied. A tax is a charge upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes. It is not founded upon contract; it does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor; it does not draw interest; it is not the subject of attachment; and it is not liable to set-off. It owes its existence to the action of the legislative power, and does not depend for its validity and enforcement upon the individual assent of the tax-payer. It operates in invitum."

That a sum of money does not draw interest, is not the subject of attachment, and is not liable to set-off, does not prevent it from being a debt. At common law, debts did not draw interest, were not subject to attachment, and were not liable to set-off. There was a limited power in courts of equity to set off or compensate one debt for another, under certain circumstances (see Story's Eq. Jur., §§ 1431, 1432, 1433), but the general right of set-off was allowed by the statutes passed in the reign of George II. Interest on debts was not allowed until authorized by statutory enactment, and it is well known that attachment or garnishment grew out of a custom which prevailed in the city of London, and had no existence outside of that city until allowed by statute. The process of attachment in the various States of the Union exists by virtue of legislative acts. These qualities of a debt might by legislative action be made to apply to taxes. I know of no restriction upon the power of the Legislature which could prevent it from passing such a law. But, as is remarked in the opinion above cited, "the term debt, it is true, is popularly used in a far more comprehensive sense, as embracing not merely money due by contract, but whatever one is bound to render to another, whether from contract or the requirements of the law," and I am of opinion that the form of expression used in the eighty-second Section above mentioned is used in the larger sense; that when the Legislature employed the words "in any manner indebted," it referred to a case of obligation to pay, however such obligation arose, whether from contract or by operation of law. Under our revenue laws the sum mentioned in the answer as due and unpaid for taxes, when paid, goes into the City Treasury, and is due to it. The view above taken is sustained by Section 3716 of the Political Code, which is as follows:

"Every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by this title has the force and effect of an execution duly levied against all property of the delinquent; the judgment is not satisfied nor the lien removed until the taxes are paid or the property sold for the payment thereof." The law here creates the personal obligation to pay, and to pay a sum certain and fixed by lawful authority. These, i. e., the personal obligation and the certainty of the sum, are the most striking characteristics of a debt. (See further on this point, Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 270; People v. Seymour, 16 id. 340; Dugan v. Baltimore, 1 Gill & J. 499; 2 Bl. Com. 464, 465.)

If the petitioner has any legal defense to the payment of the taxes herein referred to, such defense could not be made in an action for the writ of mandate.

The legislation as interpreted above is eminently just and reasonable. A tax-payer should not be allowed to have a claim against a municipal corporation satisfied when he owes to such corporation the money which goes to furnish the means of discharging his claim.

If the facts are as set forth in the answer (and for the purposes of this opinion they must be held to be so), the Auditor is justified in withholding his allowance from the demands of the petitioner. It was within the discretion vested in him by law to refuse his allocatur, and it was his duty to do so.

As the case now stands, the writ should be denied. But for the purpose of bringing before the Court the question discussed in the opinion of Justice Ross, I concur in the order of reference.

MCKINSTY, J., dissenting:

Because, at the hearing, certain allegations in the answer were admitted to be true, I am of opinion, as at present advised, that the writ ought not to issue, and therefore dissent from the order. With reference, however, to all questions involved, I reserve to myself the benefit of any further argument on the coming in of the report of the referee appointed by the Court.

62 Cal. 120-123. PEOPLE v. HOIN. 45 Am. Rep. 651.

Irresistible Impulse, if it exists, does not constitute that insanity which is a legal defense, p. 123.

Cited in People v. Sewell, 145 Cal. 299, when question to jurors tended to bring out expressed prejudice against defense of insanity, which really related to feigned insanity, and jurors stated they had no prejudice against real insanity, challenge properly denied; People v. Kernaghan, 72 Cal. 617, in dissenting opinion of Temple, J., arguing that the charge given as to emotional insanity was not in accord with the rule laid down by the principal case; S. C., p. 622, in dissenting opinion of Thornton, J., approving the definition of emotional insanity in the principal case. Approved in Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 101 Cal. 342, as a correct exposition of the law. Cited in same case, p. 346, giving the effect of an instruction in somewhat vague terms, which did not offend against the rule laid down in the principal case; People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 343, and People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 223, 63 Am. St. Rep. 77, holding that the doctrine of "uncontrollable impulse" has no legal standing in this state; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 264, to the same effect; People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 11, to the same effect; People v. Owens, 128 Cal. 489, People v. Methewer, 132 Cal. 332, and State v. Knight, 95 Me. 479, holding instruction properly refused; Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 310, 58 Am. Rep. 644, holding that if the accused had sufficient intelligence to know what he was doing, and the will and the power to do or not to do it, he was in contemplation of law responsible; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 748, holding that knowledge of right and wrong is the correct test, and discarding the theory of irresistible impulse; note to 27 Am. St. Rep. 811, on insanity as a defense to crime; note 63 Am. St. Rep. 100.

62 Cal. 125-139. HAM v. SANTA ROSA BANK. 45 Am. Rep. 654.

Declaration of Homestead, containing the statements required by section 1237 of the Civil Code, duly executed, acknowledged and recorded is valid, p. 134.

Referred to in Graves v. Baker, 68 Cal. 133, but with what object cannot be ascertained. Cited in Galligher v. Smiley, 28 Neb. 195, 28 Am. St. Rep. 324, holding that a homestead right once acquired could not be diminished without the consent of the homesteader; note to 63 Am. Dec. 124, on homestead rights; note to 91 Am. Dec. 644, on homestead defined.

The homestead may exceed the value limit and the excess in value is subject to claims of the creditors, p. 138.

Cited in Tiernan v. Creditors, 62 Cal. 288, holding that when the declaration stated the value at eight thousand dollars, the homestead was valid up to the statutory limit, but that only one house could be set apart as a homestead; King v. Gotz, 70 Cal. 242, holding that a declaration of value of seven thousand dollars did not invalidate the homestead; Lubbock v. McMann, 82 Cal. 230, 16 Am. St. Rep. 111, holding that the excess in value of a homestead is subject to the jus disponendi of the owner and the claims of his creditors; Demartin v. Demartin, 85 Cal. 74, holding that when a homestead was set apart in insolvency proceedings the burden of proof was on the creditors to show that the value exceeded the statutory limit; Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 Mont. 253, and Yerrick v. Higgins, 22 Mont. 507, construing local statutes.

Selection of Homestead is Constitutional.—This right the legislature was commanded by the constitution to protect from forced sale, p. 138.

Cited in Lubbock v. McMann, 82 Cal. 228, 16 Am. St. Rep. 109, holding that exemption is a constitutional right to the limit provided by statute; Sayers v. Childers, 112 Iowa, 677, 681, on point that right to homestead is a vested right.

62 Cal. 139-145. PEOPLE v. SALORSE.

Larceny.—When the act of taking coexists with the felonious intent to deprive the owner of his property, the offense is complete, p. 141.

Cited in People v. Morino, 85 Cal. 518, holding that the question whether the felonious intent existed at the time the property was taken should be left to the jury.

Taking with felonious intent to deprive the owner is larceny, but if the felonious intent is formed afterward, the offense is embezzlement, p. 141.

Cited in State v. Harmon, 106 Mo. 652, holding that embezzlement as distinguished from larceny is a purely statutory offense; People v. De Graaff, 127 Cal. 679, noted under People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280; People v. Jackson, 138 Cal. 464, holding instructions on larceny properly refused; notes to 98 Am. Dec. 127 and 149, as to distinction between larceny and embezzlement.

Embezzlement of Horse is punishable as grand larceny, irrespective of value, p. 142.

Cited in People v. Gray, 137 Cal. 268, on point that verdict may determine degree of crime; People v. Wickham, 116 Cal. 386, holding that embezzlement of a horse of the value of forty dollars was punishable by imprisonment in the state prison; notes to 98 Am. Dec. 157, and 161, as to allegation of value and conviction of one offense under indictment for the other.

Venue in Embezzlement.—The offense must be proved to have been committed within the county where the defendant is charged, or within five hundred yards thereof, p. 144.

Cited in Cohen v. State, 20 Tex. App. 229, holding that jurisdiction lay in the county where defendant was placed in control of the property, or in any county in which he may have taken or received the property.

Instruction.—When they, as an entirety, correctly lay down the law of the case, the verdict, if in accordance with the evidence, will not be disturbed, p. 144.

Cited in Territory v. Evans, 2 Idaho, 398, holding that if taken as a whole the charge is correct substantially and could not mislead the jury, the judgment will not be disturbed.

62 Cal. 151-154. ROSENKRANZ v. WAGNER.

Mechanic's Lien—Complaint.—Necessary allegations are that there was money due to the original contractor when the lien was filed, or that the owner had knowledge of the claim prior to the payment of the full amount under the contract, p. 154.

Cited in Stimson v. Dunham etc. Co., 146 Cal. 284, where materialmen and laborers served notice on owner of their claims against contractor, which in aggregate exceeded contract price, owners not liable beyond contract price, and may compel parties entitled to come in and have rights settled in one decree; Wilson v. Barnard, 67 Cal. 423, holding that the principal case applied to claims of loggers under the logger's lien act. Distinguished in same case, p. 425, in dissenting opinion of McKee, J., showing the reason for difference in necessary pleading on mechanics' liens and loggers' liens. Cited in Turner v. Strenzel, 70 Cal. 30, holding that a materialman is only entitled to be paid from that portion of the contract price which remains due and unpaid when the lien is filed; Wiggins v. Bridge, 70 Cal. 439, holding that where the contractor never completed the building, and there was nothing due to him, a subcontractor or materialman could not enforce a lien; McFadden v. Stark, 58 Ark. 13, holding that as the contract is the foundation of the mechanic's lien it must be stated in the complaint so far as to show the lien and amount.

62 Cal. 155-159. HANLEY v. KELLY.

One who obtains a judgment for money which defendant has invested in land, is thereby estopped from pursuing the land in equity, p. 159.

Cited in Gaffney v. Megrath, 23 Wash. 494-497, stating general rule as to election between remedies; Harding v. Atlantic Trust Co., 26 Wash. 539, where mortgagee after foreclosure and sale attempts to realize on deficiency judgment by execution on debtor's homestead, he is estopped from claiming equitable lien on homestead by reason of its purchase with proceeds of waste committed upon mortgaged premises; note to 10 Am. St. Rep. 489, on pursuit of one remedy excluding another.

62 Cal. 160-163. BELCHER COMPANY v. DEFERRARI.

Mines.—A locator who does work to the extent of one hundred dollars on two claims in one year, and in the January of the following year does work to the extent of twenty-four dollars before relocation, does not lose his rights, p. 163.

Cited in Pharis v. Muldoon, 75 Cal. 287, holding that failure to mark boundaries until five days after entry confers no rights on a relocater as against the locator, who in the meantime re-enters and resumes work; Temescal etc. Co. v. Salcido, 137 Cal. 214, on point that resumption of work will be presumed done in good faith; Fee v. Durham, 121 Fed. 470 (distinguished in dissenting opinion, page 476), majority holding where locator commenced assessment work on December 26th and employees continued work until December 30th, which was Saturday, when they quit and resumed work on Monday, January 1st, one locating on Sunday night between 12 and 1 o'clock acquired no rights. Overruled in Honaker v. Martin, 11 Mont. 95, 97, holding that the ruling of the principal case was not sound, that the resumption of work without the expenditure with reasonable diligence of the statutory amount was an evasion of the statute, and the work must be done in good faith in order to secure the claim against relocation. Cited in Bishop v. Baisley, 28 Oreg. 126, holding that it was an open question whether, after having resumed, and while in actual possession, and prior to the full performance of the amount required by law, the claim was open to relocation; Justice Min. Co. v. Barclay, 82 Fed. Rep. 560, holding that if the ground was subject to relocation, yet that if work was done on one of a number of adjoining claims to the amount required for all of them for one year, then the locator's rights were revived and a subsequent relocation was invalid.

Failure in Findings.—Failure to find on an issue not injuring the defendants, and not material to the main issue, is not ground for reversal, p. 162.

Cited in Hooker v. Thomas, 86 Cal. 178, to same effect and giving an example.

Estoppel of Deed.—Grantors of a mine by deed cannot deny ownership and right to possession at the time the deed was executed, p. 163.

Cited in De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 659, 28 Am. St. Rep. 153, holding that a grantor, purporting to grant in fee, is estopped from subsequently setting up as his title a tax deed acquired after the grant; Stinchfield v. Gilks, 96 Cal. 36, holding that the grantor of a mine by deed was estopped from denying a valid location.

Judicial Notice.—The character of mining property, and its original ownership by the United States, will be judicially noticed, p. 163.

Negligence.—When the evidence is conflicting or circumstantial, it is for the jury to determine, pp. 172, 173.

Cited in Noyes v. Southern Pacific, 92 Cal. 291, in concurring opinion of Paterson, J., holding that where there is any evidence at all from which inferences of negligence may be drawn, nonsuit should not be granted; Benson v. Central Pacific, 98 Cal. 48, in an action for personal injury. Cited in Stephenson v. Southern Pacific, 102 Cal. 149, approving the ruling of the principal case, but saying that where the facts were admitted or proven without contradiction, it is for the court to determine if they establish negligence; Hansen v. Southern Pacific, 105 Cal. 386, to same effect, where the question was whether or not plaintiff was on the road with the consent of defendant; Pierce v. Railway Co., 23 Mont. 449, holding nonsuit properly grantable in action against carrier; Ewell v. Mining Co., 23 Utah, 197, applying rule in action by employee for damages for injuries received in mine.

When goods are destroyed while in custody of a warehouseman, the burden of proof of negligence is on plaintiff, p. 172.

Distinguished in Wilson v. California Central, 94 Cal. 172, holding that where the defendant was sued on contract as a carrier for non-delivery, and not as a tortfeasor, the rule was different. Cited in Taussig v. Bode, 134 Cal. 263, 86 Am. St. Rep. 252, applying rule to leakage alleged to have been caused by warehouseman; James v. Orrell, 68 Ark. 288, 82 Am. St. Rep. 295, holding instruction as to burden of proof erroneous; Marshall v. Andrews, 8 N. Dak. 367, but holding burden of proof on warehouseman in case of loss by burning of warehouse; and see to same effect Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 688. Approved in Texas & Pacific Co. v. Morse, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 183, holding that common carriers, having warehouses for storing goods, were liable as warehousemen for goods stored there.

62 Cal. 290. VALLEAU v. SUPERIOR COURT.

Proposed Statement on Appeal made up of reporter's notes taken on trial and written out in longhand is improper, p. 290.

Approved in State v. Napton, 28 Mont. 339, referee may refuse to settle bill of exceptions which recites, "The following testimony was taken before the referee (clerk will here insert testimony)."

62 Cal. 291-299. PEOPLE v. HOPE.

Burglary.—Evidence of Possession of Tools corresponding to those found at the place of the burglary may be given, p. 295.

Cited in Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 540, holding as to what could be shown to the jury.

Visiting the Locus in Quo by a juror during the trial is not of itself sufficient ground to discharge the jury, p. 293.

Cited in State v. Perry, 121 N. C. 537, 61 Am. St. Rep. 685, but doubted as to the jury as a whole, and that where, after the evidence closed, they visited the locus in quo and made inquiry of a passerby, it was ground for a new trial; note to 92 Am. Dec. 344, on inspection of place by court and jury.

Alias Name.—Evidence may be given that a short time prior to the date of the alleged offense the defendant called himself by an alias name, pp. 291, 296.

Note.—It is only by reading the syllabus into the report that this ruling is obtained. All that the decision says is: "The objection to the question put to the witness Alken was properly overruled"; but there is nothing to show what the question was, or what the reply, except the syllabus.

Cited in State v. Ellwood, 17 R. L. 767, holding that the flight of the accused shortly after the commission of the offense, acts of disguise, concealment of person, and use of fictitious names may be shown by the state.

62 Cal. 299-303. MCCARTHY v. LOUPE.

Contract of Agency for purchase or sale of real estate must be in writing, under section 1624 of the Code of Civil Procedure, p. 302.

Approved in Myres v. Surryhne, 67 Cal. 659, Zemier v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 511, McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 116, Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 29, all on the same point. Cited in McGeary v. Satchwell, 129 Cal. 390, denying recovery by agent under parol contract; Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 113, denying recovery on quantum meruit, under oral contract; Toomy v. Dunphy, 96 Cal. 641, 642, also to the same point, and further holding that a contract in writing need not state the consideration. If it shows the employment, the consideration may be proved aliunde, or a recovery had on a quantum meruit; note to 93 Am. Dec. 172, on appointment and termination of employment of broker.

New Trial.—Appellate court may sustain an order granting a new trial on grounds other than those on which the lower court granted the motion, p. 303.

Cited in Estate of Crozier, 74 Cal. 181, holding that so long as there were errors upon which a new trial should have been granted, it was immaterial what error the court acted on; Wakeham v. Barker, 83 Cal. 50, holding the same ruling as to sustaining a demurrer.

62 Cal. 303-310. PEOPLE v. WESTLAKE.

Justification of Homicide requires a reasonable cause and an actual apprehension of a design to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury, and that defendant was wholly without fault, pp. 306, 307.

Cited in People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 364, holding that any evidence tending to show that defendant acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted under the circumstances is competent; People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 464, showing how the right of self-defense is not lost, even where one is the first wrongdoer. Distinguished in People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 627, as to the right of pursuit of an assailant who has taken to flight. Cited in Lynch v. State, 24 Tex. App. 365, 5 Am. St. Rep. 892, holding that the act done by the deceased, manifesting his intention to execute threats, must be such as to show an immediate intention at the time, and not an intention depending upon some other contingency. Overruled in People v. Farley, 124 Cal. 597, discussing effect of People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 627.

Testimony Invading Province of Jury.—Questions as to whether the wound could have been inflicted in a certain manner involve the determination of a fact upon which the jury are to find, and should be excluded, p. 309.

Cited in People v. Farley, 124 Cal. 595, holding such evidence improperly admitted; Connor v. Stanley, 67 Cal. 316, applying the same principle to questions as to the state of mind of a deceased person which would render him liable to undue influence; People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 447, holding medical evidence as in the principal case, improper; to the like effect in People v. Lemperle, 94 Cal. 46, People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 568, and People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 181, also in Thompson v. State, 30 Tex. App. 328, holding that a medical witness could not state an opinion, when the jury were equally competent to draw a conclusion from a given state of facts.

Past Threats are no excuse for homicide, without sufficient present demonstration to authorize the belief that the deadly purpose then exists, and a fear that it will be then executed, p. 305.

Cited in Schurr v. Rodenback, 133 Cal. 89, applying principle to error in granting motion to strike out testimony.

62 Cal. 311-319. REMINGTON S. M. COMPANY v. COLE.

Change of Venue.—The right is to be determined by the condition of things existing at the time the parties claiming it first appeared in the action, p. 318. Dissenting opinion of Sharpstein, J., that it could never have been the intention of the legislature that a plaintiff could, by improperly joining persons who resided in the same county with himself, and against whom the complaint showed no cause of action, defeat the right of the real defendants to a change of venue, p. 319.

Cited, as to the prevailing opinion, in Ah Fong v. Sternes, 79 Cal. 33, and yet holding that the plaintiff could not defeat the defendant's right by adding to the complaint a cause of action on which defendant had no right to a change of venue. Overruled in Sayward v. Houghton, 82 Cal. 629, holding that the right to a change of venue was not affected by joining as a defendant one against whom there was no cause of action (note this decision was delivered by Sharpstein, who wrote the dissenting opinion in the principal case). Cited in McKenzie v. Barling, 101 Cal. 460, as authority for the proposition that where any of the defendants resided in the county where the action is brought, motion to change venue will not be granted unless all the defendants join, or unless good reason is shown why they have not joined; Brady v. Times Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 59, as having decided the rule in the same manner as Sayward v. Houghton, supra. (Note.—This is not so, the two decisions are absolutely opposed.) Cited in Wallace v. Owaley, 11 Mont. 221, holding that the right is to be determined as laid down in the principal case; note to 74 Am. Dec. 242, as to change of venue.

Time for Moving.—Motion must be made when defendant first appears, and if denied the remedy is by appeal, p. 318.

Cited in Brady v. Times Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 61, holding to same effect, and that the ruling stands, even though the condition of the case may be such that if it could then be made it would be granted; Elliot v. Whitmore, 10 Utah, 251, holding that an order denying motion to change venue was appealable; and on same point in re Whitmore, 9 Utah, 445.

62 Cal. 320-336. NEHRBAS v. CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANY.

Contributory Negligence.—Burden of proof is on the defendant unless it can be inferred from circumstances proved by plaintiff, p. 334.

Cited in MacDougall v. Central R. R. Co., 63 Cal. 432, accepting the ruling of the principal case; Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal.

487, noted under Robinson v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 426; note to 62 Am. Dec. 687, on burden of proof as to contributory negligence.

Negligence.—Plaintiff is not bound to show that defendant was guilty of negligence without any contributory negligence on his own part, p. 434.

Cited in MacDougall v. Central R. R. Co., 63 Cal. 434, to same effect; Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 83, holding that negligence is to be decided by the court as a question of law when the facts are clearly settled; Smith v. Occidental S. S. Co., 99 Cal. 468, holding that it is sufficient for a plaintiff to show in the first instance that the injury resulted from the negligence of the defendant; Bowers v. Union Pacific R. Co., 4 Utah, 224, holding that unless circumstances leave the question clear of all doubt, it is the duty of the court to leave it to the jury, and not to disturb their finding.

Province of Jury.—All the circumstances surrounding the accident should be considered, and it is for the jury to determine whether plaintiff has exercised the care which the law requires, p. 336.

Cited in Deans v. Railroad, 107 N. C. 693, 22 Am. St. Rep. 907, holding that though the facts may be undisputed, yet, if reasonable men might draw different inferences from them, then the issue should be submitted to the jury; note to 90 Am. Dec. 62, as to general duty of railroad company to travelers on highway.

Damages.—The jury is not, under sections 376 and 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, limited to the actual pecuniary injury sustained by a parent by reason of the loss of the services of his children, p. 336.

Cited in Cleary v. City R. R. Co., 76 Cal. 241, holding that in addition to the loss of services of a child during minority and the medical attendance and funeral expenses, the jury might also consider the mental anguish and suffering of the parents. Distinguished in Munro v. Dredging Co., 84 Cal. 525, 18 Am. St. Rep. 255, holding that "sorrow, grief, and mental suffering" of a parent were too remote, and that the question did not arise in the principal case; Morgan v. Southern Pacific Co., 95 Cal. 518, 29 Am. St. Rep. 146, confining the dictum at the close of the principal case to Beeson v. G. M. G. M. Railroad Co., 7 Utah, 20, criticising Cleary case, supra.

62 Cal. 339-342. DANIELWITZ v. SHEPPARD.

A contract, whether by administrator or heir, attempting to bind the estate to pay broker's commission, is void as against the policy of the law, p. 342.

Followed in Danielwitz v. Sheppard, 62 Cal. 343, being the plaintiff's appeal in the same action as the principal case. Cited in Cole v.

Superior Court, 68 Cal. 95, holding that a guardian ad litem could not make any contract binding on the estate of the ward without the sanction of the court; Jones v. Hanna, 81 Cal. 510, holding that a contract by an administrator for realization of the assets of deceased, out of which he was to receive a profit, was illegal and void; note to 52 Am. St. Rep. 122, on estates not liable for contracts of executors and administrators. Distinguished in Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 524, 79 Am. St. Rep. 135, holding administrator personally liable on his contract under facts stated; cf. Estate of Willard, 139 Cal. 505, and Rickel v. Chicago etc. Co., 112 Iowa, 153, noted under Estate of Page, 57 Cal. 241.

62 Cal. 343-348. DEWEY v. FRANK BROTHERS.

When defendants are not entitled, by reason of knowledge and failure to move for continuance, to a new trial on the ground of surprise, pp. 347, 348.

Cited in Central Pacific v. Creed, 70 Cal. 502, holding that a sale to satisfy a judgment in favor of plaintiff will not be set aside on the application of same plaintiff on the ground of surprise five months after it took place; Hoskins v. Hight, 95 Ala. 287, ruling that a party must move for a continuance before he can have a new trial on the ground of surprise; State v. Gardner, 38 Or. 153, noted under Rogers v. Hude, 1 Cal. 429; note to 76 Am. Dec. 518, on nature of surprise constituting ground for new trial.

62 Cal. 348-373. HAYWARD v. ROGERS.

Measure of Damages for wrongful conversion of stock by a pledgee is the highest market price of the stock between the day of sale and the day of trial, p. 353.

Note.—The ruling above stated is contained in the charge to the jury by the trial judge; the question involved in it was not before the supreme court, nor was it passed upon by that court in any way, and as the judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, the pledgee, the point was not involved in the decision, but it is cited in note to 79 Am. Dec. 506, on measure of damages for conversion of pledge by pledgee.

62 Cal. 373-376. CAREY v. BROWN.

A mortgagor is estopped from denying the validity of a sale under a deed of trust, containing a provision that recitals in a deed made thereunder shall be conclusive evidence of the truth of the facts recited, when there is no evidence offered, p. 375.

Cited in Bent etc. Co. v. Whitehead, 25 Colo. 359, 71 Am. St. Rep. 144, but holding such recitals not conclusive, and rule of caveat emptor to apply; note to 8 Am. St. Rep. 923, as to stipulations as to rules of evidence; 19 Am. St. Rep. 295, as to sales and conveyances by trustees, 62 Cal. 399-400. DOVE v. NUNAN.

Exemptions from Execution.—In order to exempt horses from seizure and sale the owners must be of the character specified in subsection 6 of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and must habitually earn their living by the use of such horses, p. 400.

Cited in Murphy v. Harris, 77 Cal. 195, holding the requirement as to "habitually earning his living" was imperative; Wildner v. Ferguson, 42 Minn. 114, 18 Am. St. Rep. 497, holding that an agent selling goods by sample was not within the provisions of a statute exempting the wages of laboring men from garnishment; Edgecomb v. Creditors, 19 Nev. 153, holding that a livery stable keeper could not claim exemption under the term "other laborer" in respect of two horses; note to 91 Am. Dec. 698, as to meaning of "team" in exemption laws; note to 58 Am. St. Rep. 307, 308, as to meaning of "teamster."

62 Cal. 401-406. HORGAN v. AMICK.

Crops on homestead are only exempt under section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the amount of two hundred dollars, p. 406.

Disputed in Morgan v. Rountree, 88 Iowa, 252, 45 Am. St. Rep. 236, holding that proceeds derived from the use of the homestead while it remains such are exempt to the head of the family. Cited in In re Hoag, 97 Fed. 544, construing similar Wisconsin statutes; Coates v. Caldwell, 71 Tex. 22, 10 Am. St. Rep. 727, holding that an unpicked cotton crop on a homestead was exempt from execution, but that portion of the crop which had been picked was not exempt; note to 45 Am. St. Rep. 239, on the subject generally.

62 Cal. 407-410. FARMERS' UNION v. THRESHER.

Writ of Prohibition will not be issued to restrain a sale for taxes, the duties of the tax collector being merely ministerial, p. 410.

Cited in Hobart v. Tillson, 66 Cal. 211, to the like effect; State v. Superior Court, 15 Wash. 674, 55 Am. St. Rep. 911, holding that the writ would issue to restrain the superior court from proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction. Distinguished in People v. Hiram House, 4 Utah, 381, holding that under the organic law of Utah, writs of prohibition could be issued to arrest the doing of ministerial acts; Winsor v. Bridges, 24 Wash. 548, construing local constitution and statutes as to original jurisdiction to issue the writ.

Conveyance of Legal Title to a Trustor who has sold and conveyed the equitable title enures for the benefit of, and passes the legal title to, the purchaser, p. 501.

Cited in note to 79 Am. Dec. 192, on subsequently acquired title.

The administrator of a deceased debtor may be joined with the surviving debtor in an action on a note, but any judgment must be made payable "de bonis testatoris," p. 502.

Cited in note to 68 Am. Dec. 762, on death of joint contractor.

Modification of Judgment may be made at any time by the court while it has physical control of its records, where the record furnishes the data by which to amend, p. 502.

Cited in People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 404, 5 Am. St. Rep. 452, holding that a judgment void on its face may be set aside by the court rendering it at any time after entry; Dickey v. Gibson, 113 Cal. 24, 54 Am. St. Rep. 326, where the court amended a decree one month after entry by adding a description of property omitted by inadvertence and mistake; Scamman v. Bonslett, 118 Cal. 97, 62 Am. St. Rep. 230, and note 233, holding that where resort must be had to evidence outside the record notice of a motion to amend the judgment is required under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Foreclosure May Cover a note, one of several, which was not due at the commencement of the action, but became due before the rendition of the judgment, p. 502.

Cited in Orange etc. Bank v. Duncan, 133 Cal. 256, noted under Hawkins v. Hill, 15 Cal. 500; note to 76 Am. Dec. 500.

Defense of Suretyship cannot be set up for the first time on appeal, p. 503.

Cited in Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 62, 11 Am. St. Rep. 240, holding that a release of a surety by discharge of the principal is new matter and must be pleaded.

62 Cal. 503-505. PEOPLE v. AH LUCK.

Conflicting Instructions, which could not operate to prejudice the defendant, are not ground for reversal, p. 505.

Approved in Dennison v. Chapman, 105 Cal. 458. Cited in Smitsen v. S. P. Co., 37 Or. 104, noted under People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 457.

62 Cal. 506-507. PEOPLE v. CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANY.

Mandamus.—Writ cannot be granted by default, p. 506.

Followed in case of same title, 62 Cal. 507. Cited in note to 89 Am. Dec. 742, pleadings, in mandamus.

62 Cal. 508. PEOPLE v. HARVEY.

Mandamus.—The supreme court has no original jurisdiction of a proceeding to try the title to an office, p. 508.

Cited in Kennedy v. Board, 82 Cal. 493, in the dissenting opinion of Fox, J., who held that mandate was not the proper remedy to compel the board to admit plaintiff to the position of principal teacher, to which he claimed the right; State v. Smith, 49 Neb. 759, holding that the title to an office cannot be tried by mandamus.

62 Cal. 514. WAKELEE v. DAVIS.

Time for Vacating Judgment, which is not applicable, and not void on its face, is limited to six months after the making of the order, p. 514.

Followed in McPherson v. Davis, 62 Cal. 515. Approved in Moore v. Superior Court, 86 Cal. 496, as to an order in probate proceedings.

62 Cal. 515-516. ROEDING v. PERASSO.

Findings not Responsive to Issues are ground for reversal of the judgment, p. 516.

Cited in Drainage District v. Crow, 20 Oreg. 538, holding that all the material issues must be passed upon; and Potwin v. Blasber, 9 Wash. 466, to same effect.

62 Cal. 516-518. HEWES v. CARVILLE COMPANY.

Appeal—Undertaking may be filed before the notice of appeal, pp. 517, 518.

Overruled in Little v. Jacks, 68 Cal. 346, where the reverse is held the correct ruling, but note the citation of the principal case here misstates the facts and the ruling.

Appeal—Notice may be filed after service, p. 517.

Cited in San Francisco etc. Co. v. State, 141 Cal. 358, 359, and holding main case not overruled on this point.

62 Cal. 523-524. PEOPLE v. DYE.

Appeal—Misconduct of Jury.—When the affidavits and counter-affidavits of jurors are contradictory, the judgment of the lower court that there was no misconduct will be upheld, p. 523.

Cited in People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 352, as authority for ruling that the jurors' affidavits were allowable and conclusive, but see the principal case, p. 523; People v. Murray, 94 Cal. 217, 28 Am. St. Rep. 114, holding that an allegation of misconduct of the jury might be rebutted by the evidence of the jury themselves, and their affidavits were admissible (this decision is founded on that of People v. Goldenson, supra, as to which see supra); People v. Bilea, 2 Idaho, 107, to the same effect.

Insufficient Statement in Bill of Exceptions.—When it contains a general statement that each party "introduced evidence to sustain the issue on their respective parts," an objection that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is untenable, p. 524.

Cited in Territory v. Neilson, 2 Idaho, 589, holding that the presumption is that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence bearing on the objections made.

62 Cal. 524-534. EX PARTE BERNERT.

Sentence in Excess of that authorized by statute or ordinance, whether valid pro tanto not decided, pp. 530, 531.

Wrongly referred to in Ex parte Moon Fook, 72 Cal. 11, as having been a decision on the effect of an excessive sentence.

Sentence Below the minimum renders the judgment void, pp. 529, 530.

Overruled in In re Reed, 143 Cal. 635, holding such judgment not void and defendant not entitled to release on habeas corpus; Ex parte Cox, 3 Idaho, 534, 537, where court imposes sentence greater than provided for by law, judgment is void, and prisoner will be discharged on habeas corpus. Doubted in Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 626, 627, and held not to apply to section 1446 of the Penal Code, and that under it the police judge had power to pass an alternative sentence of imprisonment at a lower rate than one day for each dollar of fine. Cited in same case, p. 630, in dissenting opinion of Garboutte, J., approving the ruling of the principal case, and holding that the prevailing opinion was practically a repeal of the statute; note to 55 Am. St. Rep. 265, on validity of sentences below the minimum.

Judicial Notice—Gambling.—Courts will not take judicial notice that "pool" necessarily involves gaming for money or value, p. 531.

Cited in note to 89 Am. Dec. 697, on judicial notice—matters of common knowledge.

62 Cal. 534-536. EX PARTE CRITTENDEN.

Contempt of Court is a specific criminal offense, and the imposition of a fine is a judgment in a criminal case (citing New Orleans v. Steamship Co., 20 Wall. 392, p. 535).

Cited in Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 408, holding that the judgment of contempt may be reviewed on habeas corpus; Matter of Tyler, 64 Cal. 438, holding that a person adjudged guilty of contempt may pay the fine in money or in imprisonment; same case in concurring opinion of Morrison, C. J., and Myrick and McKinstry, JJ., p. 439, holding that the court could enforce payment of the fine by ordering imprisonment until payment, at the rate of two dollars for each day's imprisonment; Tyler v. Connolly, 65 Cal. 30, holding that a judgment for contempt was not appealable. Referred to in same case, p. 32, in concurring opinion of Morrison, C. J., as having followed New Orleans v. Steamship Co., supra, and approving principle there stated. Cited in In re Buckley, 69 Cal. 3, to the like effect, in an original proceeding to punish for contempt of the Supreme Court; Ex parte Henshaw, 73 Cal. 495, to the like effect, and holding that one who continues to exercise the functions of a public office, after being adjudged a usurper thereof, is guilty of a contempt of court. Approved in Ex parte Abbott, 94 Cal. 334. Cited in Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 362, 37 Am. St. Rep. 59, where the contempt was a refusal to testify on the hearing of a charge of contempt for disobedience to an injunction; Teller v. People, 7 Colo. 451, Notes Cal. Rep.—196.

holding that there is no appeal from a judgment of contempt; Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 632; 11 Am. St. Rep. 211, to the point that the court can direct imprisonment until the fine is paid, irrespective of statute.

62 Cal. 538-542. EX PARTE CASINELLO.

A San Francisco ordinance prohibiting the deposit of rubbish and garbage, except in a locality designated by the superintendent of streets, is a valid exercise of the police power and constitutional, pp. 539, 542.

Cited in Odd Fellows' Cem. Assn. v. San Francisco, 140 Cal. 231, noted under Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 284; Sanitary etc. Works v. California etc. Co., 94 Fed. 699, affirming power of city to contract with one person for removal of garbage and authorizing collection of fixed rate therefor; Ex parte Heilbron, 65 Cal. 610, and applied in an ordinance prohibiting slaughter houses in Sacramento; In re Linehan, 72 Cal. 116, applied to an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of more than two cows within certain portions of the city; Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 128, applied to a San Francisco ordinance prohibiting the alteration or repair of wooden buildings within designated fire limits; McCloskey v. Kreling, 76 Cal. 512, to the same effect; Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 95, applying the ruling to an ordinance of the city of San Jose, prohibiting the obstruction of sidewalks; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 564, applying the ruling to an ordinance of the city of Redlands forbidding the beating of drums, without permission, on the traveled streets of the city. Note: The court was divided on the question of delegation of power. Note to 47 Am. St. Rep. 547, on quarantine and health laws and regulations.

62 Cal. 543-544. BLISS v. SUPERIOR COURT.

An appeal operates as a stay only of orders or judgments which command or permit some act to be done, p. 544.

Cited in Rogers v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 187, 188, noted under Merced etc. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 180; Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 68, holding that a prohibitory injunction remained in full force, but a mandatory injunction was stayed by the appeal; Elliot v. Whitmore, 10 Utah, 243, holding that when the effect of the decree was to take property from one person and deliver it to another, the appeal ought to stay the proceedings; also in same case, in dissenting opinion of Miner, J., p. 245, arguing that the injunction in the case was a preventive and not a mandatory injunction, and it was therefore in the discretion of the lower court to refuse a stay.

62 Cal. 545. NEWMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT.

Certiorari will not be granted when there is a remedy by appeal, p. 545.

Cited in Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 323; Noble v. Superior Court, 109 Cal. 527, both to the same effect; Ramsey v. Pettengill, 14 Oreg. 209, holding that the statute was intended to supply a remedy where none existed in the first instance, and not to supplement one lost through the laches of the party himself.

62 Cal. 545-548. HOKE v. PERDUE.

Levee Districts are public corporations, the validity of whose existence cannot be collaterally attacked, p. 547.

Cited in Irrigation District v. De Lappe, 79 Cal. 353, including reclamation districts in the ruling; Morrison v. Morey, 146 Mo., 561, noted under People v. Reclamation Dist., 53 Cal. 346.

Allegation of Probable Result of damage if certain works are not enjoined, not sufficient reason for granting an injunction, pp. 547, 548.

Cited in Lorenz v. Waldron, 96 Cal. 250, saying that nothing, short of a reasonable probability of injury is sufficient to warrant an injunction; Rockford Watch Co. v. Rumpf, 12 Wash. 651, follows the principal case as to an allegation that a party would sell real estate unless restrained.

63 Cal. 549-556. PEOPLE v. JACKSON.

School Land Warrant.—A location of land under a school land warrant in 1853 is ineffective because the land was then unsurveyed and not subject to selection, p. 553.

Overruled in Roberts v. Columbet, 63 Cal. 24, holding that the act of Congress of July 23, 1866, vested the legal title in the locator.

63 Cal. 557-558. PEOPLE v. HENRY.

Police Judge is a judicial officer of a municipality, and not one of those mentioned in section 10 of article 22 of the constitution, p. 557.

So, also, in In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 100, as to the mayor of the city of Los Angeles, and in State v. Connors, 27 Fla. 337, as to a county sheriff having duties belonging to the former office of city marshal; note to 72 Am. Dec. 188, on officers of cities and counties whether or not civil or state officers.

63 Cal. 558-561. WITTENBROCK v. BELLMEYER.

New Trial.—The reversal of a motion granting a new trial as to some of the parties, becomes the law of the case on a second appeal, and operates as a revival of the original judgment as between those parties and the moving party, p. 560.

Distinguished in Williams v. Mining Association, 66 Cal. 196, that the ruling was not applicable to an appeal where some of the parties had not been served with notice of appeal, and that any modification of the judgment could not affect the rights of those parties; Pierce v. Birkholm, 110 Cal. 672, holding that an order granting a new trial suspends but does not vacate the judgment until the finality of the order is determined; United States v. Crooks, 116 Cal. 45, holding that in a suit against several defendants a notice of appeal by one was ineffectual unless served on all the codefendants as well as plaintiff, and a new trial could not be granted; People v. George, 2 Idaho, 850, holding that a new trial was not a proper remedy to obtain a rehearing on an issue of law.

Marshaling Securities.—A bankrupt pledgee and mortgagor for the same debt has the right, as against his assignee in bankruptcy, and mortgagee, to have the pledge first sold, so as to reduce the lien on the mortgage and his personal liability, p. 561.

Note to 69 Am. Dec. 160, on loans and their incidents.

62 Cal. 562. PEOPLE v. HARTMAN.

On a trial for larceny, evidence of the commission of another theft at another time is ground for reversal, p. 562.

Cited in Williams v. Casebeer, 126 Cal. 86, applying rule in action for malicious prosecution; People v. Carpenter, 136 Cal. 393, noted under People v. Barnes, 48 Cal. 551. Distinguished in People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 672, holding that the test of admissibility is the connection between the offenses in the mind of the criminal. Approved in same case, p. 676, by Thornton, J., in his opinion in department (which was overruled on a rehearing in bank). Distinguished in People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 81, holding that where two persons are killed at the same time and place, and apparently in the same transaction, evidence as to the circumstances of the killing of one is admissible on the trial for the killing of the other.

62 Cal. 563-575. TREADWELL v. YOLO COUNTY.

Election Law.—All elections for county and township officers are to be held in November of the even numbered years, pp. 564, 565.

Cited by Myrick, J., in his concurring opinion in Staudt v. Election Commissioners, 61 Cal. 324, as applicable to elections under the Hartson act of March 7, 1881.

Repeal of Statute by Implication.—The rule laid down, p. 564.

Cited in Sponogle v. Curnow, 136 Cal. 535, holding statute so repealed; Chamode v. Rose, 70 Cal. 192, holding that the Los Angeles Irrigation act of 1874 repealed the statute of May 15, 1854; Hanley v. Sixteen Horses, 97 Cal. 184, holding that an act of 1878, concerning animals trespassing, being in conflict with a prior act of 1874 on the same subject, repealed that act; Dillon v. Bickell, 116 Cal. 114, approving the ruling of the principal case as to the County Government Act of 1891, and section 4109 of the Political Code as amended in 1881.

62 Cal. 580-602. SAN FRANCISCO GAS LIGHT CO. v. DUNN.

Mandamus will lie to compel the auditor to allow a bill which the board of supervisors has power to approve and has approved; his duty in such case is ministerial, p. 595.

Cited in Contra Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 434, granting writ for auditing of water bills under facts stated; Hunt v. Broderick, 104 Cal. 315, to same point and effect. Distinguished in Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 555, holding that the ruling of the principal case did not apply where the city itself was contesting the claim, and was not precluded from showing that an amount allowed in pursuance of a void contract is in excess of reasonable value.

Contract for Over Two Years by supervisors of San Francisco is prohibited by the act of April 3, 1876, p. 586.

Distinguished in McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 170; 53 Am. St. Rep. 198, showing that the ruling of the principal case was based on the express limitation in the act of 1876, and not of universal application.

Board of Supervisors of San Francisco may, independently of contract, decide to pay for gas supplied, and a resolution allowing, passing, and ordering paid a claim is a fresh contract to pay the sum allowed, p. 588.

Cited in Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 555, holding that the city of San Diego could be held to pay the reasonable value of the use of a water plant which it had actually enjoyed.

Municipal Corporations.—Supervisors may make contract for gas supply extending over a number of years, p. 585.

Cited in Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 181, applying rule to contract for fire alarm and police telegraphic system.

62 Cal. 602-610. COFFEY v. GREENFIELD.

Motion for Nonsuit must state precisely the grounds on which the mover relies, p. 608.

Cited in Silva v. Holland, 74 Cal. 531, to same effect; Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 261, where a motion on the ground "that plaintiffs had failed to prove a sufficient case" held insufficient; Belcher v. Murphy, 81 Cal. 41, to the like effect; Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 582, where, on a claim for services rendered as attorney, it was held error to grant a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence of any employment to render the specific services; Bronan v. Drabaz, 93 Cal. 650, holding that the only ground on which the ruling on a motion for nonsuit can be reviewed is that specifically stated when the motion is made; People v. Sansome, 98 Cal. 239, applying the ruling of the principal case to a motion for new trial in a criminal case; Frank v. Bullion etc. Co., 19 Utah, 45, noted under Poehlman v. Kennedy, 48 Cal. 201; Lewis v. Silver etc. Co., 22 Utah, 53, noted under Kiler v. Kimball, 10 Cal. 268; Wright v. Fire Insurance Co., 12 Mont. 477, sustaining the ruling of the principal case; First National Bank v. Laughlin, 4 N. Dak. 402, to same effect as Bronan v. Drobaz, supra, the court saying: "Naming the grounds operates to exclude all other grounds"; Tanderup v. Hanson, 8 S. Dak. 377, to same effect as to a motion to direct a verdict for defendant.

Intervenor must support his claim by proper averments in the petition, p. 610.

Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 519, defining the objects to be sought by intervention and how they must be shown.

Deed Obtained by Guardian in fraud of the rights of his wards is void, p. 609.

Cited in note to 75 Am. Dec. 448, on personal liability of guardian.

62 Cal. 611-613. ROGERS v. MAHONEY. Confirmation in Bank of the opinion rendered in same case in Department, p. 612.

Exception to Charge must be sufficiently specific to indicate to the court the alleged errors, p. 613.

Cited in Cockrill v. Hall, 76 Cal. 195, to same effect; Frost v. Grizzly Bluff Co., 102 Cal. 527, to same effect; as also Geary v. Parker, 65 Ark. 525; noted under McCreery v. Everding, 44 Cal. 246; note to 85 Am. Dec. 125, on exceptions must point out specific portions of charge excepted to.

62 Cal. 613-614. ESTATE OF DEAN.

An order setting aside a decree settling the final account and decreeing distribution is not appealable, p. 614.

Cited in Estate of Murphy, 128 Cal. 340, and Estate of Tuohy, 23 Mont. 307, noted under Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 232; Lutz v. Christy, 67 Cal. 457, holding the like in case of an order refusing to set aside; Estate of Ward, 83 Cal. 620, to same effect; Estate of Moore, 86 Cal. 59, where substitution of a trustee held not appealable; Estate of Walkerly, 94 Cal. 353, where an order denying a motion to vacate a previous order held not appealable; Estate of Smith, 98 Cal. 639, where an order permitting the amendment of a statement on motion for new trial held not appealable.

62 Cal. 616-617. PEOPLE v. McLANE.

Mandamus.—Writ will not be granted when there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, p. 617.

Cited in note to 89 Am. Dec. 730, on the law of mandamus.

62 Cal. 618-622; 45 Am. Rep. 663. MARTIN v. THOMPSON.

Replevin.—An action cannot be maintained to recover grain sown and harvested by defendant on land to which he claims title, and of which he had adverse possession, p. 619.

Followed in Martin v. Durand, 62 Cal. 623. Cited in Hines v. Good, 123 Cal. 40, 79 Am. St. Rep. 23, and note 24, applying rule to house severed from land; Martin v. Thompson, 63 Cal. 4, holding that a mortgagee who is entitled to immediate possession may intervene in an action by a third person against the mortgagor to recover the same property; Smith v. Cunningham, 67 Cal. 263, saying that replevin cannot be made the vehicle of testing title; Emerson v. Whitaker, 88 Cal. 148, to same effect; Johnston v. Fish, 105 Cal. 422, 45 Am. St. Rep. 55, holding that one in adverse possession under a claim of title and pending an action of ejectment is entitled to dispose of the crops during the period of his possession; Hooker v. Latham, 118 N. C. 187, to same effect as Smith v. Cunningham, supra, note to 89 Am. Dec. 429, on assumption, and idem. 431, on trial of title incidentally in transitory actions.

Refusal to allow amendment of complaint is not reversible where record does not show that proposed amendment was presented or that notice of motion pointed out precise amendment which plaintiff would ask leave to make, p. 622.

Approved in Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 252, applying rule in action to enforce verbal trust.

62 Cal. 623-641. BRICKELL v. BATCHELDER.

Note by Married Woman jointly with her husband made prior to July 1, 1874, does not bind her, p. 640.

Referred to in rehearing of same case, 62 Cal. 640, also in Batchelder v. Brickell, 75 Cal. 374, holding that a modification of the original, direction there should be no personal judgment against the married woman, did not vacate the decree nor the sale made thereunder.

Power of Sale, arising on a default in payment of interest, entitles the mortgagee to foreclose for the whole principal, p. 637.

Cited in Phelps v. Mayers, 126 Cal. 550, holding action maintainable for principal, under terms of note sued on; Maddox v. Wyman, 92 Cal. 675, to same effect, where the note is payable by installments, and the mortgage gives a power of sale on failure to pay any installment.

Right to Compound the Interest in arrear does not prevent the exercise of power of foreclosure, p. 631.

Cited in Clemens v. Luce, 101 Cal. 435, to same point.

62 Cal. 641-646. SAN FRANCISCO GAS CO. v. BRICKWEDEL.

Municipal Indebtedness.—Section 18 of article 11 of the constitution provides that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income of any future year, p. 642.

Cited in Shaw v. Statler, 74 Cal. 259, holding that the ruling arises by necessary implication, although the constitutional provision refers in terms to the incurring of indebtedness and not expressly to its payment; Schwartz v. Wilson, 75 Cal. 505, 506, applies the rule to a claim against a county for supplies. Distinguished in Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 413, holding the constitutional provision did not apply to the salary of a public officer whose office was created and salary fixed by law. Cited in McGowan v. Ford, 107 Cal. 184, holding, besides, that the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to carry an indebtedness over and make it payable out of the revenue of the next fiscal year; Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 648, 48 Am. St. Rep. 170, holding that the constitutional provision could not be evaded by a consent to the entry of a judgment; Weaver v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 322, applying the ruling to a claim for labor and materials supplied to the fire department; McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 164, 53 Am. St. Rep. 194, holding that under a contract, for a purpose authorized by the city charter, for over two years, the sole liability created was that which arose from year to year in separate amounts as the work was performed; Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 547, held any taxpayer could sue to restrain the levy of a municipal tax for the payment of an indebtedness incurred in a previous year; Pacific Undertakers v. Widber, 113 Cal. 202, 203, extending the ruling to a contract for burial of the indigent dead; Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 527, to same effect; S. C. 535, in concurring opinion of Beatty, C. J., holding that the ruling of the principal case was mere dictum; that the true meaning of the section was that the county or municipality could only make valid contracts and incur liabilities to the extent of the revenue provided in advance for their discharge; that such contracts only were valid and all others were utterly void; Montague v. English, 119 Cal. 227, approving the ruling of the principal case; Higgins v. City of San Diego, 131 Cal. 298, holding available the unused balances in special funds; Theiss v. Hunter, 4 Idaho, 793, 794, city indebtedness incurred, during one fiscal year cannot be paid from income or revenue of future fiscal year, unless fund is especially provided for that purpose and collected in such future year; City of Indianapolis v. Wann, 144 Ind. 187, holding that, under the Indiana laws, all contracts and agreements and all obligations of a municipal corporation made in advance of existing appropriations were absolutely void. Distinguished in Western Town Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. Dak. 7, as not applying to a state where there is no such constitutional provision as in California; Mason v. Purdy, 11 Wash. 599, as not applicable to the state of Washington, where the contrary rule prevails; Eidemiller v. Tacoma, 14 Wash. 383, to the like effect. Mentioned in note to 76 Am. Dec. 537, as having cited People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332. Cited in note to 44 Am. St. Rep. 236, on municipal indebtedness.

Taxes are Debts, within the meaning of section 82 of the consolidation act of San Francisco, pp. 644, 645 (concurring opinion of Thornton, J.).

Cited in note to 42 Am. St. Rep. 655, on recovery of personal judgment for taxes.

All Persons are Presumed to Know the Law, p. 642.

Cited to same effect in Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 102.

ORGANIZATION OF SUPREME COURT.

CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE 6, SECTION 2.

§ 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices. The court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. There shall be two departments, denominated, respectively, Department One and Department Two. The chief justice shall assign three of the associate justices to each department, and such assignment may be changed by him from time to time. The associate justices shall be competent to sit in either department, and may interchange with each other by agreement among themselves or as ordered by the chief justice. Each of the departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes and all questions arising therein, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained in relation to the court in Bank. The presence of three justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at chambers, and the concurrence of three justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The chief justice shall apportion the business to the departments, and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the court to be heard and decided by the court in Bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within thirty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two associate justices, and if so made it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. Any four justices may, either before or after judgment by a department, order a case to be heard in Bank. If the order be not made within the time above limited the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of thirty days aforesaid, unless approved by the chief justice, in writing, with the concurrence of two associate justices. The chief justice may convene the court in Bank at any time, and shall be the presiding justice of the court when so convened. The concurrence of four justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in Bank; but if four justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument; but to render a judgment a concurrence of four judges shall be necessary. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the court in Bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated. The chief justice may sit in either department, and shall preside when so sitting, but the justices assigned to each department shall select one of their number as presiding justice. In case of the absence of the chief justice from the place at which the court is held, or his inability to act, the associate justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties, and exercise the powers of the chief justice during such absence or inability to act.

REPORTS OF CASES DETERMINED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

[Department One.— January 2, 1882.]

S. B. MARTIN, RESPONDENT, v. A. THOMPSON, JOSEPH WATERMAN, INTERVENOR, APPELLANT.

INTERVENTION.— A mortgagee of personal property who is entitled by the terms of his mortgage to immediate possession may intervene in an action by a third person against the mortgagor to recover the specific property, and his right to intervene is not affected by the plaintiff's taking possession of the property at the commencement of the action on giving a bond as provided by the statute.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

Defendant raised a crop of grain on land held by him adversely to plaintiff, and mortgaged the growing crop to the intervenor. Plaintiff as owner of the land replevied the crop as soon as harvested. The mortgagee asked leave to intervene. His application was denied and he appealed.

Curtis H. Lindley, and Arthur Rodgers, for Appellant, cited Horn v. Volcano Water Co. 13 Cal. 62; Speyers v. Ishmels, 21 Cal. 287; Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 154; Stich v. Gardner, 38 Cal. 610; Coburn v. Smart, 53 Cal. 742; Coffey v. Greenfield, 55 Cal. 382; Robinson v. Fitch, 26 Ohio St. 659; Heyland v. Badger, 85 Cal. 404; Butler v. Miller, 1 N. Y. 497.

Mich. Mullany, for Respondent, cited Civ. Code, §§ 2972; Waterman v. Grun, 59 Cal. 142; Goodyear v. Willist, 42 Cal. 11.

PER CURIAM.—The question here to be determined whether a mortgagee of personal property, entitled by the terms of his mortgage to the immediate possession, can intervene in an action brought by a third person against the mortgagor for the specific property, where the plaintiff has taken possession at the commencement of the action, upon giving bond as provided by the statute.

As between plaintiff and defendant the present is like the case of Martin v. Thompson, 82 Cal. 618.

It seems to be held by the court below that intervenor's lien and right of possession was lost when he filed his petition, the cause, prior to that date plaintiff had removed the grain from the mortgagor's farm. But the chapter of the Civil Code which treats of mortgages of personal property (§§ 2955, 2972) substitutes the record of the mortgage for the actual delivery and continued change of possession in case of other transfers required by § 3440. The purpose of the actual delivery, in the one case, and of the record or registry in the other, is to give notice to those who shall deal with the vendor or mortgagor, and § 2972 only provides that the lien of a mortgage in a growing crop shall cease when the crop is removed from the premises of the mortgagor — as against creditors or innocent purchasers from the mortgagor. There is nothing in the letter of the Code which demands such construction of § 2972 as that the lien shall be lost as a consequence of the tortious removal of the crop by a third person.

When the crop was removed by plaintiff intervenor who was entitled to its immediate possession. True, defendant was not in the actual possession, and was authorized to recover the property as against a trespasser who should remove it. While either the mortgagee entitled to the immediate possession, or the mortgagor in actual possession, would have been entitled to bring an action of trespass (or trover, or our statutory action) against one wrongfully interfering with the property, a recovery by one would be a bar to an action by the other. So, here, defendant and intervenor cannot both take judgment against plaintiff for a recovery of the property, or its value. In this form of action all parties are actors, seeking affirmative relief. Who should have the property in dispute, or its value? The defendant is entitled to recover it from the plaintiff, but the intervenor is entitled to it both as against the plaintiff and defendant. It is a proper case for intervention. (Code Civ. Proc. § 387.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, with direction to the court below to allow such amendments to the pleadings, properly applied for, as may be just and proper.

Hearing in Bank denied.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF GIOVANNI SBARBORO, DECEASED.

PROBATE OF WILL — PETITION TO REVOKE — LIMITATION — POWER OF COURT.—

A petition to revoke the probate of a will, if the parties are under no disability, must be filed within a year after the entry of the decree admitting the will to probate. The clerk of the court is the only person with whom the petition can be filed, and it must be delivered to him before the year expires. Presenting it to the judge out of court for the purpose of having a citation issued upon it is not enough. It must be filed with the clerk, and if not so filed prior to the expiration of the year, the decree becomes conclusive and absolute. An order subsequently made by the court directing the clerk to file it as of a day within the year cannot be sustained.

APPEAL from certain orders and a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

John M. Burnett, and E. D. Sawyer, for Appellants.

The presentation of the petition for the revocation of the probate of the will to the judge at his private residence, on the 2d day of December, 1879, and his retention of the same for examination, and his delivery thereof to the clerk, on the 3d day of December, was not the filing in the court in which the will was heard, as required by the statute, and that therefore said petition was not filed within one year after the probate of the will. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327; Tregambo v. Comanche Mill and Mining Co. 57 Cal. 501; Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 91; Bouvier Law Dictionary, word "file"; Lamson v. Falls, 6 Ind. 309.)

The clerk is the custodian of the papers, and alone can mark them filed.

Aug. D. Splivalo, and R. W. Hent, for Respondents.

There is no law or provision that a paper which has to be filed in court should be delivered for filing to the clerk rather than the judge. The authorities say that the words "judge" and "court" are synonymous. (Michigan R. R. Co. v. N. Ind. R. R. Co. 3 Ind. 239; Gold v. Vermont C. R. R. 19 Vt. 478; McClure v. McClurey, 52 Mo. 173.)

Petitioners herein did present an unfiled petition for action, and the moment the judge took it into his possession it was filed in court; it was taken official possession of and considered with the other papers in the case, and upon this filed petition the order of citation was issued by the court. (Tregambo v. Comanche M. & M. Co. 57 Cal. 501; Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 91; Bishop v. Cook, 13 Barb. 326; Lamson v. Falls, 6 Ind. 309.)

The last case is to the point. It says: "To file a paper is considered an exhibition of it to the court, and the clerk's office in which it is filed represents the court for that purpose."

McKEE, J.— This appeal is from certain orders and a judgment entered in a proceeding for revocation of the probate of the last will and testament of G. Sbarboro, deceased.

Proceedings for the revocation of the probate of a will must be commenced in the court in which the will was proved, within one year after the probate. (§ 1327, Code Civ. Proc.) If the validity of the will or its probate be not contested within that time, the validity and probate become final and conclusive upon all parties interested in the estate, except infants and persons of unsound mind. (§§ 1333, 1908, Code Civ. Proc.) Proceedings for contesting the probate of a will are a suit in the nature of an action by parties interested in the estate against the administrator, with the will annexed, or the executor of the will, the legatees, devisees, and heirs of the estate, and they are commenced by filing a petition in the court in which the will was proved. A petition is filed by delivering it to be filed to the officer of the court who is entitled to receive it for that purpose, and to the custody of it after it has been filed. The clerk of the court below was the only person entitled to the custody of the petition. As custodian of the papers of a cause, he was, therefore, the only person to whom the petition could have been presented for filing, and when presented it was his duty to receive and indorse it filed. As matter of fact the petition in the case was delivered to the clerk of the court for filing about nine o'clock A. M. of the 3d day of December, 1879; but the decree of the court admitting the will to probate had been entered on the 2d day of December, 1878, and the "year" within which the probate could be contested had run at midnight of December 2, 1879; therefore the petition was not filed in time, and the validity of the will and its probate became final and conclusive upon the petitioners — there being no legal disabilities. However, the clerk indorsed the petition as follows: "Filed by order of court Dec. 2, 1879" But the indorsement was made on the 4th day of December, 1879, under the following order made by the court on the same day: "It is by this court ordered that the clerk of this court mark the said petition filed as of December 2, 1879, and that he make and enter the said order as of the same day." That order was made upon proof to the satisfaction of the court that between the hours of seven and eight o'clock P. M. of December 2, 1879, the petition, before it was filed or presented to the clerk for filing, had been presented to the judge of the court at his private residence, for an order for the issuance of a citation upon it, and for the purpose of examining it, so as to determine whether the petitioners were entitled to the order, the judge retained the petition in his possession until the morning of the 3d day of December, 1879, when he took it to the office of the clerk of the court, and about nine o'clock A. M. on that day delivered it with his order for the issuance of a citation thereon, to one of the deputy clerks of the court, in the clerk's office, and verbally directed him to file the same as of the 2d day of December, 1879; but the clerk did not, at the time of receiving the petition from the judge, file it, because the attorneys for the administrator with the will annexed, being present, objected; and on the 4th day of December, 1879, the court heard the objection and overruled it, and made the order requiring the clerk to indorse the petition filed as of the 2d day of December, 1879, which was accordingly done. The court afterwards refused to set aside its order, and denied a motion made to correct the indorsement of the filing by the clerk so as to show the true date of the filing, but upon the trial found the facts as to the presentation and filing of the petition upon which its order was made.

The ruling and order of the court were erroneous. As the petition had not been, in fact, filed in the court within the "year," it was too late to file it at all; and the court could not legally, after the expiration of the time, by order, relieve the petitioners from the legal consequences of their own laches or delay. Time was of the essence of the proceedings commenced by the petitioners. The provisions of the law directing the proceedings to be had and the time within which they might be commenced were, in that regard, imperative, not directory, for the law declared the effect of not commencing them in time — it made the thing which the proceedings were intended to assail conclusive and unassailable; and the court in which the proceedings were begun had no authority by order or otherwise to direct that to be done, which had not, in fact, been done, or to adjudge that which the law pronounced conclusive to be invalid and void.

Presenting an unfiled petition to the judge of a court for the purpose of obtaining from him an order for a citation upon it, is not filing it in court, nor the equivalent of filing it. It is no part of the duty of a judge to receive a petition in a cause for filing, or to file it, or to make an order for its filing, or for issuing a citation upon it, unless some law expressly requires of him the performance of such a duty. There was no law which required of the judge of the court in this case performance of any one of those acts. The duty of filing the petition, and issuing citation upon it, when filed, was cast by law upon the clerk of the court. (§ 1328, Code Civ. Proc.) Being purely ministerial acts, they had to be done within the time prescribed by law; and as they were not done by the proper officer, the rights of parties which had attached and become fixed by reason of their non-performance could not be disturbed. It was, therefore, error for the court by its order to direct the clerk to indorse on the petition that it had been filed on a day when it was not, in fact, filed nor delivered to him for filing. The order to that effect should have been set aside and the petition itself dismissed.

Judgment and orders reversed and cause remanded.

McKINSTRY, J., and ROSS, J., concurred.

Hearing in Bank denied.

M. J. O'CONNOR, APPELLANT, v. LORENZO FOGLE, RESPONDENT.

EJECTMENT — EVIDENCE — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — PAYMENT OF TAXES.—

The plaintiff claimed under a patent from the State. More than five years elapsed between the issuing of the patent and the commencement of the action. The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations, and relied upon an adverse possession commencing before the patent issued. It appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff had paid the taxes upon the land. The court instructed the jury as to the proof required to make out an adverse possession, and that in addition to the fact of possession and its adverse character, it was necessary for the defendant to show that the taxes had been paid by him. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant. Held, (1) that the statute could not commence to run until the issuing of the patent; (2) that the possession of the defendant, even if sufficient in other respects, was not adverse because of his failure to pay the taxes.

APPEAL from the judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Los Angeles, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Bicknell & White, for Appellant.

William D. Gould, James H. Blanchard, and Brunson & Wells, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—This appeal is from the final judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial in this case. The action was ejectment. By the record it appears that the plaintiff claimed a right of entry to the demanded premises through a patent which had been issued by the State of California, April 24, 1874, to the immediate grantor of the plaintiff. The patent vested in the patentee title to the land, and, as his grantee, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession unless his cause of action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. That was the defense interposed to the action by the following answer:—

“And for a further and separate answer and defense the defendant alleges that he has been in the quiet, peaceful, and exclusive possession of said land in the plaintiff's complaint described, holding and claiming the same adversely to said plaintiff, and adversely to all other persons for more than five years before the commencement of this suit, to wit, ever since prior to September 1, 1870, and that neither the plaintiff, nor either of his ancestors or ancestor, predecessor, or grantors was ever seized or possessed of the said land, or any portion of the same within five years before the commencement of this action, or at all.”

The evidence given upon the issue raised by this answer tended to prove that the defendant entered on the land in the year 1870, as a qualified pre-emptor. At that time the land was part of the public domain of the United States within this State. While residing on the land with his family, the defendant, in December, 1870, filed his declaratory statement in the United States land office in the district within which the land was situated. When he filed this statement the township had been surveyed by the United States authorities, the survey was approved, and the plat of the survey had been filed in the proper United States land office. Subsequent, however, to the filing of the township plat, and of the declaratory statement, the land was listed to the State of California, in fulfillment of a selection, which had been made by the State prior to the United States surveys of the land; and on April 24, 1874, the State issued the patent to the plaintiff's grantor. Against the listing of the land to the State the defendant protested, and contested the title of the State; but the United States authorities decided the contest against him, and in December, 1876, canceled his declaratory statement. Yet the defendant continued to reside with his family on the land, as before the issuance of the patent, and has since continuously resided thereon, claiming title to it against the plaintiff and others; but his claim of title was not founded upon any instrument in writing, judgment, or decree of a competent court; it was founded only on what was claimed to have been an adverse possession of the land for the statutory time. Of course, if there was a sufficient adverse possession to put in motion the Statute of Limitations the time of the statute began to run in favor of the defendant only from the date of the patent to the plaintiff; it did not run against the United States nor the State. (Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 46; Johnson v. Van Dyke, 20 Cal. 228; Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 580; Sabichi v. Aguilar, 43 Cal. 291; Manley v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94.) From the date of the patent to the commencement of the action there was a period of seven years, and the question is, Was the possession of the defendant during that time adverse?

To constitute such a possession in favor of one who does not claim under color of title, land is deemed to have been possessed and occupied in the following cases only:—

“1. Where it has been protected by a substantial enclosure.

“2. Where it has been usually cultivated or improved.

“Provided, however, that in no case shall adverse possession be considered established, under the provision of any section or sections of the Code, unless it shall be shown that the land has been occupied and claimed for the period of five years continuously, and the party or persons, their predecessors and grantors, have paid all the taxes, State, county, or municipal, which have been levied and assessed upon such land.” (§ 325, Code Civ. Proc.) That was the law in force at the commencement of the action, upon the subject of adverse possession; and to entitle the defendant to its benefits he was bound to show a compliance with its provisions. According to the uncontroverted evidence of the defendant himself, he failed to show an adverse possession, for the land was not protected by a substantial enclosure; nor has it been exclusively cultivated by the defendant; nor has he paid the taxes upon the land; on the contrary, it is an uncontroverted fact that the plaintiff has paid the taxes every year.

Upon the subject of his occupation, the defendant, upon his examination as a witness in his own behalf, testified that he had built a house, dug several wells, and made some corrals on the land after he had entered on it as a pre-emptor; that since then he had continuously resided upon it, "claiming it all as a pre-emptor of government land, adversely to everybody," and cultivated a portion of the tract, at no time exceeding twenty or twenty-five acres, for several years. Assuming that such an occupation, without an actual enclosure of the tract, would be sufficient, yet, as the defendant failed to pay the taxes on the land, he has not performed the acts required by the Statute of Limitations. In consequence of that failure, there was no such adverse possession taken and held by him, with the requisites and circumstances specified in the Code, as entitled him to the benefit of the Statute of Limitations. Therefore, in law, he is to be regarded as a mere trespasser. The verdict was therefore against the evidence, and the instructions of law given by the court, and should have been set aside.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

Ross, J., and McKINSTRY, J., concurred.

[Department One.—January 2, 1883.]

JOHN L. MOORE, APPELLANT, v. EDWARD M. JONES
ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

HUSBAND AND WIFE — COMMUNITY AND SEPARATE PROPERTY — CONVEYANCE TO WIFE — PRESUMPTION.— Real estate conveyed to a married woman for a money consideration expressed in the deed is presumed to be community property, but this presumption is not conclusive. It may be overcome by evidence that the purchase was made with her separate money, and such evidence is admissible against a purchaser from the husband after the death of the wife.

Id. — DEPOSIT — AGENCY — TRUST.— Money of the wife deposited with the husband, and mingled by him with the moneys of other persons in his possession, does not lose its character as her separate money. In such a case the husband becomes the agent and trustee of the wife and not merely her debtor. Property purchased in her name and at her request by the husband acting as her agent, and paid for out of her portion of the common fund thus created, is her separate property.

Id. — DECLARATIONS OF THE HUSBAND.— For the purpose of showing that the money used in making the purchase was the separate money of the wife, declarations of the husband made prior to the conveyance by him are competent evidence.

Id. — FINDING — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.— The court below found in substance that the purchase was made, and the property improved with money belonging to the wife as her separate estate. Held, that under this finding the property must be regarded as the separate estate of the wife; and on a review of the evidence, held further, that it was sufficient to support the finding.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was brought by the purchaser from the husband to quiet title. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Shafter, Parker & Waterman, for Appellant.

1. The defendants must establish the fact beyond reasonable controversy that the money which was paid to Sullivan and to the fund commissioners was her separate estate, or the property must be deemed common. (Gamber v. Gamber, 18 Pa. St. 363; Stanton v. Kirsch, 6 Wis. 341.)

2. The whole case shows that Mrs. Jones was simply her husband's creditor, no trust existing between them. (7 R. I. 481; Gibson v. Foote, 40 Miss. 788; Northington v. Faber, 52 Ala. 45; Rowland v. Blumer, 58 Ala. 193; Taney v. Wilson, 68 Md. 493; Thomas v. Thomas, 45 Miss. 263; Shaeffer v. Fithian, 26 Ohio St. 262; Logan v. Hall, 19 Iowa, 501; Boach v. Bennett, 24 Miss. 104; Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 447.)

3. The effect of commingling the money was to make it the property of Jones. (Vreeland v. Administrators, 16 N. J. Eq. 523; Glover v. Alcott, 11 Mich. 479; Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 247; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 131; Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 42; Riley v. Pehl and wife, 23 Cal. 71; McDonald v. Badger, 23 Cal. 394; Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 237.)

4. There were many errors committed by the court below in admitting testimony. (1) Admitting Jones' statement as to the person for whom he was buying the premises; (2) similar statements testified to by Mrs. O. A. Phelps, made not on the land nor as part of the act of purchase or payment. (McFadden v. Ellmaker, 52 Cal. 348.)

A. N. Drown, and W. H. L. Barnes, for Respondents.

McKEE, J.—In this case it appears that on the 28th of February, 1858, John Sullivan, being in possession of the lot of land in controversy, sold and conveyed it to Mary R. Jones by a deed which recited a consideration of two thousand seven hundred and twenty-five dollars. The grantee named in the deed was at the time the wife of Edward Jones. Under the deed she and her husband entered into possession of the lot and fenced it and built upon it a dwelling-house, which the family resided. While in possession application was made to the commissioners of the funded debt of the city and county of San Francisco, for title to the lot, under the provisions of an act of the legislature of California, approved April 14, 1862; and the commissioners conveyed the lot in the name of Mrs. Jones by a deed reciting consideration of five hundred dollars. On the 7th of January, 1864, Mrs. Jones died, leaving surviving her husband and three children — one of whom has since died, and the other two are the defendants and respondents in this case.

On the 12th of April, 1865, the surviving husband conveyed the premises by deed to the plaintiff and appellant, who brought the action in this case against the children to quiet his title to the lot.

From the fact that the Sullivan deed and the deed by the commissioners of the funded debt were made during coverture in the name of the wife, the presumption arises that the property thus acquired was community property, which, upon the death of the wife, belonged, without administration, to the surviving husband, who had the right to dispose of it (§ 1401, Civil Code); but that was a controvertible presumption, subject to be rebutted by proof that the consideration moneys, recited in the deeds, were paid out of the separate funds of the wife; and that the plaintiff as purchaser of the property from the husband, who was not named in the deed, took with notice that the purchase money may have been paid by the wife, with the moneys belonging to her separate estate, and that the property was the separate property of the wife. Of course a contestant of the presumption that property thus acquired is community property must overcome that presumption by satisfactory proof to the contrary; hence it was incumbent on the defendants to establish that the moneys which were paid to Sullivan and the funded debt commissioners for the lot were of the separate estate of their mother to whom the deed was made during coverture.

The court found that the moneys with which the lot was purchased and improved were the separate estate of Mrs. Jones.

That fact being established, the land and premises were her separate estate; and as she died intestate, and seized of them at her death, they descended to her heirs — her surviving husband and three children — and were vested in them in the following proportions: One third thereof in Edward Jones, the surviving husband, and two ninths in each of the three children — the death of one of the children afterwards leaving the entire two thirds interest in the surviving children; therefore, the plaintiff by his deed from Edward Jones took only an undivided one third interest in the property.

It is, however, claimed that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding and decision of the court, that the property was purchased with the separate funds of Mrs. Jones, and that it became her separate estate; but we think the proof abundantly established both. It was clearly established that Mrs. Jones had received, during coverture, from the estate of her father, Jacob S. Moore, deceased, over twenty thousand dollars in coupons and bonds, bank certificates and drafts, the moneys realized from which she deposited with her husband. At the same time the husband was in the habit of receiving moneys from many parties, which he kept with the money of his own and of Mrs. Jones mixed indiscriminately in his safe; and when the property in controversy was purchased, he paid for it with money withdrawn from the mixed fund. But the purchase was made for her and in her name, and the purchase money was paid out of her separate funds by the husband, as her agent, "at her desire and request," and it was in effect a payment made by herself. (Drais v. Hogan, 50 Cal. 121.) The fact that the husband had commingled her money with the moneys of other persons did not divest her of her rights to her separate fund. It was in the hands of the husband as her agent and trustee, who was entitled by law to the control and management of it. Commingling it with the money of others did not destroy it as her separate property, nor change the relation of trustee and cestui que trust as to its custody, to that of debtor and creditor. "Money has no ear marks, and for that very reason the mingling of trust with private funds can injure no one. The value being the same, and it being matter of the most perfect indifference whether parties get the same or other coin, so they get the sum to which each is entitled, there can result no injury to any one. Common sense will not discuss the question of identity, when nothing useful can result from its determination." (Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 660; Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17.)

There was no error in admitting in evidence declarations made by the husband to the different witnesses, that the money with which the property was purchased belonged to the wife as her separate property. The declarations to that effect to the witness Sullivan, from whom the property was purchased, at the time of the purchase, were part of the res gestæ (People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49; § 1850, Code Civ. Proc.); and those made to the other witnesses were admissible as the declarations of a grantor made in relation to the property, while holding title to it against the plaintiff as his grantee. (§ 1849, Code Civ. Proc.; Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603; Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 148; McFadden v. Ellmaker, 52 Cal. 348.)

Judgment and order affirmed.

JACKSON L. DENNIS ET AL., APPELLANTS, v. JOHN WINTER, RESPONDENT.

SALE BY AN ADMINISTRATOR — PROCEEDINGS — COLLATERAL ATTACK.—Proceedings in the course of administration with reference to the sale of land belonging to the estate of a deceased person cannot be collaterally attacked except for want of jurisdiction in the court.

ID.—PETITION.—Defects in the petition arising from a failure to state fully the facts giving the court jurisdiction and showing the sale to be necessary will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings, if such defects are supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing the necessity for the sale be stated in the decree directing it to be made.

ID.—RETURN OF SALE — ORDER OF CONFIRMATION — RECITAL.—No title passes until the sale is reported to and confirmed by the court. The report must be made under oath, but a recital in the order of confirmation that it was so made is conclusive as against a collateral attack.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Yolo, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was ejectment. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

G. P. Harding, and R. Clark, for Appellants.

C. P. Sprague, C. H. Garoutte, and J. Craig, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.—It appears from the evidence in this case that the land sued for was owned by one B. S. Dennis, under whom plaintiffs claim title as heirs, and that it was sold under an order of the Probate Court, the defendant becoming the purchaser. The questions in the case involve the regularity and validity of the proceedings in the Probate Court, culminating in a sale and the execution of a deed to the purchaser by the administrator of the estate of B. S. Dennis, deceased. The defendant had judgment in the court below.

It will not be necessary, and it is not our intention to examine all the questions presented on the appeal, but we will content ourselves with an examination of such points as we consider determinative of the case.

The first point made relates to the sufficiency of the petition upon which the order of sale was made. It is important to bear in mind that this is not an appeal from a judgment or order of the Probate Court, made in the course of administration, but it is a collateral attack upon the proceedings had in that court. If, therefore, the court (which was in that proceeding one of general jurisdiction) had jurisdiction to make the orders attacked and to take the proceedings resulting in the sale of the land, its judgment and orders must be treated, for the purposes of the present case, as conclusive of the matters determined by them.

Does the record show facts sufficient to give the court jurisdiction? We think it does. Section 1537 of the Code of Civil Procedure designates the facts which such a petition must contain, and an examination of the petition, the sufficiency of which we are now considering, will show that it (aided as it is by the order of sale) substantially complies with the requirements of the Code. If the petition does not set forth all the facts showing the sale to be necessary, and giving the court jurisdiction, such failure will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings "if the defect be supplied by the proofs at the hearing, and the general facts showing such necessity be stated in the decree."

(§ 1537, Code Civ. Proc.) The order of sale contained a full recital of the facts, showing that the case was a proper one for the sale of the real estate of the deceased.

The next point is that the return of sale was not verified, as required by § 1517 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section declares that "no sale of any property of an estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the Superior Court, except as otherwise provided in this chapter. All sales must be, under oath, reported to and confirmed by the court before the title to the property sold passes."

It is not necessary for us to determine whether a failure to make a return of the sale under oath would affect the validity of the title in a collateral attack upon the judgment, because we have in this case a recital in the order confirming the sale that the return of the sale was duly verified by affidavit. This recital is conclusive in the present case, and a finding of fact to the contrary does not in any manner affect the conclusiveness of the recital in the decree. The fact was not a jurisdictional one, and the principle applicable to the inconclusiveness of statements or recitals in judgments, conferring jurisdiction, does not apply. (McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570.)

What we have already said disposes of the objections to the order and notice of sale. The matters complained of were mere irregularities at the most, and do not affect the title acquired by the defendant. In this collateral attack such objections cannot prevail.

Judgment and order affirmed.

THE PEOPLE, RESPONDENT, v. VICENTE GARCIA,
APPELLANT.

EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATION.—It is not necessary that each witness testifying to a dying declaration should definitely fix the belief of the person making the declaration that death was imminent. The sense of impending death may be shown by one witness, and the declaration proved by another.

ID.—STATEMENTS BY ACCOMPLICE.—Statements made by an accomplice to an arresting officer, respecting the knife with which the murder was committed, are admissible, notwithstanding the defendant on trial was not immediately connected therewith.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Ventura County.

The defendants, Romualdo Olivas and Cirildo de Jesus Soso, were jointly informed against for the murder of Estanislau. The defendants demanded a separate trial, and Olivas was found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The information against Soso was dismissed, and he was made a witness for the prosecution, and the defendant Garcia was convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

At the trial of the defendant the court admitted the testimony of S. M. W. Easley, under sheriff, as to statements made to him by Olivas at the time of his arrest as follows: "That he (Olivas) had lost his knife some weeks before, and that when he came into town Mrs. Chewanos brought this knife (a large bowie) and gave it to him, and he did not know how the blood stains came on there."

Easley then told Olivas that Soso had told them all about the killing, and that Garcia had done the killing, and that Soso and Olivas were present. Olivas then said: "He went to bed that night (the night of the murder) at Chewanos' house, and the next morning when he got up Soso brought this knife, and gave it to him bloody."

The remaining facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

RETURN ROBERTS, RESPONDENT, v. CLEMENTE
COLUMBET, APPELLANT.

EJECTMENT — STATE PATENT — SCHOOL LAND LOCATION.—The action was brought to recover land claimed by the plaintiff under a State patent issued in September, 1875, upon an application made in December, 1874. The only defense set up in the answer was a general denial. In October, 1853, the defendant located upon the land a school land warrant issued under an act of the legislature passed on the 3d of May, 1853, to provide for the disposition of the five hundred thousand acres of land donated to the State by the United States. At the time of the location, the land was a part of the public domain of the United States, and had not been surveyed. The survey was made in 1866, and thereupon the State selected certain lands, including the demanded premises, in part satisfaction of the five hundred thousand acre grant. In 1870 the lands so selected were listed to the State by the Commissioner of the General Land Office with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Held, that the location was valid as between the State and the defendant, that as soon as the land was listed to the State the title passed to the defendant, and that proof of the facts on which the title rested was admissible under a general denial.

APPEAL from a judgment of the late District Court in and for the county of Santa Clara.

Moore, Laine & Leib, for Appellant.

McKisick & Rankin, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—Ejectment. The plaintiff claims title to the demanded premises under a State patent issued to him September 17, 1875, upon an application made by him December 1, 1874.

The defendant claims under a State five hundred thousand acre land warrant location, made in October, 1853, under an act of the State legislature, approved May 3, 1852, providing for the disposal of the five hundred thousand acres of land donated to the State by the United States.

The land was not surveyed by the United States until 1866, and in 1867 the proper agent of the State selected and located the demanded premises (and other lands), in part satisfaction of the five hundred thousand acre grant made to the State by the act of Congress, which land was listed to the State by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, in 1870.

If the land in controversy had been surveyed by the United States prior to the location of the school land warrant under which the defendant claims, it does not seem to us that his title could be seriously questioned. But it is claimed on behalf of respondent that the purchasers of school land warrants from the State were only authorized "to locate the same upon any vacant and unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within the State of California subject to location," and that unsurveyed lands of the United States were not "subject to location."

That the act of Congress granting five hundred thousand acres of land to the State did not authorize it to select any land which had not been surveyed by authority of the United States is not controverted. And yet the act of the legislature of May 3, 1852, did provide for the location of school land warrants upon government lands before the same had been surveyed by the United States, and for the issuance of patents, in such manner and form as the legislature might thereafter direct, to those who so located any of said warrants.

As against the United States the locators of school land warrants upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands acquired no rights before the land upon which they located their warrants was listed to the State. The United States dealt with the State only. So that the only question in this case is what, if any, right the appellant acquired to the land in controversy as against the State and those who claim under it by virtue of a location made subsequently to that under which he claims.

The donation by Congress to the State was of five hundred thousand acres of land to be selected from lands of the United States after the same had been surveyed by its authority. Instead of waiting for such survey to be made the State proceeded to select and dispose of lands which had not been so surveyed. By so doing the State undertook to dispose of land to which it had not acquired, but to which it expected to acquire the title from the United States. The only obligation which the State thereby incurred, if any, was to convey to such locators the title to the lands located by them in the event of the same being thereafter listed to the State.

The Act of May 3, 1852, not only provided for the location of school land warrants upon unsurveyed lands of the United States, but provided for the issuance of patents to such locators after the lands embraced within their locations had been surveyed by the United States. Unless that act contravened some law of the United States it amounted to a contract between the State and any person, who, in accordance with its provisions, located a school land warrant upon any government land before the same had been surveyed. In other words, the State undertook and promised for a sufficient consideration to convey to such locator the land upon which he located his warrant, if the United States should at any time thereafter convey such land to the State. We are unable to discover any reason why the State could not make such a contract. And if it could its contract with a private person must be construed precisely as it would be if both parties were private persons. (Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203; Hall v. Wisconsin, 13 Otto, 5.)

In the case before us the State, in 1852, sold a school land warrant which, in 1853, was located upon the land sued for in this action. In 1866 said land was surveyed by the United States, and in 1870 listed to the State in part satisfaction of the five hundred thousand acre grant. In 1874 the respondent made application to purchase said land with a school land warrant, and said application was approved by the Surveyor-General, and in pursuance thereof a patent was issued to respondent in 1875. Both purchases were made with school land warrants — one in 1853 and the other in 1874. The first was made in strict conformity with the provisions of a statute of the State then in force. But it is claimed that that statute, so far as it provided for the disposition of any part of the five hundred thousand acre grant before such part had been surveyed by the United States, was void. And this position is supported by the cases of Hastings v. Devlin, 40 Cal. 358; Hastings v. Jackson, 46 Cal. 243; People v. Jackson, filed June 16, 1891. And although this question was not necessarily involved in Terry v. Megerle, 24 Cal. 609; Megerle v. Ashe, 27 Cal. 322; Grogan v. Knight, 27 Cal. 516; Smith v. Athearn, 34 Cal. 506; Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 371; or Churchill v. Anderson, 53 Cal. 212, there are expressions to be found in each of them which indicate that the views of the court were then in harmony with the decision in Hastings v. Jackson, supra.

But we think this case distinguishable from Hastings v. Dev- lin, supra. In that case both locations were made prior to the passage of the act of Congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," the first section of which provides "that in all cases where the State of California has heretofore made selections of any portion of the public domain in part satisfaction of any grant made to said State by any act of Congress, and has disposed of the same to purchasers in good faith under her laws, the lands so selected shall be, and hereby are, confirmed to said State."

In that case there had been a valid location as well as an invalid one made upon the land before the passage of said act. Congress could not and did not attempt to invalidate valid sales made by the State prior to the passage of said act. It simply confirmed to the State lands which had been previously selected by the State and disposed of by it to purchasers in good faith. If a valid selection and sale had been made before the passage of that act, the title of the purchaser in good faith required no confirmation, and could not be affected by any act of Congress or of the State legislature. This is too clear to admit of argument, and illustrates the difference between that case and this. In this case the State made the selection and disposed of the land to the appellant, a purchaser in good faith, before the passage of the act confirming to the State lands so selected and disposed of by it. And it does not appear that at the date of the passage of the act of July 23, 1866, there was any claim to the land adverse to that of the appellant herein. So that the appellant was in a position to reap the full benefit which that act conferred upon purchasers who, prior to the passage of said act, had purchased in good faith of the State lands donated to it by the United States.

The question upon which the decision of the case must turn is whether the appellant is in a position to defend his right of possession as against the respondent in an action of ejectment, under an answer containing nothing more than a general denial. If the legal title to the demanded premises had vested in the appellant before the commencement of the action, he could have shown that fact under the general denial.

The act of Congress to which we have referred characterizes the transaction between the State and the appellant as a disposition of the land in controversy by the former "under her laws" to the latter. Congress in that act treats the lands to which it refers as disposed of by the State, and confirms and ratifies that disposition. Was not that sufficient to vest the legal title in the appellant? At the date of the passage of that act of Congress the title was undoubtedly in the United States. But the State "under her laws" had "disposed of the same" to a purchaser "in good faith," and Congress in effect said to the State, "Inasmuch as you have done this, the United States will confirm said land to you."

The provision of the act of Congress is not so clearly worded as it might have been, but the intention, obviously, was to confirm the disposition which the State had made of lands to purchasers in good faith under the laws. And we must construe it according to the intention of Congress. And thus construed, it is doubtless vested in those who had prematurely purchased from the State lands donated to it by the United States, the legal title to such lands.

In the Act of July 23, 1866, Congress starts out with the declaration "that in all cases where the State of California has heretofore made selections of any portion of the public domain in part satisfaction of any grant made to said State by any act of Congress, and has disposed of the same to purchasers in good faith under her laws, the lands so selected shall be and hereby are confirmed to said State." The intention clearly was to place the purchaser in the same position that he would have occupied if the State, at the time of his purchase, had held the title to the land purchased. And this view is strengthened by a clause in the third section of the act, where such a purchaser is referred to as "the holder of the State title."

Sections 2 and 3 of the act do not in any way qualify the first clause of section 1. The confirmation contained in the first section is not made to depend upon a compliance with any of the provisions of the sections which follow it. The latter simply point out the methods by which the State may have the lands listed to it by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. But it is nowhere enacted that neglect or failure to comply with those provisions shall in any way affect the grant contained in the first section.

The case as presented by the record now before us is substantially as follows: By the Act of Congress of September 4, 1841, five hundred thousand acres of land were granted to the State, to be selected "in such manner as the legislature thereof" should direct. And the legislature in the Act of May 3, 1852, directed in what manner such lands should be selected, and the land in controversy was selected and sold to the appellant in strict conformity to the provisions of said last-mentioned act. If the land so selected and sold had been surveyed by the United States, but not listed to the State prior to such selection and sale, could the purchaser in possession under an answer containing a general denial only have availed himself of these facts as a defense in an action of ejectment brought against him for the recovery of the possession of the same land by one who had purchased the same from the State and received a patent therefor, after such land had been listed to the State under a selection made subsequently to that under which the first locator purchased? If the grant by Congress to the State became absolute as soon as the State made a selection in such manner as the legislature directed that it should be made, and the grant by the State became absolute as soon as the locator of the warrant had fully complied with the requirements of the Act of May 3, 1852, it does seem to us that the first purchaser in such a case would become vested with a prior title which he might avail himself of under a general denial in an action of ejectment even against a patent issued to a subsequent purchaser. And since the passage of the Act of July 23, 1866, we think that the position of the appellant has been essentially the same as it would have been if the land upon which he located his warrant had been, before the date of such location, surveyed by the United States.

MURDER — INSUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION — MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.—Malice aforethought is a necessary ingredient in the crime of murder, and should be alleged in the indictment or information, either expressly or by words equivalent in their import.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Butte County.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Reardan & Freer, and J. C. Gray, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—The appellant was tried and found guilty of murder of the first degree upon an information which alleged that he committed the crime of murder as follows: "The said Herman Schmidt, on the 24th day of June, 1882, at the county of Butte, and State of California, and before the finding of this information, wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously, did shoot, kill, and murder M. Schmidt, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the State of California."

"Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." (Pen. Code, § 187.) Malice aforethought is a necessary ingredient in the crime of murder, and should therefore be alleged in the indictment. (People v. Urias, 12 Cal. 325; People v. King, 27 Cal. 507; People v. Bonilla, 38 Cal. 699.)

"Words used in a statute to define a public offense need not be strictly pursued in the indictment or information, but other words conveying the same meaning may be used." (Pen. Code, § 958.) And in People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 400, it was held that the words "wilfully, maliciously, feloniously and premeditatedly," were equivalent in their import to "malice aforethought." But the words "maliciously" and "premeditatedly" do not occur in this information, and those are the very words, and the only words in the indictment in People v. Vance, supra, which, in our opinion, were equivalent in their import to "malice aforethought." In People v. Stevenston, 9 Cal. 273, the court, said: "It is alleged that the defendant at a time and place mentioned, feloniously assaulted, cut, and stabbed the deceased, and inflicted on him one mortal wound, of which mortal wound he on the same day died; this, we think, is a sufficient statement of the facts constituting the offense." By reference, however, to what purports to be a copy of the indictment in the statement of the case, it will be seen that the indictment in that case alleged that the defendants, "in and upon one Abraham Hostetter, feloniously, wilfully, and of their malice aforethought did make an assault," etc. So that in that case no question could have been raised as to the omission of the words "malice aforethought," because they were not omitted. And it was not to that question the remarks above quoted were directed.

Bishop says, it is believed that there are no substitutes for the words "malice aforethought" (2 Cr. Procedure, § 335). In this State it has been held that there are, People v. Vance, supra. But here it is held that words equivalent in their import must be substituted, and in the information before us neither "malice aforethought" nor words equivalent thereto in their import are used. This, according to all the authorities, is a fatal omission, and the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

APPELLANTS.

JUDGMENT — STIPULATION — ESTOPPEL. — The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is binding and conclusive between the parties and their privies as to all matters within the issues, and determined by it, and a judgment entered upon a stipulation of the parties after issue joined has the same effect as if the action had been tried on the merits.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Los Angeles, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of MR. JUSTICE MCKEE.

R. M. Widney, for Appellants.

W. D. Gould, and J. H. Blanchard, for Respondent.

MCKEE, J.— This case arises out of an action of ejectment. From the record of the case it appears that the demanded premises were selected by the State of California, on the 22d of April, 1868; that on the 29th of December, 1869, the plaintiff McCreery entered upon them and filed his declaratory statement in the proper United States land office on the 28th of November, 1871. But on the 24th of November, 1871, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States had approved the selection which had been made by the State; and the United States, by patent of that date, conveyed the land to the State. After obtaining the patent the State sold the land to one M. Keller, and issued to him a certificate of purchase for the same, which was afterwards confirmed by an act of the legislature entitled, "An act for the relief of purchasers of State lands," approved March 27, 1872; and on the 4th of March, 1874, Keller obtained from the State a patent for the land.

Claiming to be owner in fee, Keller on the 24th of April, 1874, commenced an action of ejectment against McCreery to recover possession. By his answer to the complaint in that action the defendant denied the ownership of Keller, and affirmatively alleged that the patent issued to the plaintiff by the State of California, and under and by virtue of which his pretended title to the land in controversy is set up and maintained was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; and that the defendant on the 21st day of December, 1869, entered on the land as a qualified pre-emptor, and on or about the 28th of November, 1871, filed, in the land office of the district in which the land was situated, his declaration of intention to pre-empt said land, and that he was entitled to the possession of the same.

Upon these issues the parties to the action stipulated, on the 30th of June, 1874, "that judgment may be entered of this date for the plaintiff for the possession of the premises described in the complaint herein, but without any rents and profits or damage for the withholding the same. Execution is to be stayed on this judgment for sixty (60) days, within which time defendant may, without molestation, remove any buildings or other improvements from said premises for his own use, without further compensation thereof." Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of Keller against McCreery, for the recovery of possession of said land and premises, together with his costs and disbursements. Under that judgment Keller was put in possession of the land; and, being in possession, he sold and conveyed the same on the 11th of October, 1874, to Frederick Fuller, the then husband of one of the present defendants, who entered into possession under his deed, and continued to reside on the land until his death in July, 1876, since which time his widow has continuously, down to the commencement of this action, on October 28, 1879, occupied the land, cultivating the same within a substantial enclosure.

It will be observed that the issues in that action not only involved the validity of the original selection of the land by the State, and of the subsequent proceedings with reference to it, which culminated in the certification of the land over to the State, and the issuance of the patent to the State, but also the validity of the original entry on the land by the defendant, as a qualified pre-emptor, and the subsequent proceedings taken by him to pre-empt the same. These things being in issue were all necessarily determined by the judgment in favor of the plaintiff. No question can arise as to whether that judgment was correct or erroneous. Standing as it does as the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, unappealed from and unre-versed, it is decisive of the rights of parties to the subject-matter of the action whether it was right or wrong. Where issues are made in a case and decided, whether with or without trial, the judgment is conclusive between the same parties, in any subsequent action for the same cause, as to all questions which were directly involved within the issues made, and which were, or might have been presented and decided (Le. Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas 436; Stockton v. Ford, 18 How. 418; Mallony v. Horan, 49 N. Y. 11; McClurg v. Condit, 27 Minn. 45); and such questions cannot be again contested between the same parties in the same or any other court. (Hopkins v. Lee, 6 Wheat. 109; Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 606.) As res adjudicata the judgment is binding on all tribunals, and conclusive between the parties and those deriving title under them, as to the validity of the certification of the land over to the State, and of the patent thereto issued by the United States to the State, and of the patent granted by the State to Keller upon which the judgment was founded. By the certification and patent the title to the land passed from the United States to the State of California. (Grinnel v. R. R. Co. 103 U. S. 742.) Thereafter the authorities of the United States were without jurisdiction over it. The title which had vested in the State, and passed from the State to Keller, the plaintiff in the judgment, could not be divested, except by judicial proceedings to cancel or rescind the patent for fraud, mistake, or misconstruction of the law under which it was issued. (O'Connor v. Frasher, 56 Cal. 499, and cases cited.) No executive officer of the United States had authority to recall or rescind the patent, or to issue one to another party for the same tract. (Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530.) The proceedings taken by McCreery in the land department of the United States, which culminated in a patent to him for the same land, subsequent to the acquisition of the title by the State, and to the judgment against him founded upon that title, were therefore void, and conferred upon him no title.

It follows that the judgment and order must be reversed and the cause remanded, with direction to the court below to enter judgment for defendants.

THORNTON, J.—I concur in the judgment on the ground that the judgment in Keller v. McCreery is conclusive against the plaintiff, and determinative of the cause in favor of Fuller, who derives title under Keller by conveyance subsequent to the rendition of the judgment above mentioned.

Ball, Craig & Harding, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM. — Plaintiff brought suit against E. H. and John Archer for damages for an alleged breach of a certain lease of land. The answer of the defendants was a general denial, the complaint being unverified. The case was tried before a jury, and a general verdict rendered for defendant. Thereupon, and on the 11th of March, 1882, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, E. H. and John Archer, for costs. There was no motion for a new trial, but on the 29th of May the plaintiff moved the court to vacate the judgment on the ground that the verdict was for defendant, whereas the judgment entered was for the defendants. The court below granted the motion, and vacated the judgment, for the reason assigned in the motion.

It ought not to have done so. Undoubtedly the jury pronounced on the issues against the plaintiff. Having done so, the defendants were entitled to costs as a matter of law. The error or defect in the verdict in using the singular instead of the plural of the word, "defendant," did not affect any substantial right of the plaintiff, and was not, therefore, any ground for disturbing the verdict. (Code Civ. Proc. § 475.)

This case is not like People v. Sepulveda, 59 Cal. 342. That was a criminal case in which there were two defendants jointly indicted and jointly tried, and the verdict returned was: "We, the jury, find defendant" guilty. As it could not be ascertained from the verdict which one of the two defendants on trial had been found guilty, the verdict was held void for uncertainty.

Order reversed.

CONVERSION.—The defendants, who were commission merchants in San Francisco, sold a quantity of wheat, supposing it to be the property of one Williams, and paid over the proceeds to him. The wheat belonged to the plaintiff, and the action was brought to recover its value. The supposition of the defendants as to the ownership of the wheat grew out of the circumstances under which they received it, but the mistake was not caused by any act of the plaintiff. On a review of the facts, held, (1) that the defendants were not justified in supposing that the wheat belonged to Williams; (2) that even if they were such a supposition does not exempt them from liability to the plaintiff for selling his wheat and paying the proceeds to another.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

Walter Van Dyke, and Wendell & Kelley, for Appellant.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondents.

ROSS, J.—The findings we think too favorable to the defendants in view of the evidence. Nevertheless, as, in our opinion, upon the facts as found, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, we will, in view of the nature of the case, not order a new trial, but direct judgment to be entered in his favor upon the findings as they are.

Briefly, the action is for a conversion of two hundred and seventy-two sacks of wheat. According to the findings the plaintiff purchased of one Whitman one thousand two hundred and seventy-two sacks of wheat. The wheat was in the possession of Brown & Son, who were warehousemen at Brown's Landing, in Solano County, to be shipped to San Francisco on plaintiff's account. Brown & Son shipped one thousand sacks of the wheat for the plaintiff by a vessel commanded by Captain Westfall, consigned to Starr & Co., San Francisco. During the same time the defendants, who were commission merchants for the sale of grain in San Francisco, were receiving barley from the same landing from one Williams, through Brown & Son, for sale on commission, by means of a schooner commanded by Captain Espinosa. After the shipment of the one thousand sacks by Westfall's vessel there remained at the landing two hundred and seventy-two sacks of the wheat belonging to the plaintiff. At the time of the departure of Westfall's boat the schooner in charge of Espinosa was at the landing and was partly loaded with barley for the defendants. Brown & Son put the two hundred and seventy-two sacks of wheat belonging to plaintiff on Espinosa's boat and took a receipt from him for the wheat "to be delivered in San Francisco," the captain, as was the custom, keeping a duplicate. Espinosa did not know to whom the wheat belonged, and delivered it to the defendants, who, supposing it belonged to Williams, sold it, as also the barley, and accounted to Williams for the proceeds, before they knew that the wheat belonged to the plaintiff.

There was no ground for the defendants' supposition that the wheat belonged to Williams. They were receiving barley, not wheat, from him. But it is clear that such supposition, if well founded, would not have exempted them from liability for selling the plaintiff's wheat and paying its proceeds to another.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded to the court below with directions to enter judgment on the findings in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants, in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF H. S. BURTON, DECEASED.

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — HOMESTEAD.— The setting apart of a homestead in the course of probate proceedings has no effect upon the title to the land, and an adverse claim of title cannot be interposed to defeat an application for the purpose.

10. — PRACTICE — FINDINGS. — The widow of the deceased applied to the court to set aside a homestead for the use of the family. Appraisers were appointed and made their report, but its confirmation was objected to on the ground that the land was not a part of the estate. After a hearing the court sustained the objection, set aside the report, and dismissed the petition. The applicant requested findings, but none were filed. Held, that she was entitled to findings, and that it was error to enter judgment without them.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of San Diego, and from an order refusing a new trial.

S. Heydenfeldt, A. B. Hotchkiss, and A. Brunson, for Appellant.

Leach & Parker, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—Maria H. Burton, widow of H. S. Burton, deceased, petitioned the Probate Court of San Diego County, for administration of the estate of the decedent was pending, for a homestead to be set apart for the use of the family of the deceased, out of the Jamul Ranch, in that county, on which she resided with her children since the death of her husband. The ranch had been inventoried and appraised as part of the estate of the deceased.

Appraisers who had been appointed by the court for that purpose, filed their report that they had set apart, out of the ranch, a homestead, by metes and bounds, including the family residence, for the use of the family of the deceased. But on the filing of the report, objections to its confirmation were made one who claimed title to the ranch, on the grounds that the decedent, in his lifetime, had no title or interest in the ranch; and that, after his death, the United States had, by patent, granted it to the widow and her children, from whom the contestant had, by mortgage, foreclosure, sale, and deed, obtained the title. The court heard and sustained the objections, set aside the report of the appraisers, refused to set apart a homestead, and dismissed the petition of the widow. Upon the announcement of the determination counsel for the petitioner requested findings, but none were made and filed, and from the orders refusing to set apart the homestead, and denying a motion for a new trial, the petitioner appeals.

We think the petitioner was entitled to findings. The rules of pleading and practice in civil cases are applicable to proceedings in the Probate Courts. Issues joined in such proceedings are to be tried and determined by that court as in civil cases (§§ 1312, 1713, 632, 633, 634, Code Civ. Proc.); and upon trial by the court, without a jury, parties to the proceedings were entitled to findings, unless they were waived. (§ 634, supra; Haffenegger v. Bruce, 54 Cal. 416.) As findings were not waived, it was error to enter judgment without them.

Besides, upon the admitted facts of the petition, the petitioner was entitled to have a homestead set apart for the use of the family of the deceased, out of the real property inventoried and appraised to the estate without reference to its title. It may be that the decedent in his lifetime had not the true title to the ranch; yet he had had, until his death, as appears by the record, the actual possession, use and enjoyment of it, under color of title. During his lifetime he had not made and recorded a declaration of homestead upon it. After his death it was inventoried and appraised as a part of his estate, and as he left surviving him his widow and children, who resided on the ranch, it was the duty of the court, under § 1465, Code Civ. Proc., to set apart out of it a homestead for their use. (Ballentine's Estate, 45 Cal. 696; Estate of Wixon, 25 Cal. 324; Estate of McCauley, 50 Cal. 544.) That duty was imperative upon the facts stated in the petition. Performance of it would not change the property itself, nor affect the true title to it. In exercising its jurisdiction over the property, for the purpose of the law the court would deal with it only as an asset of the estate. Being inventoried and appraised as such, the property was subject to the jurisdiction of the court in the administration of the estate; and in setting apart a portion of it for a homestead for the widow and children of the deceased, it would simply withdraw such portion from the other assets as exempt by law from the claims of creditors. (Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 84; Schadt v. Heppe, 45 Cal. 434.) But neither the inventory of the ranch as property of the estate, nor the withdrawal of a portion of it from the estate for a homestead, would affect or adjudicate the question of title as between parties claiming title to the ranch itself. As has been said in the Estate of Moore, 55 Cal. 437, a probate homestead is not an estate, either at law or in equity; any question, therefore, as to the title of the property out of which the homestead may be set apart must be tried and determined in another forum. (Estate of James, 23 Cal. 417; Estate of Orr, 29 Cal. 101; Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176.)

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

W. W. HOLLISTER, APPELLANT, v. L. E. SHERMAN, TAX COLLECTOR, RESPONDENT.

TAXATION — REGENTS STATE UNIVERSITY — PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM TAXES — ASSESSMENT — SALE — DEED — INJUNCTION. — All property administered by the regents of the State University is exempt from taxes, and a deed of the tax collector on a sale of property so administered under an assessment against the regents would be void on its face. No cloud upon the title would be created by the deed, and an injunction will not be granted to prevent the sale.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Santa Barbara.

The action was brought to enjoin the sale of certain land under an assessment for State and county taxes for the fiscal year 1881-82. The plaintiff was the owner of the land, but prior to the assessment he mortgaged it to the regents of the State University to secure the payment of a loan of fifty thousand dollars made by them from the funds appropriated to the support of the university. The land was assessed to the regents and valued at fifty thousand dollars, the aggregate amount of the taxes being one thousand dollars. The complaint was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant.

John B. Mhoon, for Appellant.

W. C. Stratton, and J. H. Kincaid, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—We can see no difference as to ownership between property taken by the regents of the university “by grant, gift, devise, or bequest” (Pol. Code, § 1415, sub. 7), and other property administered by them. If any, all such property is exempt from taxation. The mortgage to secure the money loaned by the regents to plaintiff was not, therefore, subject to taxation. As the mortgage was assessed to the regents of the university, the tax deed would show the assessment was void. The deed would cast no cloud upon plaintiff’s title, since in an action brought upon it by the purchaser the present plaintiff would not be called upon to introduce any evidence, but the purchaser must fail on his own showing. (Grimm v. O’Connell, 54 Cal. 521.)

SAMUEL B. MARTIN, RESPONDENT, v. MARTIN DURAND, ET AL., APPELLANTS.

LIEN LANDS — STATE SELECTION — ACT OF CONGRESS.—A selection of land made by the State in lieu of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, such land having been certified over to the State prior to the passage of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1877, commonly known as the Booth Act, is confirmed by that act, although the land in lieu of which the selection was made was at the time of the selection included within the final survey of a Mexican grant, and the land selected was at the same time within what was claimed to be the limits of a Mexican grant, but finally excluded therefrom.

PLEADING — DAMAGES — USE AND OCCUPATION — FINDING.—In an action of ejectment a general averment of and prayer for damages in a specified sum for the unlawful withholding of the premises are sufficient to support a judgment for damages, at least in the absence of a special demurrer or objection to the evidence on the subject; and a finding as to the value of the use and occupation of the premises, no attack being made upon it in the court below, is conclusive as to the amount of the damages.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was ejectment. The plaintiff claimed under the State, and a judgment was rendered in his favor.

Mich. Mullany, for Appellants.

L. Aldrich, and E. D. Wheeler, for Respondent.

ROSS, J.— Upon the question of title the inquiry to be made is: Was a State selection made in lieu of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and which had been certified over to the State prior to the passage of the Act of Congress of March 1, 1877, commonly known as the Booth Act, confirmed by that act, when the land in lieu of which the selection was made was, at the time of the selection, included within the final survey of a Mexican grant, and when the land selected was at the same time included within the claimed limits of a Mexican grant, although finally excluded therefrom? We answer yes, by virtue of the second section of the Act of March 1, 1877.

As is well known, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in each township in California were granted to the State for school purposes by the Act of Congress of March 2, 1853. (10 U. S. Stats. 244.) By the seventh section of that act indemnity was provided for such sections, or parts thereof, as might be lost to the State by reason of settlement at the time of survey, or because of reservation for public uses, or of being taken by private claims. Experience showed that many of the sections granted by the Act of 1853, were situated within the claimed limits of private grants made by the Mexican government. From the nature and number of those grants and of the proceedings required for their adjudication and the final determination of their boundaries, proceedings to that end, in most cases, were slow. The State proceeded to make many indemnity selections before it was definitely known whether the lands in lieu of which the selections were made had in fact been lost to the State. These selections were invalid, some for one reason, some for another. Nevertheless, through mistake or inadvertence, they were certified to the State by the land department of the general government. Of course, disputes in regard to the title to such lands were natural and frequent. To solve the difficulty Congress interposed and passed the Act of March 1, 1877. It is entitled "An act relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California," and confirms by its first section to the State, the title to the lands certified to it, known as school selections, which were selected in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections lying within Mexican grants, of which grants the final survey had not been made at the date of such selection by the State.

This section, it is apparent, does not cover the case under consideration. But Congress further provided, in the second section of the act, "that where indemnity school selections have been made and certified to said State, and said selections shall fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within such final survey of a Mexican grant, or are otherwise defective or invalid, the same are hereby confirmed and the sixteenth or thirty-sixth section in lieu of which the selection was made shall, upon being excluded from such final survey, be disposed of as other public lands of the United States; provided, that if there be no such sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and if the land certified therefor shall be held by an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration, such purchaser shall be allowed to prove such facts before the proper land office, and shall be allowed to purchase the same at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, not to exceed three hundred and twenty acres for any one person; provided, that if such person shall neglect or refuse, after knowledge of such facts, to furnish such proof and make payment for such land, it shall be subject to the general land laws of the United States. (19 U. S. Stats. 268.)

By this section Congress confirmed such indemnity school selections as had been made and certified to the State, and which would fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within the final survey of a Mexican grant, "or are otherwise defective and invalid."

At the same time provision was made that such confirmation should not apply to mineral lands, etc., nor extend to lands settled upon by any actual settler claiming the right to enter not exceeding the prescribed legal quantity under the homestead or pre-emption laws; provided, that such settlement was made in good faith upon lands not occupied by the settlement or improvement of any other person, and prior to the date of certification of the land to the State by the department of the interior; and provided, further, that the claim of such settler be presented to the register and receiver of the district land office, together with proper proof, etc., within a certain time.

As the facts of the case before us do not bring the defendant within any of the exceptions contained in the act, nothing further need be said in regard to them.

Clearly, such selections as had been made and certified in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, lying within Mexican grants, of which grants the final survey had not been made at the date of the selection by the State, were confirmed; for such is the clear and unequivocal language of the first section of the act of Congress. Clearly, also, such selections as had been made and certified to the State, which should fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within the final survey of a Mexican grant, were confirmed; for such is the clear and unequivocal language of the second section of the act. Equally clear and unequivocal is the language of section two, in which are confirmed such selections as were made and certified to the State, and which would fail by reason of other defects or invalidities than those previously enumerated. One such invalidity existed in the case under consideration, to wit, the selection of land at the time within the claimed limit of a Mexican grant, but which was finally excluded therefrom. Such defect clearly comes within the letter as well as the intent of the statute, which is a curative act, designed to quiet the possession and confirm the claim of those who in good faith purchased from the State, thinking they thereby got a title, but who in law did not, and which upon well-settled principles should be liberally construed.

In addition to judgment for the restitution of the premises sued for, the court below gave the plaintiff judgment against the defendants for four hundred and fifty-four dollars and eighty-three cents as damages for their detention; and it is claimed on the part of the appellants that in this there was error; first, because there was no sufficient averment of damage, and secondly, because the plaintiff could not recover against the defendants jointly upon the facts of the case.

To the first of these objections it is sufficient to say that there was a general averment of, and prayer for two thousand dollars damages by reason of the alleged unlawful withholding of the property which—at least in the absence of a special demurrer to the pleading or objection to the evidence of damage—was sufficient. (Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 240.) The waiver alluded to by counsel only extended to such damages as accrued prior to November 1, 1878. (Finding 22.) The court below found the value of the use and occupation of the premises sued for subsequent to that date, to be the sum stated, for which plaintiff was awarded judgment. That finding was not questioned in the court below, and cannot be here; and if the value of the use and occupation of the premises by defendants constituted the damage or a part of the damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the unlawful detention, then the judgment for the sum mentioned was right; and of that there can be no doubt. JOHN HEINLEN, PETITIONER, v. W. W. CROSS, JUDGE OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF TULARE COUNTY, RE-SPONDENT.

INJUNCTION — DISOBEDIENCE PENDING AN APPEAL — POWER OF THE COURT.—An appeal from a judgment granting a perpetual injunction does not suspend the injunction during the pendency of the appeal, nor does it deprive the court in which the judgment was rendered of the power to punish a disobedience of the injunction as a contempt. The existence of the power devolves upon the court the duty to entertain a proper application on the subject, and such an application being made to examine the facts, and render a decision thereon.

APPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to the judge of the Superior Court of Tulare County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Heinlen & Soderberg, for Petitioner.

D. S. Terry, for Respondent.

Ross, J. — The present petitioner is plaintiff in a certain action which was brought in the Superior Court of Tulare County against the Fresno Canal and Irrigation Company for the recovery of damages, and an injunction perpetually restraining the defendant in the action from diverting, or in any manner interfering with certain waters. After trial final judgment was entered in the action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for eleven thousand dollars damages, and perpetually enjoining the defendant, its agents, employees, etc., from diverting or in any manner interfering with the waters, and for costs of suit. From that judgment an appeal was taken by the defendant to this court, the undertaking on appeal being in the sum of three hundred dollars for costs, besides double the amount of the money judgment.

An agent of the defendant having continued the diversion of the waters notwithstanding the judgment, application in proper form was made on behalf of the plaintiff to the Superior Court for an order on the said agent to show cause at a certain time and place why he should not be punished for contempt of court in disobeying the injunction awarded by the judgment. At the time and place appointed for the purpose, the agent of the defendant in the action appeared with his counsel and stated to the court that since the entry of the judgment the defendant had continued to divert the waters by the same means and to the same extent as before, but by no other means and to no greater extent, which statement being assented to by the plaintiff, the court dismissed the proceedings and discharged the agent on the ground that the process of contempt was a proceeding in the action, and that by the appeal all proceedings under the judgment had been stayed.

Had the action of the court below been in the exercise of a judicial discretion, of course mandamus would not lie to compel the court to proceed in the matter. But it is perfectly manifest that the action of the court in dismissing the proceeding was based on a supposed want of power occasioned by the appeal and the incidental stay of proceedings wrought by the execution of the undertaking on appeal. If the injunction was not suspended by virtue of the appeal, it was the duty of the court to have inquired into the facts, and to have brought its judgment to bear upon them. (Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130.) Did the appeal suspend the injunction?

It was claimed for the respondent that it did by virtue of § 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But that section, so far as this question is concerned, is substantially the same as § 356 of Parker's Cal. Prac. Act, which was in force when the case of the Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, supra, was decided, and substantially the same as § 342 of the New York Code. (Wait's N. Y. Code, § 342.) In Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, this court held that the execution of the undertaking contemplated by § 356, of the former Practice Act, did not have the effect of suspending the injunction — the court saying: "When a party is restrained by injunction, he is not injured in contemplation of law, as he is already secured by the undertaking. If, on the contrary, an appeal, with an undertaking of three hundred dollars, would have the effect of staying the injunction itself, then the plaintiff would have no remedy, and the writ be idle. It would entirely destroy the usefulness of this writ. A stay of proceedings, from its nature, only operates upon orders or judgments commanding some act to be done, and does not reach a case of injunction."

As already said, the New York statute is substantially the same as ours so far as concerns the question under consideration. And in a late case in that State, reported in 71 N. Y. 430, the court of appeals said: "The order of the judge was in substantial compliance with the statute, and stayed 'all proceedings on the part of the plaintiff in execution of the judgment.' But this did not affect the validity or effect of the judgment pending the appeal, so far as it bore upon and restrained the action of the defendant, its servants and agents. It did not absolve them from the duty of obedience and permit them to do that which the judgment absolutely prohibited, and the doing of which would, as adjudged by the court, cause irreparable mischief to the plaintiff, or an injury which could not certainly be compensated in damages. The statute does not, and the judge's order staying the plaintiff did not and could not, derogate from the efficiency of the judgment in its operation upon, and effectually restraining all acts by the defendant in violation of its mandate. The court should have and doubtless has the power, notwithstanding an appeal, especially as long as the action is pending in the same court upon an appeal from the special to the general term, to command respect for its judgments and obedience to its mandates until they are reversed. This power is essential to the administration of justice, and to the respect which courts of justice have a right to demand from suitors. It would seem to be preposterous that a party could, by the mere order of the court staying his hands from executing a judgment not yet executed, be deprived of the whole fruit of the judgment by the lawless act of the defeated party pending an appeal, without remedy, that he must stand by, and without possibility of redress, see the subject-matter of the litigation destroyed, so that if he succeeds in affirming the judgment it will be a barren victory. If the respondent here is right in its contention, pending an appeal from a judgment staying waste, which if committed will destroy the freehold, the appellant in simply staying the plaintiff's proceedings on the judgment may with impunity do the very act forbidden and destroy the freehold. This would be to give the latter an injunction, staying action by the one party upon the judgment, with effect, as working a dissolution of the permanent and general injunction before granted, restraining the other party from doing any act affecting the subject of the litigation. The judgment, so far as it enjoined the defendant, needed no execution. It acted directly without process upon the defendant, and the stay only operated to prevent the collection of the costs awarded." (See also Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107; Ortman v. Dixon, 9 Cal. 23; State v. Chase, 41 Ind. 356; High on Injunction, 2d ed., § 1698.)

Let the peremptory writ issue.

JANE MARTEL, RESPONDENT, v. JAMES MEEHAN, EXECUTOR, ET AL., APPELLANTS.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER — EXECUTOR OF DECEASED PERSON. — The executor of a deceased person, who succeeds to the possession of leased premises held by the deceased at the time of his death but makes default in the payment of rent, is not within the provisions of § 1661 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a summary action for an unlawful detainer as defined by that section cannot be brought against him.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

A. A. Pardow, for Appellants.

Section 735 of our Code of Procedure authorizing trebling damages is penal, and no action can be maintained against an executor as such on a penal statute. (Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3.)

The executor is not in the employ of any superior other than the Probate Court. (Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 22.)

Moses G. Cobb, for Respondent.

As to appellant's first point that the statute is penal under which judgment was given in this case, and therefore no action can lie thereunder against an executor as such, we say the assertion is entirely gratuitous and not supported by any authority.

The action is unlawful detainer, and is founded on the conventional relation of landlord and tenant. (§ 1161, Code Civ. Proc.; Johnson et al. v. Cheley, 43 Cal. 299; Owen v. Doty, 27 Cal. 502; Walls v. Preston, 28 Cal. 225; Taylor's L. and T. § 720, 7th Ed.)

After service upon the lessee, or his legal representative, of the written demand provided for in § 1161, Code Civ. Proc., the lessee or his representative becomes a tenant at sufferance. (Uridias v. Morrell, 25 Cal. 31; Haushurst et al. v. Lobree, 38 Cal. 563.)

MCKINSTY, J.—The action was brought under the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure which treats of summary proceedings for obtaining possession of real property.

The complaint alleges that on or about the 30th of May, 1879, plaintiff, by a written agreement and lease, leased, demised, and let to William Meehan, now deceased, certain premises (described) in the city and county of San Francisco: "To have and to hold said premises to the said William Meehan, now deceased, at the monthly rent of two hundred dollars, payable monthly in advance on the 10th day of each and every month thereafter in advance, in gold coin of the United States." That on the 27th day of September, 1879, William Meehan died testate. That his will was duly probated, and letters testamentary on his will were duly issued to said James Meehan on the 13th of February, 1880, who, on that day, duly qualified and still is executor of the estate. That James Meehan, "executor as aforesaid," is plaintiff's tenant of the premises, and defendant, Jacob L. Solomon, is a sub-tenant therein, and occupies a portion thereof.

That by virtue of said agreement and lease William Meehan, now deceased, entered into the possession and occupation of said demised premises, and said James Meehan, executor of the estate of the said William Meehan, deceased, continues to hold the same as tenant of said plaintiff; and said Jacob L. Solomon continues to hold as a sub-tenant of said James Meehan, executor as aforesaid, and is in occupation of a portion of said premises. That, pursuant to the terms of said agreement and lease, there became due on the 10th day of February, 1880, from said defendant James Meehan, the executor of the estate of said William Meehan, deceased, to said plaintiff for rent of said premises, the sum of nine hundred and fifty dollars, gold coin (being aggregate of rents due from October 10, 1879, to February 10, 1880).

That on the 17th day of February, 1880, notice and demand in writing was duly given and made by said plaintiff to said defendants, and for and requiring the payment of said rent then due, amounting to the said sum of nine hundred and fifty dollars, or the possession of said demised property, but said defendants neglected and refused for the space of three days after notice and demand so given and made, and still neglect and refuse to pay said rent or surrender possession. That James Meehan, executor as aforesaid, unlawfully holds over, etc., by reason whereof plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of nine hundred and fifty dollars, etc.

The prayer of the complaint is that plaintiff have restitution of the premises and judgment "against said James Meehan, executor as aforesaid," for the sum of nine hundred and fifty dollars, amount of rent due, and for the accruing rents; that the amount found due "may be trebled," and also for costs, etc., and that said lease "under which said James Meehan, executor of the estate of William Meehan, deceased, holds, be forfeited."

The defendant, James Meehan, executor, demurred to the complaint on the grounds, (1) the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, or (2) of the person of defendant; (3) the complaint does not state facts sufficient, etc.; (4) a defect of parties defendant — an executor cannot be made defendant in an action in forcible or unlawful entry or detainer; (5) misjoinder of parties defendants for the reason stated in four (4).

Section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "A tenant of real property for a term less than life is guilty of unlawful detainer; . . . (2) where he continues in possession, in person or by sub-tenant, without permission of his landlord, or the successor in estate of his landlord, if any there be, after default in the payment of rent, pursuant to the lease or agreement under which the property is held, and three days' notice in writing," etc.

Prior to an amendment of the statute by the insertion of the words "or the successor in estate of his landlord," it was held that the right to remove a tenant by summary proceeding like the present was conferred upon the conventional landlord alone, and not upon his successor in the estate. (Reay v. Cotter, 29 Cal. 168.) The proceeding is statutory and can be resorted to only in the cases, and by and against the parties, mentioned in the statute. The executor of the last will and testament of a decedent, who in his lifetime was tenant, is not such person or a sub-tenant; yet it is only when the tenant continues in possession, "in person or by sub-tenant," that the action can be maintained.

Such is the letter of the section of the Code. The landlord when he lets his property must be presumed to anticipate the possible contingency of the tenant's death during the term of the lease, and to know, in that event, he will not be entitled to resort to the extraordinary remedy here asserted. There is no good reason why the language of the Code should be strained so as to uphold a judgment against an estate, in the nature of a penalty, for three times the amount which would be due for rent if the tenant had lived.

The demurrer should have been sustained.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions to sustain demurrer to complaint.

PER CURIAM.—At least a portion of the professional services for which a recovery in this case was had were rendered while the plaintiff was a law partner of W. T. Williams. He was such a partner when the contract of the 1st of March, 1879, was entered into. Ordinarily, when one member of a firm is employed the firm is employed, and the employer is entitled to the services of all the members of the firm. The understanding between the partners in this case, that, as respects the particular cases in which the services in question were rendered, each partner was to act as an individual, and charge and receive compensation therefor as an individual, certainly cannot affect the defendant in the absence of his knowledge of and assent to such arrangement. Such knowledge and assent are not shown in this case. As the case is now presented, when More employed the plaintiff he employed the firm of which plaintiff was a member, and when More paid one member of that firm for services rendered by the firm, he paid both members of it for those services.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

F. S. SMITH, APPELLANT, v. ROBERT HILL,
RESPONDENT.

LANDLORD AND TENANT — RIGHT OF RE-ENTRY — UNLAWFUL DETAINER. — When a right of re-entry is reserved in a lease, and such right has accrued, three days' notice must be given, as provided in §§ 1161 and 1162 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before a summary proceeding can be instituted against the tenant for an unlawful detainer.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Sacramento County.

The action was brought under the provisions of the Code relating to forcible entries and forcible and unlawful detainers. The complaint was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

L. S. Taylor, for Appellant.

Grove L. Johnson, for Respondent.

Ross, J.—The lease under which the defendant entered into the possession of the premises was from one Baker, and was “for the term of two years next ensuing from the 1st day of September, 1877, with the privilege to said defendant for an additional term of three years, to commence on the 1st day of September, 1879, at the monthly rent of forty dollars per month, payable monthly in advance”; and it was provided in the lease that if Baker should sell the premises during the terms therein mentioned, the lease should thereupon terminate, and the premises be at once surrendered to Baker. Defendant availed himself of the additional term stipulated for in the lease. On the 15th day of July, 1882, Baker sold and by deed conveyed the premises to the plaintiff. The rent being, according to the terms of the lease, payable monthly, in advance, it had previous to the sale been paid to Baker for the month of July, 1882. On the last day of that month Baker gave the defendant notice in writing that he had sold and conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, and demanding that defendant surrender them to plaintiff. On the next day, August 1st, the plaintiff made a similar demand on defendant, both of which demands were refused, and the next day, August 2d, this action was commenced for the unlawful detention of the property.

The demurrer was properly sustained, for the reason that the three days’ notice required by the Code was not given.

Section 791 of the Civil Code provides: “Whenever the right of re-entry is given to a grantor or lessor in any grant or lease, or otherwise, such re-entry may be made at any time after the right has accrued, upon three days’ notice, as provided in §§ 1161 and 1162, Code of Civil Procedure.”

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE K. PORTER, RESPONDENT, v. THERON W.
HOPKINS ET AL., APPELLANTS.

INJUNCTION — UNDERTAKING — DAMAGES. — Reasonable counsel fees for obtaining the dissolution of an injunction are allowable as damages in an action on the undertaking, but fees for other services rendered by counsel in the injunction suit are not allowable.

COSTS — MEMORANDUM — WHEN TO BE FILED. — In the provision of the Code prescribing the time within which a memorandum of costs must be filed the decision referred to is the finding of facts and conclusions of law signed by the court and filed with the clerk as the basis of the judgment.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was brought on an undertaking for an injunction. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

McElrath & Bells, for Appellants.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—By the undertaking in suit the defendants undertook to pay such damages as might be sustained by reason of the issuance of an injunction, if it should be finally decided by the court that the parties in whose behalf the writ was issued were not entitled to it.

The writ was issued out of one of the late District Courts of the city and county of San Francisco in a suit in equity brought by Egbert Judson et al. against George K. Porter et al. to perpetually enjoin the latter from prosecuting certain actions at law then pending for the recovery of some real estate which was then in controversy between the parties to the suit. It was admitted by the pleadings in the case in hand that the plaintiff Porter was the sole party interested in the prosecution of the actions enjoined, and on the trial the court found that he had incurred and paid out, for the services of counsel in and about the dissolution of the injunction, the sum of one thousand dollars; and he had been also compelled to pay as a further counsel fee the sum of two hundred dollars, for services rendered in procuring from the court, out of which the injunction had been issued final judgment that the plaintiffs in the injunction suit were not entitled to the writ.

These were the only two items of damages considered and allowed by the court, and the question arises, Are the defendants liable on their undertaking for each of these items?

Upon the final decision by the court that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the writ of injunction, a cause of action accrued, according to the terms of the undertaking, to recover such damages as had been sustained by reason of the injunction.

Reasonable and necessary counsel fees expended in obtaining a dissolution of the injunction are properly allowable as damages in a suit upon the undertaking. (Wilson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 172; Prader v. Grimm, 28 Cal. 11.) The services, for which the plaintiff incurred and paid out one thousand dollars, were rendered by his counsel on two motions made to dissolve the injunction, and on appeal from the last order refusing to dissolve it to the Supreme Court, where the order was reversed with direction to the lower court to dissolve the injunction. The services upon these motions were necessary, the charge for them was reasonable, and it was paid by the plaintiff. The finding to that effect is fully sustained by the evidence, and the sum was properly allowed.

But the allowance of the additional sum of two hundred dollars for the alleged services of counsel in obtaining a final judgment in the case, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the injunction, was erroneous.

The record shows that after the final order for the dissolution of the injunction the case was tried on its merits and a judgment entered for the plaintiff; but on appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgment it was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. Before a new trial was had the plaintiffs declined further to prosecute the suit, and moved the court to dismiss it; that motion was resisted by defendants, and the court denied it, but the court did dismiss the action after deciding that the injunction had been improperly issued. Resistance to the plaintiffs' motion was unnecessary, because the dismissal of the action upon that motion, following the dissolution of the injunction and the decision of the case by the Supreme Court, would have been equivalent to a final decision that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction, even if the previous dissolution did not have that effect, and would have operated as a breach of the undertaking on injunction upon which the defendants would have become liable to respond in damages. (Dowling v. Polack, 18 Cal. 626; Leese v. Sherwood, 21 Cal. 164; Fowler v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 34.)

But liability could not be enforced against them for any other counsel fees or damages than the reasonable and necessary fees expended in obtaining a dissolution of the injunction. After dissolution the cause itself still existed, independent of the writ of injunction; and the expense of services rendered after the dissolution in the cause itself, or in resisting a motion to dismiss the cause, was not damages sustained by reason of the writ; attorney's fee for services rendered in the case after dissolution of the injunction was therefore improperly allowed. (Elder v. Sabin, 66 Ill. 131; Wilson v. Haecker, 85 Ill. 349; Robertson v. Robertson, 58 Ala. 68; Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115.)

There was no error in refusing to strike out the memorandum of costs.

Section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires the party in whose favor judgment is rendered to file and serve a memorandum of his costs and disbursements within five days after notice of the decision of the court when the case is tried without a jury. The decision referred to is the finding of facts and conclusions of law, signed by the court and filed with the clerk as the basis of the judgment entered. (§§ 632, 633, supra.) In the case in hand the memorandum was filed within five days after the filing of the "decision," and it was filed in time.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded unless the plaintiff remits two hundred dollars of the judgment. Upon remitting that amount in the court below the judgment as modified will stand affirmed.

THOMAS MORAN, RESPONDENT, v. DANIEL ABBEY
ET AL., PHILIP HEFFNER, APPELLANT.

NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. — A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, if the evidence might have been produced at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. This rule held to be applicable to evidence of a conversation between the plaintiff and one of the defendants previous to the trial, the plaintiff being the moving party, and giving as the reason for not producing the evidence that he had forgotten the conversation.

WITNESS — EXAMINATION — LEADING QUESTIONS — JUDICIAL DISCRETION. — On the direct examination of a witness, leading questions may be allowed by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion, and the action of the court in that respect can only be reviewed so far as to determine whether its discretion has been abused. No abuse of discretion appearing a new trial cannot be granted on the ground that the court erred in allowing such questions.

ID. — PARTY TESTIFYING ON HIS OWN BEHALF — CROSS-EXAMINATION. — The plaintiff was examined as a witness on his own behalf, and testified fully in relation to the matters in controversy. On cross-examination, he was asked as to certain statements on the subject claimed to have been made by him as a witness in another case. This was objected to on the ground that the record in the case had not been produced. The court overruled the objection. Held, that the production of the record was unnecessary, and that the objection was properly overruled.

JUDICIAL DETERMINATION — HOW PROVED — STRIKING OUT ANSWER OF WITNESS. — A judicial determination, being a matter of record, must be proved by the record itself, and it is not error to strike out the oral statement of a witness as to what the determination was.

IMMATERIAL ERROR NO GROUND FOR A NEW TRIAL. — Where the answer of a witness to a question asked is improper, but no harm could have resulted from it, a refusal by the court to strike the answer out is an immaterial error, and no ground for a new trial.

PROMISSORY NOTE — PAYMENT. — The payment of a promissory note by a third person at the request of the maker to an agent holding it for collection extinguishes the note, and cannot afterwards be treated as a purchase. The obligation to pay being discharged, a subsequent transfer of the note by the payee to the person making the payment will not revive it.

VERDICT — SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE — CHARGE TO THE JURY. — The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict being against the plaintiff, he moved for a new trial, which was granted. In support of the motion, he relied partly upon insufficiency in the evidence, and errors claimed to have been committed by the court in its charge to the jury. After reviewing the evidence and examining the charge in connection with the pleadings and circumstances of the case, held, that the verdict was in accordance with the evidence, and that there was no substantial error in the charge.

APPEAL from an order of Superior Court of the county of Butte granting a new trial.

The action was brought on a promissory note given by the defendants, Abbey and Heffner, to one Hancock. The controversy at the trial was between the plaintiff and Heffner, Abbey having been discharged in bankruptcy. The additional facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

J. M. Burt, Jo. Hamilton, and John W. Turner, for Appellant.

Gray & Gale, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—This case has been before the court on a former appeal. (58 Cal. 165.) Upon the going down of the remittitur from the decision then rendered, a re-trial was had in the lower court which resulted in a verdict for the defendant, Heffner; but upon a motion for a new trial made by the plaintiff, upon a statement of the case and two affidavits of newly discovered evidence, the court set aside the verdict. Whether that was done upon the grounds of newly discovered evidence, or of any of the specifications of error contained in the statement does not appear by the record.

But the newly discovered evidence related to an alleged conversation between the plaintiff and Heffner about the promissory note upon which the action was brought; and the affidavits concerning it were made by the plaintiff himself and one Wilson, both of whom had testified as witnesses in the case. In his affidavit the plaintiff deposes to "absolute forgetfulness" of the conversation, until it had been recalled to his memory by Wilson after the rendition of the verdict. Wilson, however, had not forgotten it, and could have testified to it at the trial, if he had been questioned at all about the subject; but he was not. Yet, as the evidence was obtainable by the exercise of ordinary diligence, the neglect or omission of the plaintiff to draw it from the witness by a proper course of examination, is no ground for a new trial. It is well settled that a new trial will not be granted because new evidence has been found which was known to a witness at the trial of the case, and might have been obtained from him by due attention. (Bond v. Culler, 7 Mass. 205; McIntire v. Young, 6 Blackf. 496.)

The issues in the case which were submitted to the jury comprised "payment and satisfaction" of the note in suit, and fraud in obtaining a qualified indorsement of the note from the payee after it had been paid; and it is urged that the verdict of the jury was properly set aside, because of errors committed by the court during the trial of the cause in overruling objections to questions propounded to witnesses, in admitting and excluding testimony, and in giving instructions to the jury.

Four or five specifications of error relate to rulings made by the court in denying objections by counsel for plaintiff to leading questions asked by counsel for Heffner, in the direct examination of his witnesses. But these are not errors for which a new trial will be granted. We are not aware of any case in which a verdict has been set aside for the reason that leading questions, although objected to, have been allowed to be put to a witness. (Green v. Gould, 9 Allen, 486; Hopkinson v. Steel, 12 Vt. 582; Parsons v. Huff, 38 Me. 187; Mershol v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. 372.) And the reason is that the examination of a witness in the trial of a case is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, who may, in the exercise of that judicial discretion, allow or disallow leading questions. (§§ 2044-2046, Code Civ. Proc.) A matter resting in judicial discretion is not reviewable in an appellate court; it is only the abuse of such a discretion of which we will take cognizance. In this case no such question is presented by the record.

It has been also urged that the court erred in permitting the defendant, against the objections of plaintiff's counsel, to cross-examine the plaintiff upon matters of record, without producing the record itself. But the objections made were not tenable because the cross-examination related to the testimony which, it was claimed, the plaintiff had given while under examination in a court of record, and not to any record of the court. The cross-examination had developed the fact that Abbey, the principal maker of the note in suit, had been adjudicated a bankrupt before the maturity of the note; that the plaintiff had become possessed of all the available property of the bankrupt before the act of bankruptcy; and that he had been cited to appear in the Bankruptcy Court to answer under oath what property or effects of the bankrupt he had in his possession or under his control; and the object of the cross-examination objected to evidently was to show that the plaintiff had, while under examination in the Bankruptcy Court, produced or presented the promissory note in suit to that court, and testified that he had paid it for Abbey at his request. As sworn statements or admissions of the plaintiff relevant to the issues of payment and fraud, which were on trial, the evidence was proper, and the examination of the plaintiff for that purpose was unobjectionable.

Nor was it error for the court to strike out the oral statement of the plaintiff in response to his counsel as to the determination by the Bankruptcy Court of the contest between him and the creditors of Abbey. Whatever judgment or order had been made by the court, as the result of the plaintiff's examination, in awarding to the plaintiff the property involved in that contest, was a matter of record provable only by a production of the record itself.

The next exception which is the subject of a specification of error relates to the refusal of the court to strike out the answer of a witness to a question which had been put to him. The witness had given testimony tending to prove that Abbey, the maker of the note, and the plaintiff came together to the bank, where the note had been left for collection, to take up the note, and that the witness, after receiving from the plaintiff the money due upon the note, surrendered it. Upon being asked "To whom?" he answered: "I supposed I was surrendering it to Abbey." It was that answer which the court, upon motion of the plaintiff, refused to strike out.

The ruling, if error, was not a substantial one. The fact in question was the identity of the person to whom the note was surrendered after the money for it had been paid. All the facts and circumstances attending the entire transaction had been given in detail by the witness; and after his answer as to the surrender of the note he testified that he received the money, laid the note upon the counter for the party to take possession of it, and his impression was that the plaintiff took it up from the counter, and he and Abbey then went away. This left the question upon the circumstances connected with it, for the jury, whose duty it was to draw the proper inferences from them, and the plaintiff had the full benefit of the proof. So that if there was any error in the refusal to strike out the answer it was harmless, and would not justify directing a new trial.

This brings us to a consideration of the grounds of litigation in the case as it was submitted to the jury under the instructions of the court. As has been already stated, the principal subject of controversy was, whether the transaction by which the plaintiff obtained possession of the note in suit amounted to a purchase or payment of the note. The note was given on the 30th of December, 1875, payable one year after date, to the order of George Hancock, at the banking house of Rideout, Smith & Co., in Oroville, and was left by the owner in the bank for collection. Before it matured, Abbey, the principal maker of the note, had turned over by sale or otherwise, all his available property to the plaintiff; this property comprised one hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which Abbey resided with his family; one thousand six hundred head of sheep, including several hundred head which belonged to his wife; seventy-five hogs, and "ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty tons of hay"; and on October 24, 1876, Abbey became a voluntary or involuntary bankrupt. But his creditors had attached the property which had been turned over to the plaintiff, and between them and him a contest arose, in which he was cited to appear in the Bankruptcy Court for examination, under oath, touching the property or effects of Abbey, which he had in his possession or under his control. Before he appeared in obedience to the citation he obtained possession of the note in suit. In getting it he knew all about the note, the parties to it, and the legal relations existing between them. He himself testified that he knew — and it was admitted at the trial of the case — that the note had been given to secure payment of a sum of money which Abbey had borrowed for his exclusive use and benefit; that Heffner signed it as a joint maker for the accommodation of Abbey, and that, as between Hancock, the payee of the note, and Abbey, Heffner was a surety only. Knowing these things, and having acquired from Abbey possession of the property about which he was engaged in a contest with the creditors of Abbey, the plaintiff before appearing in the contest entered into a transaction with Abbey about the note, which is best shown by his own testimony: "A few days before the transaction Abbey spoke to me about taking up the note. He told me there was a note in the bank made by him, and that he was trying to raise money but had failed, and asked me if I had any money to loan. I told him I had. He says he would like to get that note out of the bank before any costs would be put on him. . . . I took up the note at his request. I knew Hancock, the payee of the note. I did not go to see him about purchasing it. . . . I went to the bank without seeing Hancock, the owner of the note, at all, and took the note out of the bank. . . . I paid the note, took possession of it, took it home, put it into my safe, and let it lay there three years, until, before commencing this suit, I went upon the advice of my lawyers, and got Hancock to indorse it. At first Hancock refused to indorse, because he had got his money, but afterwards, on being assured that a qualified indorsement would not injure him, he consented."

From this testimony alone it is evident that in the transaction there was no concurrence or privity on the part of the payee of the note and the plaintiff. Both were, as to the transaction, strangers to each other. There was therefore no sale of the note, and no obligation on the part of the payee, arising out of the transaction, which entitled the plaintiff to a transfer. As a friend of Abbey and at his request, the plaintiff advanced the money to take up the note. He and Abbey were therefore the only parties to that transaction. The legal effect of the transaction was to extinguish the obligation of the note; and the only obligation which arose from the transaction was on the part of Abbey.

It has been argued, however, that "if there was no contract of sale by reason of a want of mutual consent between the plaintiff and the payee of the note, then, for the same reason and under the same rule of law, there was no payment; and that it follows as a necessary conclusion that the note, being neither paid nor purchased, still existed, and belonged to Hancock until he indorsed it to the plaintiff."

But payment of a promissory note is not a contract; it is performance of the obligation arising out of the promise to pay. Any one of the several parties to a joint contract, or any one in his behalf and at his request, or with his consent, may perform the obligation; and when performance has been offered or made, and the money accepted, the obligation becomes extinguished. The parties to the contract are no longer bound to each other by the vinculum legis of right and duty. The duty being discharged the right ceases to exist; and the contract itself, though preserved in form, is no longer the subject of sale or transfer. When therefore the plaintiff, at the request of Abbey and for his benefit, took up the note, the contract was discharged, and the qualified indorsement of it by the payee, three years afterwards, was ineffectual as a transfer. The verdict of the jury was therefore according to the evidence and the law.

In the charge of the court to the jury we find no substantial error. Considered as a whole, in connection with the evidence and the pleadings, and construed with reference to the subject-matters in controversy, and the claims of parties before the court, it was substantially correct. It fairly presented the case to the jury, and there was nothing in it calculated to mislead the jury. There were therefore no grounds for a new trial. Order reversed.

THE PEOPLE, RESPONDENT, v. PATRICK BARRY,
APPELLANT.

PERJURY — MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY. — Where a witness has given testimony material to the issue, and in answer to a question as to whether he had not previously made a statement different from the testimony then given, he denies having done so, the answer affects his credibility as a witness, and a charge of perjury may be founded upon it.

10. — ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION. — The court charged the jury in effect that if the defendant knowingly, wilfully, intentionally, and falsely testified that it was Y. and not K. who fired the first shot, and did, for the purpose of misleading the jury, give testimony contradictory to statements before made, falsely and wilfully, the accusation was fully made out. Held, that the question as to who did in fact fire the first shot was not the issue before the jury; they were to determine whether the defendant testified falsely in denying that he had on a previous occasion stated that K. fired the first shot; and the charge being calculated to mislead the jury was therefore erroneous.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

W. H. Webb, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, and Geo. W. Tyler, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.—An information was filed against the defendant charging him with the crime of perjury, and a conviction being had an appeal has been taken to this court.

The defendant filed a demurrer to the information, which was overruled by the court; and the first question presented for our consideration relates to the sufficiency of the information.

By § 118 of the Penal Code it is provided that "Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, wilfully and contrary to such oath, states as true any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury."

Bishop in his work on Criminal Procedure, vol. 2, § 901, says: "The elements of this offense to be alleged and proved are—

- "1. A judicial proceeding or course of justice;
- "2. The defendant having been sworn to give evidence therein;
- "3. His testimony;
- "4. Its falsity;
- "5. Its materiality to the issue or point of inquiry."

An examination of the information upon which the defendant was tried and convicted will show that it contains all of the elements above stated as constituting perjury at common law.

It is averred therein that the case of The People v. Isaac M. Kalloch, charged with the murder of one Charles De Young, was on trial in the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, a court having jurisdiction thereof; that on the trial the defendant was called, duly sworn and examined, as a witness on behalf of the defense; that on said trial he gave certain evidence, which is set forth in the information; that such evidence was false; that the defendant knew at the time it was given that it was false; and lastly that it was material to the issue or inquiry. The materiality of the false evidence upon which the charge of perjury was predicated is questioned on the appeal, and we will briefly consider it.

On the trial of Isaac M. Kalloch for the murder of Charles De Young, it became a material inquiry in the case whether or not De Young fired a shot at Kalloch before the latter fired at De Young, and on that trial Barry testified that he did. He was then asked if he (Barry) had not stated in a conversation at a designated time and place, and in the presence of certain persons named, that upon the occasion of the shooting of De Young he, the said defendant Barry, saw Kalloch fire the first shot? He denied having made such statement. Was this a material inquiry, and could a false oath in respect to such a matter amount to perjury?

The evidence of Barry that De Young fired the first shot was most important and material, as it tended to establish a plea of justification set up and urged on behalf of Kalloch, as a defense to the homicide with which he was charged. For the purpose of impeaching the witness it was certainly competent for the prosecution to prove that the defendant had, on an occasion prior to the trial, made the statement imputed to him, and before this could be done it was required of the prosecution to lay a foundation for such impeachment. This could only be done by calling the attention of the witness to the contradictory statement and interrogating him respecting it. It therefore became a matter material to the credibility of the witness; it was a circumstance material to the issue or point of inquiry, and a false oath respecting it was perjury.

In the case of Wood v. People of the State of New York, 59 N. Y. 123, it is said: "The indictment does not allege that either of the statements was material, nor do they appear to have been so on a comparison of the statements with the issues in the pleadings or by any extrinsic proof. It is not necessary that the false statements should tend directly to prove the issue in order to sustain an indictment. If the matter falsely sworn to is circumstantially material or tends to support and give credit to the witness in respect to the main facts, it is perjury." And it is equally perjury if the false evidence tends to discredit the witness. To the same effect is the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Commonwealth v. David Thompson, 12 Mass. 225.

In the case of Rex v. Giepe, 1 Ld. Raym. 256, it was said, "that it is not necessary to appear in an information for perjury to what degree the point in which the man is perjured was material to the issue, for if it is but circumstantially material it will be perjury. . . . So if a witness swears to the credit of another witness, if it be false it will be perjury if it conduce to the proof of the point in issue."

It appears to us to be plain, both on principle and authority, that the question whether the defendant Barry had made the statement, respecting which he was interrogated, and which statement he denied having made, was material to the case on trial, and that a false oath concerning the same involved the crime of perjury.

But the judgment will have to be reversed for error in the charge of the court to the jury. The following is a part of it:—

"I charge you that if you believe from the testimony beyond a reasonable doubt that there was such trial in due course of law of said Kalloch in this court, and that defendant in such trial was a witness duly sworn in the cause, and that he did testify in the cause, and did in such testimony wilfully, falsely, and knowingly convey to the jury in such case, intentionally, the idea and impression and belief according to his testimony that it was not said Kalloch but was said De Young who fired the said first shot, and this was done knowingly, wilfully, and intentionally, and falsely, for the object, reason, and intent, and to the end that said jury should be misled by his testimony that it was said De Young and not Kalloch who fired the first shot, . . . and the defendant in that case and for that purpose and to that end did give such testimony inconsistent with and contradictory to such alleged statements before made, or alleged to have been made, did give it falsely, knowingly, and wilfully, then I charge you that the accusation of the information against him for the alleged perjury is as fully made out as if the precise words had been proved before you."

The court did not keep in view the charge on which the defendant was being tried. The accusation contained in the information was not that on the trial of Kalloch the defendant swore falsely as to who fired the first shot, but it was simply a charge that the defendant on that trial denied that he had on a previous occasion stated that Kalloch fired the first shot. The question as to who did in fact fire the first shot was not the charge upon which he was being tried.

Conceding, therefore, for the purpose of the argument that the defendant did, in his testimony, wilfully, falsely, and knowingly convey to the jury on such trial the impression and belief that it was not Kalloch but De Young who fired the first shot, yet he could not have been convicted of perjury therefor on that information, because that was not the false oath with which he was charged. The charge of the court was clearly erroneous; it was calculated to mislead the jury, and on plain and well-established rules of law it becomes our duty to reverse the judgment.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

JOHN C. KING, ASSIGNEE IN INSOLVENCY, RESPONDENT,
v. C. N. FELTON ET AL., C. N. FELTON, APPELLANT.

PLEADING — MISJOINDER OF PARTIES DEFENDANT.— A complaint against several defendants, some of whom do not appear to be necessary or proper parties, is demurrable for a misjoinder of parties defendant.

Id. — INSUFFICIENCY.— In an action by the assignee of an insolvent debtor, the fact of an assignment must be alleged in the complaint. If not so alleged, the complaint will be insufficient.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of San Bernardino.

Waters & Gibson, for Appellant.

Henry M. Willis, and C. W. C. Rowell, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.— The demurrer of the defendant Felton should have been sustained.

First — There was a misjoinder of parties defendant. From the case as presented by the complaint it is not apparent to us why either the Riverside Land and Irrigating Company or S. C. Evans was joined with the defendant Felton. There is no statement of fact showing that either of them was a necessary or proper party; the facts stated apply alone to Felton as a defendant. The demurrer was sustained as to the Riverside Land and Irrigating Company; it should have been sustained as to Evans.

Second — The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The plaintiff sues as assignee in insolvency of one Sayward.

There is no averment that an assignment was ever made. Section 17 of the Insolvency Act of 1880 requires that an assignment of the insolvent's property shall be executed, which assignment shall vest the title of the property in the assignee. It is alleged in the complaint that Sayward "is now the owner," etc. If, at the time of commencing the action, Sayward was the owner, the plaintiff was not; if, on the other hand, an assignment had been properly executed, Sayward was not the owner, and plaintiff was.

Other errors appear in the transcript, such as insufficiency of findings on the issues presented; but as the case is here determined on the pleadings, those errors are not for decisive consideration.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with instructions to sustain the demurrer of the defendant Felton, with leave to plaintiff to amend.

JOHN KELLY, RESPONDENT, v. WILLIAM TEAGUE ET AL., APPELLANTS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT — BREACH OF COVENANT — UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—If a tenant of leased premises remain in possession after the breach of a covenant on his part contained in the lease, which cannot subsequently be performed, an action may be brought against him for an unlawful detainer without notice to perform the covenant.

PLEADING — COUNTER-CLAIM.—A summary proceeding against a tenant for an unlawful detainer is not a proper case for a counter-claim.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was a summary proceeding for an unlawful detainer. The answer set up an indebtedness from the plaintiff to the defendant Teague as a counter-claim. The additional facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

J. C. Bates, for Appellants.

W. S. Goodfellow, and Jarboe & Harrison, for Respondent.

MORRISON, C. J.—The complaint in this case alleges that on the 10th day of February, 1875, plaintiff leased to defendant Teague a certain lot of land in the city of San Francisco for the term of ten years, at a monthly rental of fifty dollars; that the lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay "all the taxes and assessments that should be levied upon said premises during the term"; that defendant entered into possession of the premises under the lease on the 1st day of March, 1875, and has held the possession ever since either in person or by subtenant; that taxes and assessments to the amount of $152.88 were levied upon the premises for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; that said sum became due and was payable on the 26th day of December, 1881; that defendants failed to pay the taxes and assessments prior to the 28th day of March, 1882, and by reason of such failure the premises were sold for taxes and assessments due thereon. The complaint further alleges that on the 13th day of April, 1882, the plaintiff served on each of the defendants a notice in writing, requiring them within three days after the service of the notice to perform the condition contained in the lease, or deliver up to the plaintiff the possession of the premises. The answer denies generally all the averments in the complaint, and also sets up a counter-claim. Plaintiff had judgment for restitution of the possession and costs of suit.

The action was brought under § 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was not a proper case for a counter-claim.

The first point made in defendant's brief is, that the complaint was fatally defective, for the reason that there was no allegation of non-payment of taxes, and the second point is, that the notice was fatally defective because it did not state any amount, or the year for which the taxes were due. Neither of these points is well taken. The complaint is sufficient, and no notice was required. The tenant covenanted to pay the taxes, and the law fixes the time within which taxes must be paid. The defendant was in default, and had broken the covenant of the lease before the notice was received. In the case of The Opera House v. Bert, 52 Cal. 471, the court say: "But whether the breach did or did not operate a forfeiture, which would justify ejectment, an action in the present form in the county court can be maintained only upon a refusal to perform a covenant which can be performed after breach, and the notice contemplated by the statute." The lease in that case was made in 1875, and the forfeiture insisted upon occurred in August, 1876. The present action is brought under a statute approved April 1, 1878, which was intended, as may be justly inferred, to cover just such a case as the former statute did not embrace.

By § 1161 of the Act of 1878 (sub. 3, Code Civ. Proc.) it is provided that "if the covenants and conditions of the lease, violated by the lessee, cannot afterward be performed, then no notice, as last prescribed herein, need be given to said lessee or his sub-tenant demanding the performance of the violated covenant or conditions of the lease."

By the provisions of the Code as it now exists, and has existed since April, 1878, the right of action by the landlord against the tenant accrues upon the latter continuing in possession of the demised premises in person, or by his sub-tenant after a neglect or failure to perform any condition or covenant of the lease, and no notice to him to perform is required if it appears that the covenant or condition cannot afterward be performed by him.

Judgment and order affirmed as of October 30, 1883.

J. C. MERRILL, APPELLANT, v. H. B. WILLIAMS ET AL.,
RESPONDENTS.

CONTRACT — LIABILITY OF AGENTS.—A contract was entered into between J. C. Merrill & Co., the assignors of the plaintiff, and the defendants, as agents for the ship Tartar, in relation to certain money in the hands of one Ferris, on which a lien was claimed in favor of the owners of the ship. The existence of this lien was disputed by J. C. Merrill & Co., who also asserted a claim to the money, and the contract provided in substance that in case of a determination adverse to the lien, the money should be paid over to them in part satisfaction of any judgment they might recover in a particular action then pending. Their right to the money being established in the mode contemplated by the contract this action was brought on the theory that the contract bound the defendants personally for its payment. Held, that the defendants are not liable, that they contracted merely as agents, and did not assume any personal responsibility for the payment of the money, and that the contract amounted simply to a stipulation on behalf of the owners of the ship to relinquish all claim to the money in case the lien should not be sustained.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

George B. Merrill, and McAlister & Bergin, for Appellant.

W. H. L. Barnes, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.—It appears from the complaint that this action is upon the following agreement in writing, signed by plaintiff's assignors and defendants:—

"1. To ascertain the amount received by Ferris from inward freight on the Tartar.

"2. To ascertain the amount collected on account of general average by Ferris.

"3. To ascertain the amount due charterers, under general average, for coals jettisoned during voyage from Australia to San Francisco.

"These above amounts being ascertained, W., B. & Co., agents for owners, do agree with J. C. M. & Co., that in case it shall be determined that the owners of the Tartar have no lien or claim prior to Merrill & Co., under the charter party, to said moneys, the same shall be paid over to J. C. M. & Co. in satisfaction of so much of any judgment J. C. M. & Co. may recover against the Austral. & M. S. S. Co., or said Forbes et al., now in suit in the Twelfth District Court (case 18,308)."

Defendants had judgment in the court below, and we think the proceedings should be sustained.

The contract did not impose any personal liability upon the defendants, but was simply an agreement on their part that in a certain event moneys in the hands of Ferris should be paid over to Merrill & Co. As the agents of the Tartar, defendants agreed, "in case it shall be determined that the owners of the Tartar have no lien or claim prior to Merrill & Co., under the charter party, to said moneys, the same shall be paid over to J. C. M. & Co." Paid over by whom? Not by defendants, because they did not have the money. The contract merely amounts to a stipulation on the part of the defendants that in case no claim or lien should be established in favor of the ship, the defendants, as the agents thereof, would relinquish all claim to moneys collected by and in the hands of Ferris.

Judgment affirmed.

W. F. FRAZER, APPELLANT, v. W. W. BARLOW ET AL.,
RESPONDENTS.

PLEADING — COMPLAINT — INCONSISTENT ALLEGATIONS — DEMURRER.— In an action to enforce a lien for lumber and materials, some of the allegations of the complaint were inconsistent with statements contained in the notice of the lien, a copy of which was attached to and made a part of the complaint. The defendants demurred for ambiguity and uncertainty, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and a judgment was entered against him on the demurrer. Held, that the objection was well founded, and the demurrer properly sustained.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Sacramento.

L. S. Taylor, for Appellant.

Grove L. Johnson, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.—Appeal from a judgment upon demurrer entered after plaintiff had declined to amend his complaint.

The action was against three defendants—Barlow, Cronkite, and Ellis—to foreclose a mechanic's lien for a balance due for lumber and materials furnished and used in the construction of a dwelling-house on a lot of land in the city of Sacramento.

The notice of lien was included in and made part of the complaint. The notice contains the statements that Cronkite and Ellis were the reputed owners of the land upon which the house was builded; that the materials which were used in its construction were furnished to Barlow, Cronkite, and Ellis, by the plaintiff. It contains no statement of the date when the building was completed, but it does state that thirty days had not elapsed since the completion of the building. On the other hand the complaint itself alleges that Ellis was the sole owner of the land; that the materials were furnished to Barlow and Cronkite, who had paid the cost of the same, except a balance which remained due and unpaid on the 31st of October, 1881, and that the house in the construction of which the materials were used "was completed November, 1881," and the notice of lien was filed "December 2, 1881." These inconsistent and contradictory statements made the complaint ambiguous, uncertain, and demurrable.

Judgment affirmed.

HENRY LORENZ ET AL., RESPONDENTS, v. HENRY JACOB, APPELLANT.

EMINENT DOMAIN — CONDEMNATION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY FOR A PRIVATE USE.

— The right of eminent domain is restricted to the taking of private property for public use. It cannot be exercised in favor of the owners of mining claims, to enable them to obtain water for their own use in working such claims, though the intention may also be to supply water to others for mining and irrigating purposes.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Trinity, and for an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

F. P. Dann, for Appellant.

C. E. Williams, for Respondents.

MORRISON, C. J.— Plaintiffs commenced proceedings in this case under § 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure to condemn certain lands belonging to the defendant, for the purpose of a ditch then under process of construction by them.

It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiffs are now constructing and completing a ditch for the purpose of carrying water from a certain point on Connor Creek to plaintiff's reservoir on Red Hill in Trinity County, and that the uses for which the water is intended and designed are mining and irrigation. The court below entered a judgment in conformity to the prayer of the complaint, and defendant prosecutes this appeal.

There are two points made by the defendant's counsel which we will briefly consider: first, the findings are insufficient to support the judgment; and second, the evidence shows that the use for which the property is sought to be taken is a private use.

The following are some of the findings:—

"3. That one of the uses for which the proposed ditch is intended is the sale and rental of water for mining and agricultural purposes.

"9. That the use to which plaintiffs intend to devote the proposed ditch is for the sale, rental, and distribution of water to the mining claims and agricultural land in said Red Hill Mining District, including mining and agricultural land belonging to said plaintiffs, and is not a purely private use."

At the request of counsel for defendant, the following additional finding was filed by the court:—

"5. With the exception of plaintiffs' own mine the owners of the different mining claims and agricultural lands mentioned could be served with water by means of ditches already in existence, and have been so served with water in former years. The ditches so used have ample capacity to carry the waters of Connor's Creek, except in times of exceptionally high water. Some of these ditches have fallen into disuse or have been worked away, and with the exception of the Connor ditch, the Jacobs ditch, the Mackey ditch, and the Butcher ditch, none of these ditches have rights of water of any value, either for mining or irrigating purposes. To serve the various claims and agricultural lands with water through these old ditches by letting the water run down Connor's Creek would involve a great waste of water, unless purchasers would take it at all times, night and day."

The conclusion of the court below was: "In conclusion, after a careful examination of the evidence offered, the following appears to be the true state of the case: Plaintiffs are the owners of the most valuable interest of any in the waters of Connor's Creek, which stream is the only one available for working the mines in the Red Hill Mining District. This water they have used for many years past in working their own mines, occasionally renting some to others for mining or irrigating. Plaintiffs cannot work their mine to advantage by means of ditches now in existence, and rather than have their water become worthless, they propose to make a public use of it, in which use, as a part of the general public, they will be entitled to a share. The question is not free from difficulties; but in my judgment the statute should be liberally construed in a mining country; and if it appears that the intended use is a public one to a reasonable extent, the right of way should be granted."

We think that both points are well taken.

The findings are insufficient to show that the use for which the water was intended was a public use, and it clearly appears from the evidence that the main and substantial object of plaintiff-iffs is to use the water in working their own mining claims. Private property cannot be taken for such a purpose. (The Wilmington Canal and Reservoir Company v. Dominguez, 50 Cal. 505; Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 593; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540.)

Judgment and order reversed and the court below is instructed to enter judgment in favor of defendant.

E. A. S. PAGE, RESPONDENT, v. W. B. LATHAM,
APPELLANT.

ATTACHMENT — INDEBTEDNESS SECURED BY MORTGAGE.— Lapse of time is not sufficient to authorize an attachment where a mortgage has been given to secure the payment of the indebtedness on which the action is brought. It cannot be assumed that the Statute of Limitations would be pleaded in action to enforce the security, nor could the statute have run without any fault on the part of the creditor.

APPEAL from an order of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco refusing to discharge an attachment.

The action was brought on two promissory notes executed by the defendant to the plaintiff. At the commencement of the action an attachment was issued against the property of the defendant. The following is a copy of the affidavit on which the attachment issued:—

" [Title of Court and Cause.]

" STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco.

" E. A. S. Page, being duly sworn, says: That she is a plaintiff in the above entitled action; that the said defendant is indebted to her in the sum of fifty-one hundred and ninety-seven dollars in gold coin, over and above all legal set-offs and counter-claims, upon certain express and implied contracts for the direct payment of money, to wit: upon two promissory notes dated November 16, 1871, for fourteen hundred dollars each and interest thereon, made by defendant to said plaintiff, and the subsequent acknowledgment in writing, and promise of said defendant to pay the said notes and the interest thereon; that such contracts were made and are payable in this State, and that the payment of the same has not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge upon personal property; that originally, at the time of the making of said notes, the said defendant executed and delivered to one N. Page a mortgage upon real property purporting to secure the payment of said two notes and the interest, but that said N. Page was not then nor has he since been the holder or the owner of said notes, or either of them, and that said mortgage has become valueless without any fault of this plaintiff, or of the said N. Page, by reason of the lapse of time.

"That the said attachment is not sought, and the said action is not prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of the said defendant.

"E. A. S. PAGE.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, A. D. 1880.

"SAM'L S. MURPHY, Notary Public."

The defendant moved to discharge the attachment on the ground that the affidavit was insufficient. The court denied the motion.

B. S. Brooks, for Appellant.

Rhodes & Barstow, and H. Hamilton, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—The motion to dissolve the attachment should have been granted. The only ground stated in the affidavit upon which the plaintiff claims that the mortgage given as security for the payment of the note has become valueless is lapse of time. The plaintiff does not know, nor can he until demurrer or answer, whether or not the plea of the Statute of Limitations will be interposed. If that plea should not be interposed the security would remain. Besides, if a person permits the statutory time to pass, is it not his act? He could have brought his action for foreclosure within the time; if he omitted to do so it was his own act by which the security became valueless.

Order reversed and cause remanded, with instructions to grant the motion.

GABRIEL BOVO, APPELLANT, v. TERESA BOVO, RESPONDENT.

HUSBAND AND WIFE — DIVORCE — COMMUNITY PROPERTY.— When a divorce is granted on the ground of adultery or extreme cruelty the division of the community property between the parties will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the discretion of the court in that respect appears to have been abused.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

P. B. Nagle, and A. H. Loughborough, for Appellant.

B. N. Swain, A. Craig, and L. F. Dunand, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—Plaintiff brought his suit for a divorce, charging the defendant with adultery, and defendant, after denying the charge in her answer, filed a cross-complaint praying a divorce from the plaintiff on the ground of extreme cruelty. The court granted a divorce, but upon what ground does not appear in the transcript. Plaintiff appealed, and asks for a modification of the decree.

The point is made that the court awarded the defendant too large a proportion (nearly one half) of the community property. Section 146 of the Civil Code provides that "if the decree be rendered on the ground of adultery or extreme cruelty the community property shall be assigned to the respective parties in such proportions as the court, from the facts of the case and the condition of the parties may deem just."

In view of all the facts of the case, as established by the evidence, we cannot say that the court awarded too large a portion of the community property to the defendant, and therefore we are not prepared to reverse the judgment for abuse of discretion. The circumstances found in the case of Brown v. Brown, 60 Cal. 579, were very different from those appearing in the transcript in the present case, and therefore that case is not authority in this. There is no error in the proceedings demanding a reversal.

J. R. SHARPSTEIN, RESPONDENT, v. PRISCILLA FRIEDLANDER, APPELLANT.

LAW OF THE CASE—DECISION ON APPEAL.—A decision on appeal, establishing the legal effect of an agreement with reference to a right asserted under it, becomes the law of the case, and cannot be questioned on a second appeal.

TRUST—LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE.—The defendant had possession of a promissory note to which the plaintiff was entitled under an agreement between him and one Isaac Friedlander, deceased, and the action was brought to compel an assignment and delivery of the note to the plaintiff. The note was payable to Isaac Friedlander, who held it at the time of his death, and the defendant obtained possession of it as executrix of his estate. After the commencement of the action the defendant collected the note by off-setting in part a claim which the maker had against the estate, and receiving the balance in money, and thereupon surrendered the note to the maker. A supplemental complaint was filed stating the fact of the collection, and demanding a judgment against the defendant for the amount of the note. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, that the defendant was a trustee for his benefit, and that her duty was to deliver the note to him; that its collection and surrender constituted a breach of trust, and that she was personally liable for the amount.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The agreement on which the action was based will be found in the report of the case on the former appeal—54 Cal. 58.

Doyle, Barber & Scripture, for Appellant.

McAllister & Bergin, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.— When this case was before the late Supreme Court, on a former appeal from a judgment upon demurrer to the complaint in the action, 54 Cal. 58, the court announced as the law of the case that the plaintiff had the right to elect to regard the two promissory notes which constituted the subject-matter of the agreement upon which the action was founded, as constituting one entire fund, and to take as his share of the fund the unpaid note which had come into the hands of the defendant, who claimed to hold it as executrix of the estate of Isaac Friedlander, deceased. Defendant therefore held the note for the benefit of the plaintiff, and the action was maintainable against her personally, and not as representative of the estate of Friedlander.

That decision has been challenged on the argument of this appeal; but whatever opinion may be entertained of the original question involved in the action in which the decision was rendered, the decision itself must be regarded as a final determination of the rights of the parties to the promissory note, which was the subject-matter in suit. The plaintiff was entitled to it or its proceeds if collected by the defendant. Holding the note as she did in trust for the benefit of the plaintiff, the defendant had no authority to deal with it as her own, or as an asset of the estate of which she was executrix; she could not use it in payment of her own debt, or of any claim against the estate. Hence, when she, instead of discharging her trust by surrendering the note to the plaintiff, collected it from the maker, she became personally liable for the proceeds thereof; and she was not entitled to off-set the amount by any claim which the maker of the note might have had against the estate.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WILLIAM H. BRODRIBB, AN INSANE PERSON, BY H. GOODALL, HIS GUARDIAN, RESPONDENT, v. LUTHER O. TIBBITS ET AL., APPELLANTS.

EVIDENCE — ORDER OF PROBATE COURT — PRESUMPTION.—An order of the late Probate Court of the county of San Bernardino, removing a former guardian and appointing his successor was given in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. Its admission was objected to on the ground that no notice or citation had been served on the former guardian to show cause why he should not be removed, but it did not appear from the transcript that there was any foundation for the objection in point of fact. Held, that in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the court must be presumed to have acted correctly.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of San Bernardino, and from an order refusing a new trial.

Luther O. Tibbits, for Appellants.

Paris & Bledsoe, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—There are many points attempted to be presented and allegations of error made in the transcript before us, the relevancy or materiality of which are not apparent to us. We see but one point which we deem worthy of notice, and that is in reference to the removal of the former guardian.

On the trial the defendants objected to the admissibility in the evidence of the order of removal, and the appointment of a successor, on the ground that no notice or citation had been served on the former guardian to show cause why he should not be removed. The orders of the court were received in evidence, but are not brought before us; therefore there is nothing in the transcript, except the statement in the objection, showing that he was not served; and in such case we may presume that the action of the court was correct and well founded. The proceedings of the late Probate Court are to be construed in the same manner as the proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction. (§ 98, Code Civ. Proc., before amendments of 1880.)

DISMISSAL OF ACTION — ORDER VACATING — DISCRETION OF THE COURT.—The dismissal of an action for want of prosecution may be set aside by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion, and to justify a reversal on appeal, there must be a clear and manifest abuse of discretion.

APPEAL from an order of the Superior Court of the county of Nevada.

The dismissal was set aside on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect.

J. C. Caldwell, and J. N. Thorne, for Appellants.

O. W. Cross, for Respondent.

By the COURT.—The court below dismissed this cause on motion of defendants for want of prosecution, and on a further motion set aside the order of dismissal. An appeal is prosecuted from the last mentioned order. The ruling of the Superior Court was liberal, but we cannot see that it abused its discretion in vacating the order of dismissal. A motion to set aside an order of dismissal is addressed to the sound discretion of the Superior Court, and this court is disposed to sustain the ruling of the court below, unless there is a clear and manifest abuse of discretion. No such clear and manifest abuse exists here, and the order must be affirmed.

P. H. NEWBILL ET AL., APPELLANTS, v. J. B. WHITEFIELD ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

REJECTION — MINING CLAIM — FINDINGS — SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE.—The action was brought to recover possession of a mining claim, and was tried by the court without a jury. Findings were filed, and a judgment entered thereon in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied. One of the grounds of the motion was insufficiency in the evidence. Held, on a review of the evidence, that it was insufficient to support the findings, and that a new trial should have been granted.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of San Bernardino, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Harris & Allen, Bricknell & White, and C. H. Larrabee, for Appellants.

Satterwhite & Curtis, Boyer & Gibson, C. W. Rowell, and R. E. Bledsoe, for Respondents.

ROSS, J.—The contest on this case is between the claimants of two certain mining claims called, respectively, the Red Jacket and Burning Moscow, situated in Grapevine Mining District, in the Calico Mountains of San Bernardino County. The action is ejectment—plaintiffs claiming the lode in question to be within the lines of the Red Jacket, and the defendants that it is a part of the Burning Moscow.

The fact is not disputed that the plaintiff Newbill discovered the Red Jacket on the 26th day of March, 1881, whatever its lines may be held to be. On that day, in traversing the mountain, he discovered certain veins of rock running in a northwesterly and southeasterly direction, and containing minerals of value, and with the intention of locating a mining claim thereon pursuant to the laws of the United States, and of the local customs and rules of the district, he placed a discovery stake in the ground near the vein, with a written notice signed by him, claiming three hundred feet on each side of the ledge, and running five hundred feet southeasterly and one thousand feet northwesterly along the vein, and stating in the notice that he claimed twenty days within which to mark the boundaries and record his claim—the time claimed being the time allowed by the local rules and customs of the district for that purpose. A few days afterward, and before the 11th day of April, 1881, Newbill again went upon his claim, named it Red Jacket, and commenced to mark its boundaries. For the purposes of our decision we shall assume—what is strenuously denied by the appellants—that the evidence sustains the finding of the court below to the effect that at that time he (Newbill) “erected a stone monument about five hundred feet southeasterly from the discovery stake and notice aforesaid, with a written notice thereon marked southeastern end of Red Jacket, and at the same time erected another similar stone monument about three feet northerly from the last named monument, and put a written notice thereon, marked northeast corner of Red Jacket."

Owing to sickness, Newbill was obliged to suspend work, and did not do anything further at that time in locating or marking the boundaries. Continuing sick he agreed with his co-plaintiffs — Wallace, Parks, and Ferrell — that they should go upon the ground and complete the location and marking of the boundaries of the claim, in consideration of which they were to have an undivided half of it. Accordingly, on the 12th of April, 1881, Wallace, Parks, and Ferrell went upon the ground and marked out the boundaries of the Red Jacket claim, not, however, in precise accordance with the discovery notice put up by Newbill on the 26th of March, nor in accordance with the subsequent monuments put up by him, and marked as the southeastern end and the northeastern corner of the Red Jacket, but they marked the boundaries so as to extend about six hundred feet along the vein northwesterly, and about nine hundred feet southeasterly from the discovery stake and notice, with a width of a little less than three hundred feet on each side of the vein, and including the discovery stake and notice. Such boundaries were marked by erecting a rock monument at each corner, and at the middle of each end, and at the middle of the north or northeast side line, and placing written notices on each corner monument marked respectively: Northeast corner Red Jacket, northwest corner Red Jacket, southwest corner Red Jacket, and southeast corner Red Jacket, and on the southeast center end monument was placed a written notice of which the following is a copy:—

"NOTICE OF LOCATION OF QUARTZ CLAIM:

"Notice is hereby given to all whom it may concern, that we, G. B. Wallace, H. C. Parks, P. H. Newbill, J. B. teen hundred linear feet of this vein or lode, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Grapevine Mining District, county of San Bernardino, State of California, and known as the Red Jacket Gold and Silver and Nickel Quartz Mining Claim, and extending fifteen hundred feet to monument south-east to center of claim; this is the southeast end of claim; and three hundred feet north, eastern center of Red Cloud, extending northwest fifteen hundred feet to northwest center of Red Jacket from this notice of the discovery or prospect shaft, the exterior boundaries of this claim being distinctly marked by reference to some natural object or permanent monuments, and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Commencing at this notice, and bearing westerly fifteen hundred feet from this notice to a monument on center of claim; thence three hundred feet southwest to north corner of Red Cloud Mine; thence fifteen hundred feet along this line of Red Cloud; thence three hundred feet north to center of claim; thence three hundred (feet) northeasterly to corner; thence fifteen hundred feet northwesterly to monument; thence three hundred (feet) to center of lead; and we intend to hold and work said claim as provided by the local customs and rules of miners, and the mining statutes of the United States.

"J. B. FERRELL."

All of the monuments thus erected by Wallace, Parks, and Ferrell on the 12th of April were, according to the findings of the court below, placed in plain and conspicuous places except the southeast center end monument, on which was placed the notice above copied, which monument, according to the findings, "was not placed in a plain or conspicuous place, but at the bottom of a deep and abrupt declivity or gulch, in an obscure place, where it was not likely to be seen by persons looking for monuments or passing through the country, and it was much smaller than any of the other monuments mentioned." This finding of the court we think unsupported by the evidence. Neither the testimony of Wiggins, Ray, nor Parks, cited by counsel for respondents sustains it. On the contrary, the testimony of Parks is, that a man going upon the ground to locate mining claims would have been apt to have seen it without tracing the monuments around. "He could have found it if he started to go up the mountain. It is the only pass by which he could get up there, and that notice stood right in the pass. He couldn't miss the monument," said the witness. Moreover, we can conceive of no motive on the part of Wallace, Parks, and Ferrell, or either of them, for putting the notice in an obscure place. The very purpose of posting it was to assert a claim, not to conceal one.

So, also, the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of the court below to the effect that the two monuments which the court finds were erected by Newbill prior to April 11, and marked, respectively, southeastern end of Red Jacket, and northeast corner of Red Jacket were to the knowledge of Wallace, Ferrell, and Parks standing and allowed to remain at, and subsequent to the time they marked the boundaries of the Red Jacket on the 12th of April. Not only is there no evidence that they had actual knowledge of such monuments, but it would seem incredible that they would have left them standing as indicating the extent of the Red Jacket, when, at the very same time, they so carefully marked out, and built monuments on other boundaries of that claim, which extended far beyond the monuments which it is said they knowingly left standing.

At all events, when the defendants went on the ground on the 16th and 17th days of July, 1881, they found, or could have found if they had looked, the monuments—eight in number—erected by Wallace, Parks, and Ferrell, on the 12th of April, with the notices above indicated. Those boundaries included the premises in controversy. From them the defendants saw, or ought to have seen, that the ground was appropriated by others, and was not open to location by them.

But it is said for the defendants that they were misled by the two monuments found by the court to have been erected by Newbill prior to April 11. That this was not so is conclusively shown by the fact that defendants did not respect those monuments; for they so located their claim as to embrace ground included within them, as well as within the boundaries marked out by Wallace, Ferrell, and Parks, on the 12th of April.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded to the court below for a new trial.

EDWARD P. COLE, PETITIONER, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, AND JOHN HUNT, JR., ONE OF THE JUDGES THEREOF, RESPONDENTS.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM — POWER TO CONTRACT — COMPENSATION OF ATTORNEY — JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.—A guardian ad litem was appointed to bring an action on behalf of certain infants and an insane person. The guardian employed an attorney to prosecute the action, and made a contract with him as to the compensation he should receive. The action was successful, and resulted in a judgment for several thousand dollars. The judgment was afterwards paid, and the money went into the hands of the attorney. The court thereupon made an order fixing the compensation of the attorney without regard to the contract, and requiring him to pay into court the residue of the money. Held, that the guardian ad litem had no power to make the contract, and that the order was not in excess of the jurisdiction of the court.

CERTIORARI to review an order of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

E. D. Wheeler, for Petitioner.

M. C. Hassett, for Respondents.

MYRICK, J.—A writ of review was granted on the application of petitioner to review the action of the Superior Court had upon the following state of facts:—

Catharine McKeever, an insane woman, and John McKeever, Jane McKeever, and Mary McKeever, minors, by their guardian ad litem, Margaret Hayes, commenced an action against the Market Street Railway Company, to recover damages for the death of Daniel McKeever, the husband of said Catharine, and the father of said minors. The said guardian ad litem employed the petitioner, E. P. Cole, Esq., an attorney at law, to commence and prosecute said action as attorney for the plaintiffs. The guardian ad litem had no means with which to pay the necessary expenses of the action, including costs and the attorney's fees, and Mr. Cole undertook to, and did pay the costs. Such proceedings were had in the action that on the 9th day of December, 1880, judgment was recovered by the plaintiffs against the railway company for $6,501.25 damages, with interest, and $108.50 costs; which judgment, on appeal, was affirmed by this court. Upon the going down of the remittitur an execution was issued February 3, 1882, and on the following day, February 4, the railway company paid to Mr. Cole the sum of $7,144.26, being the full amount then due for damages, interest, and costs; and Mr. Cole caused satisfaction to be entered. During the pendency of said appeal in this court, to wit, on the 28th day of October, 1881, letters of guardianship of the persons and estates of the said minors were duly issued by the proper court, to wit, the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, to Daniel Sheerin. On the 4th day of February, 1882, the day on which the attorney received the amount of the judgment, the said Daniel Sheerin, as guardian, petitioned the Superior Court in which said judgment had been rendered for an order that Mr. Cole pay the money into court, and that the court fix his proper compensation. An order to show cause was made and served. On the hearing the attorney admitted the receipt of the money, and that he was ready and willing to pay to any person authorized to receive the same, the amount which justly and fairly belonged to the plaintiffs, but objected that the court had no authority to fix the compensation, or to compel him to pay the money into court. The court overruled the objection, and after hearing testimony fixed the full compensation of counsel for the plaintiffs for services and expenses at $2,500, and ordered that the balance of the amount received be paid into court by two o'clock of February 8, 1882. On the 9th day of February, 1882, Mr. Cole paid into court $4,644.26, leaving in his hands $2,500, the amount fixed by the court, and on the same day the court ordered that $3,000 of the amount so paid be paid to Sheerin, the guardian of the minors, on his giving a proper bond.

The question for consideration before us is, as to the power of the Superior Court in which the action was pending, and the judgment was obtained, to fix the compensation of the attorney employed by the guardian ad litem, and order the balance paid into court. It is proper to remark that the only objection appearing on the part of the attorney is as to the power of the court to make the order. It is urged on his behalf that the court had no power "to take from Mr. Cole's pocket money lawfully in his possession, and that he claimed in good faith to be his own, and transfer it to the custody of the clerk of the court" [we quote from the argument]; that the Constitution of this State guarantees to all the right of trial by jury, and that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law"; that he had the right to submit to a jury, in a regular action instituted to that end, evidence as to what would be a proper compensation, and to have the determination of the jury thereupon.

By the law of the State, § 1021, Code of Civil Procedure, "the measure and mode of compensation of attorneys and counsellors at law is left to the agreement express or implied of the parties"; and in cases where an attorney is employed by a person capable of making a contract, which shall bind him or those whom he may represent, the attorney may have his action to recover the amount agreed upon in the one case, or the value of the services in the other; and in such cases, the fact of the existence of the contract and the amount agreed upon, or the value may be submitted to a jury. But, in cases where there is no one authorized to make a binding contract, the section of the Code above referred to would not apply. There must be some one on either side authorized to contract, or there is, of course, no valid contract. In Gurnee v. Maloney, 88 Cal. 85, this court held that the administrator of the estate of a deceased person could not make a contract for the payment of fees for services to be rendered by an attorney which would bind the estate. It seems to have been conceded in that case that the administrator had power to select an attorney, but such selection would be made, and the services would be rendered in view of the rule that the proper court [in that case the Probate Court] would have the right to pass upon and determine the proper compensation. In the matter before us neither of the plaintiffs in the action under consideration could have employed an attorney to commence or prosecute the action — neither could have brought the action in his or her own name — each of them was under disability; it was therefore necessary that the action should be brought by a general guardian, or by a guardian ad litem. In the case of a general guardian the appointment would have been made after due proceedings under article 2, chapter 14, Code Civ. Proc.; in the case of a guardian ad litem the appointment would be made by the court in which the action was pending, or was about to be commenced. It is not necessary to consider, in this case, the powers of a general guardian regarding the employment of an attorney; we are now considering only the powers of a guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem is an officer of the court appointing him; his duties are "to represent the infant, insane or incompetent person in the action or proceeding." (Code Civ. Proc. § 372.) He may, doubtless, employ an attorney to assist him in the prosecution or defense of the action, but he may not make a contract for the payment of compensation which shall absolutely bind the ward or his estate. He is like an agent with limited powers. If he collect the amount of a money judgment recovered by the plaintiff in the action, it should seem that, from the nature of his office, he may be compelled to an accounting by the court from which he received his authority. The court is, in effect, the guardian — the person named as guardian ad litem being but the agent to whom the court, in appointing him (thus exercising the power of the sovereign State as parens patrie) has delegated the execution of the trust; and through such agent the court performs its duty of protecting the rights of the infant or incompetent person. His powers are certainly no greater than those of a general guardian. Like the latter he may be allowed a credit for moneys advanced or paid out of the fund collected, as reasonable compensation for the expenses, and for the services of an attorney. But he has no power by specific agreement with the attorney to fix such compensation absolutely. An attorney accepting employment, and rendering services under such circumstances, must rely upon the subsequent action of the court in ascertaining and adjudging proper compensation. He cannot determine the amount, nor can he retain what he or the guardian ad litem may deem a proper sum, leaving it to the general guardian to sue for the excess. There is no place here for the doctrine of an implied promise upon a quantum meruit. The presumption of a promise is rebutted by the fact that the guardian had no power to contract in such manner as to bind the assets of the ward except conditionally. The attorney performing legal services for the infant aids the court in carrying out its duty of protection; he is not only an officer of the court in the general sense, but is the special agent through which the court acts; in this respect his position being analogous to that of an attorney employed by a general guardian, or by an executor or administrator. In the cases last referred to the compensation is, under our system of laws, fixed by the Probate Court. The statute being silent as to the tribunal which is to fix the compensation in case of a guardian ad litem, it seems to reasonably follow that the court placing him in position and making use of his service would have the fixing of his disbursements and the compensation of the attorney employed.

The cases cited by the petitioner do not apply to this case. In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483, was a case of employment with power to contract. In that case, the party applying for the order that his attorney pay to him the amount collected, was capable of contracting, and had contracted, for the employment and for the compensation; and the attorney claimed the right to have his accounts with the client fully adjusted. The court held that it would not, in such a proceeding, adjust the accounts, but would leave the party to his action. The court did not stand in any such relation with the party and the attorney, as courts stand with regard to infants and attorneys acting in their behalf.

It is urged, that by not permitting the attorney for the infant to retain such portion of the money collected as he may deem just, he is deprived of his property without due process of law, and is also deprived of his constitutional right of trial by jury. The error of the petitioner is in supposing that any specific portion of the money is his property. Such portion, only, of the money collected will be his property as the court may fix; and until so fixed, he has no such right of property, as is contemplated by the Constitution. In accepting the employment he consented to perform his duty without other compensation than such as might be allowed by the court. The guarantee of the right of trial by jury does not apply to such a case as this. There is no question of fact for a jury to try. The court fixes the amount, and when so fixed it is settled.

It is also urged that there was no power to direct the money to be paid on the application of the general guardian; that so long as the appointment of the guardian ad litem remained unrevoked, the general guardian had no standing in regard to the suit. It is sufficient to say that the appointment of the guardian ad litem is made, as the name of the office indicates, for the purpose of the suit — to represent the ward in the action. When the action is terminated, the amount recovered becomes assets of the ward, to be managed and controlled for his benefit. The guardian ad litem does not manage the ward's general estate, investing and reinvesting, but such duties are performed by the general guardian; and in order to perform those duties he should have the control of the property.

The amount allowed to Mr. Cole for his services and disbursements was twenty-five hundred dollars. The costs recovered amounted to one hundred and eight dollars and fifty cents. It would thus appear that the court allowed as compensation for services nearly twenty-four hundred dollars; and these amounts he was permitted to retain. The court certainly had power to direct him to pay over the remainder. Possibly the court might have had power, before fixing this amount for his services, to require him to pay over the whole sum collected, and afterwards make such allowances as should be just, but the court saw fit to make the allowance first, and order the balance to be paid over. We see no error.

Writ dismissed.

MORRISON, C. J., THORNTON, J., and ROSS, J., concurred.

SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting. — It is conceded that the guardian ad litem was authorized to employ an attorney to prosecute the action for the infant plaintiffs, and that the plaintiff here was duly employed by said guardian ad litem to prosecute said action, and that he did prosecute it to final judgment; and that he received the sum recovered and discharged said judgment as he was authorized to do. (Code Civ. Proc. § 283.)

And it will probably be conceded that if the parties, for whom he appeared in the action in which he recovered such judgment, had been adults, the court in which said action was tried could not in a summary manner have determined the "measure and mode of his compensation, because that "it left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties." (Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.) There are cases in which a court will summarily compel an attorney to pay over money which he has received in satisfaction of a judgment recovered by his client. But those are cases in which it is charged and made to appear that the attorney by not paying the money over is acting in bad faith. "It is this misconduct on which the court seizes as a ground of jurisdiction to compel him to pay the money in conformity with his professional duty. The application against him in such cases is not equivalent to an action of debt or assumpsit, but is a quasi-criminal proceeding in which the question is not merely whether the attorney has received the money, but whether he has acted improperly in not paying it over. If no dishonesty appears, the party will be left to his action." (In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483.)

The only question which we have to determine in this proceeding is, whether the Superior Court acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction? And, unless this case is distinguishable from Paschal's, this question is not altogether new. For as we interpret the opinion in that case, the court distinctly held that, in the absence of an allegation or proof of bad faith on the part of an attorney retaining money collected by him for a client, the court would not have jurisdiction to proceed in a summary manner against the attorney to compel him to pay it over to the client. That it was prima facie the duty of the attorney, "after deducting his own costs and disbursements," to pay over the residue to his client. But that for his fees and disbursements he had a lien upon the fund in his hands, and was under no obligation to pay over anything beyond the amount remaining in his hands after deducting the amount of his fees and disbursements. And that where it appeared the attorney and client honestly differed as to the amount of such fees and disbursements, they would be left to the usual remedy at law. A motion for an order to have an attorney pay over money which he has collected for a client cannot be properly granted unless the neglect or refusal to pay it over be imputable to a dishonest motive. The motion must be based upon the misconduct of the attorney. That is necessary in order to give the court jurisdiction to proceed in a summary manner. Such we understand to be the doctrine of the court In re Paschal, and it commends itself to our judgment.

But it is contended that that case differs materially from this. In that case the parties for whom the attorney had collected the money which it was sought to have him compelled to pay over were adults. In this case they are infants. But it is not contended that the attorney in this case was not authorized to receive the money recovered and to acknowledge satisfaction of the judgment. Nor is it contended that he did not have a lien upon the fund in his hands for the amount of his fees and disbursements, or that he had no right to retain in his hands the amount of said fees and disbursements. But it is claimed that because the residue after deducting the amount of said fees and disbursements would belong to infants, the court had jurisdiction to proceed and determine in a summary manner the measure of compensation of their attorney. But the legislature when enacting that the manner and mode of compensation of attorneys should be left to the agreement of the parties, express or implied, did not provide that in cases where infants were parties the measure and mode of compensation of their attorneys should be left to the court in which the action was tried.

And there does not appear to be any very good reason for making any such distinction. It cannot be assumed that a judge, by proceeding to determine in a summary manner the amount of compensation to which an attorney is entitled for services rendered in behalf of infant parties, would be more favorable to the infants than a jury, or that there would be less likelihood of justice being done between the parties after both had had an opportunity of a fair trial before a court and jury than there would be if the matter was summarily heard and determined by a judge upon motion.

And the general guardian who appears on behalf of the infants in this proceeding could as well have commenced an action as to have made a motion for the adjustment of the matter in controversy between his wards and the plaintiff herein.

The analogy between this case and one in which a general guardian of an infant sues or defends for his ward, is too slight to warrant a court in holding that the rules which prevail in regard to the employment and compensation of counsel by a general guardian can be applied to a case in which counsel appears on behalf of infants in an action in which they sue or defend by a guardian ad litem. Speaking of the appointment of a guardian ad litem, Abbott says: "Such an appointment does not seem to involve any relation of guardianship in any full or significant sense of the term, so little is any custody of person or estate involved." (Abbott's Law Dict.)

There is no law which authorizes such a guardian to allow or present to a court for allowance any claim for compensation of counsel for services rendered for the ward of such guardian.

And in Smith v. Smith, 69 Ill. 308, it was distinctly held, that where an infant is a party to an action, and appears by a guardian ad litem and an attorney, the fees of such attorney could not, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, be taxed by the court, in which the action was tried, upon the petition of the guardian ad litem, but that such fees could only be recovered in the usual mode against the general guardian, and collected out of the infant's estate. In that case the action in which the attorney had appeared for the infant involved the title to real estate, and the attorney did not, as in this case, have the fruits of the litigation in his own hands. So that the question of the right of the attorney to hold on to money recovered in an action for an infant client until his, the attorney's, fees were paid, was not involved in that case. But by parity of reasoning it would seem that if in the one case the attorney must sue the general guardian for his fee, in the other the general guardian must sue the attorney for such amount as the attorney retained over and above his fair compensation; that is, in a case like this, in which it is not claimed that the attorney withholds anything beyond the sum to which he honestly believes himself entitled.

If the summary jurisdiction of the court depends, as was held In re Paschal (supra) upon the question of the attorney's good faith in withholding what he claims to be due him, it is quite clear that the court below exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order now before us, and therefore it should be annulled.

McKEE, J., dissenting.—I dissent. The moneys collected by the petitioner in this proceeding, as attorney at law for his infant clients, constituted the estate of the infants. To the possession of the estate and of the persons of the infants the general guardian was entitled. The guardian was subject to the supervision, and amenable to the orders of the Superior Court, sitting as a Probate Court; and the estate was a probate matter, over which the court had, as a Probate Court, under § 5, article vi., of the Constitution of 1879, the exclusive jurisdiction. As such it alone had authority to ascertain and determine the proper amount of compensation to which the attorney for the infants was entitled for the services which he had rendered in securing the estate of the infants; and upon presentation of a petition or claim against the estate for such services, it could, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, allow and order paid out of the estate what was just and reasonable.

But the Superior Court, sitting as a court of law, exercising its jurisdiction over parties to an action at law, in which a money judgment had been rendered and satisfied, had no jurisdiction of the money collected in satisfaction of the judgment, as part of the estate of the infants. Nor had it jurisdiction to ascertain and determine in the action the amount of compensation to which the attorney for the infants, who collected the judgment, was entitled for his services. The guardian could not make any contract with the attorney which would be binding on the estate of his wards. Such a contract, if made, would be, so far as the estate is concerned, null. NEGLECT—MASTER AND SERVANT.—A railroad company is liable to an employee for an injury received by him in consequence of the unskillful, improper, and negligent manner in which the company constructed its road. In such a case, the rule exempting the master from liability for an injury to a servant caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant has no application.

PER CURIAM.—The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

The point is made that the evidence shows that the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant's engineer, and that as he was engaged in the same general business with such engineer, he assumes, in taking employment, such a risk, and should not be allowed to recover. But the court finds that the injury was caused by the unskillful, improper, and negligent manner in which the defendant constructed its road.

Conceding that the point urged, as to the relation of the plaintiff iff and the engineer is correct, it has no application to the facts as found. The plaintiff did not assume the risk arising from the unskillful, improper, and negligent manner in which defendant's road was constructed.

It is said that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the findings as to the construction of the road above stated. We have examined the evidence and are of opinion that it does sustain the finding.

Judgment and order affirmed.

T. M. LOUP ET AL., RESPONDENTS, v. CALIFORNIA SOUTHERN RAILROAD COMPANY, APPELLANT.

CONTRACT — RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION — ESTIMATES OF ENGINEER — PLEADING.—

The action was brought in part to recover a balance alleged to be due for the grading and masonry work of certain sections of a railroad. The contracts under which the work was done provided for payments from time to time during the progress of the work upon estimates by the engineer as to its amount and value according to the contract prices, and further provided that on the completion of the work the engineer should make a final estimate of all the work done, and that the balance due after deducting previous payments should thereupon be paid by the defendant. The complaint contained four counts, in the first and fourth of which the plaintiff declared specially upon the contracts above referred to. It was alleged that the work had been completed and the contracts fully performed on their part, but there was no allegation in regard to an estimate by the engineer. The defendant demurred for insufficiency, and the demurrer was overruled. Held, that these two counts were bad because of the omission in respect to an estimate as provided for by the contracts.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of San Diego, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of MR. JUSTICE MCKEE.

H. E. Cooper, and M. A. Luce, for Appellant.

Chase, Arnold & Hunsaker, and Leach & Parker, for Respondents.

MCKEE, J.—The complaint in this case contains four counts: The first and fourth are founded upon two special contracts, the third upon a quantum meruit, and the second upon a cause of action in the nature of an action on the case for alleged wrongful acts or omissions by the defendant.

There was a demurrer to the complaint, on the grounds that several causes of action had been improperly united, and that none of the counts contained facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; but the demurrer was overruled.

Several causes of action are unitable in one complaint when they arise upon contract express or implied; and as the first, third, and fourth counts arise out of the special contracts upon which the action is founded; they belong to the same class and were properly united in the complaint.

But the second count in the complaint is not founded on the contract. Its allegations are, substantially, that the defendant had, according to the terms of the contract, the right to enter at any time, by itself or its agents, upon the premises covered by the contract, and perform any work thereon; that about the 1st of April, 1881, it elected to avail itself of the right, and after notifying the plaintiffs entered upon the premises for the purpose of constructing some culverts on the road; that it kept and held possession of the premises for the space of three months, and "unnecessarily delayed and neglected and refused to proceed in a prompt or reasonable manner, or in a reasonable time, to construct said culverts, so as to permit the plaintiffs to do their part of the work, and thereby hindered and delayed plaintiffs in and about the doing of their work aforesaid; . . . and by reason of the hindrance and delay caused by the negligent and wrongful acts and omissions of the defendant the plaintiffs have sustained damages in the sum of one thousand dollars," for which they ask judgment.

In entering upon the premises covered by the contracts the defendant was not guilty of a breach of contract, for the right to enter was reserved by the contracts; but the charge is that the defendant, in exercising its right, "neglected and refused to proceed in a prompt or reasonable manner, or in a reasonable time," to perform its work; and for these wrongful acts or omissions the plaintiffs sue. But such acts or omissions constituted a breach of duty, not of contract, out of which arose an obligation and a liability on the part of the defendant to respond to the plaintiffs in damages.

A person commits a tort, and renders himself liable to an action for damages, who commits some act not authorized by law, or who omits to do something which he ought to do by law, and by such an act or omission either infringes some absolute right, to the enjoyment of which another is entitled, or causes to such other some substantial loss of money, health, or material comfort. (Underhill on Torts, 4.) So whenever there is a contract and something to be done in the course of the employment which is the subject of that contract, if there be a breach of duty in the course of the employment, the persons injured by the breach may recover damages in tort. (Cooley on Torts, 91; Courtenay v. Earl, 10 Com. B. 73.)

It therefore seems clear that the cause of action stated in the second count was founded on a neglect of duty. The plaintiffs allege that the defendant by its wrongful acts and omissions occasioned them injury, and the action was tried and determined as an action ex delicto; for the court found that the defendant had the right, under the contract, to enter upon the premises and construct the culverts. Where a person has authority to do an act no action will lie for doing it, unless in the performance of the act he has violated some duty which he owed to the plaintiffs. And the court finds that there was such a violation of duty, because, in performing the act which it had authority to perform, "the defendant did not proceed in a reasonably diligent or expeditious manner, but greatly delayed in building the culverts, and refused to proceed in a reasonably prompt or expeditious manner therewith." The defendant was therefore guilty of a wrong to the plaintiffs which occasioned damages to them in the sum of one thousand dollars, and that sum the court awarded to the plaintiffs in the general judgment on the causes of action on the contracts. Damages for breaches of contracts and for neglect of duty were thus assessed in the same case; but an action founded on neglect of duty cannot be united in the same complaint with actions founded on contracts. (Bowman v. Purtell, 47 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 403; Thompson v. St. Nicholas Bank, 61 How. 163.) The demurrer to the complaint should therefore have been sustained.

Besides, the defendant is sued as a corporation, and in the fourth count of the complaint there is no averment of the defendant's corporate existence.

It is a settled rule of pleading that each count must contain in itself facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; it cannot be helped out by reference to other counts or parts of the complaint for averments which are essential to it as a cause of action. (Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 371; Kretchbaum v. Melton, 49 Cal. 55.)

Moreover, neither the first nor fourth counts contain any sufficient averment of a breach of the covenant of the defendant to pay, which is contained in the special contracts upon which the causes of action are founded.

It appears by the contracts that Loup and Withers, the respondents, undertook to do the grading and masonry work of some sections of the appellant's railroad, according to specifications of the work which were incorporated in the contracts, and in conformity to the plans and directions and to the satisfaction and acceptance of the chief engineer of the appellant. The work contracted for was to be commenced and finished within specified dates, for which the appellant agreed to pay, at prices fixed by the contracts, from time to time, "and in the manner and form provided" by the contracts. Those provisions were as follows:

"1st. Estimate of the work shall be made by and under the direction of the engineer at the close of each calendar month, or as soon thereafter as may be, of the amount and value as near as practicable of work done and material furnished and delivered under this contract according to the prices named herein; and within thirty days after the rendering of such estimates the said company shall pay to the said contractor the amount of said estimates, less previous payments, and less ten (10) per cent.

"2d. Also, that the ——— per cent. retained from the above monthly estimates shall in no case be considered due or payable to said contractor until the work herein contracted for is fully completed, in accordance with this agreement, and said percentage may be used by the company in case of apprehended delay, in hastening the completion of the work.

"Upon the completion of all the work herein contracted for, in the time and manner agreed upon, or as soon after said completion as may be, the engineer shall make a final estimate of all the work done, from which shall be deducted the sum of the payments theretofore made on the monthly estimates, and the residue shall be paid by said company at its office in San Diego to said contractor, upon his receipting for the same in full upon said final estimate." It was also stipulated "that in case any disputes or differences shall arise between the company and the contractor as to the construction, or true intent or meaning of the agreement, or the sufficiency of the performance of any of the work to be done under it, or the price to be paid, that all such disputes and differences shall be referred to the engineer, who shall consider and decide the same, and his decision shall be final between the parties, who do hereby submit, all and singular, the premises to the award, arbitration, and decision of the engineer, and agree that the same shall be final and conclusive between them to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and it is further agreed that the submission to the engineer, touching all matters herein contained, agreed to be submitted to him, shall be deemed, considered, and taken as an essential part of this agreement, and not revocable by either of the parties hereto."

Allegations are made that the contractors performed all the conditions of the contracts to be by them performed; that they fully completed the work, and the same was accepted by the railroad company, but that the company has since its acceptance refused to perform its covenants, and has failed and refused to make or cause to be made a final estimate of the work and of the money due to the contractors.

The last of the stipulations in the contracts, to refer any disputes and differences which might arise between the contractors and the company, as to the construction of the contracts, or the sufficiency of the performance of any of the work done under them, or the price to be paid to the chief engineer of the company for his arbitrament and final decision, goes to the very foundation of the present action, and, if valid, operates to oust the jurisdiction of the courts over the contracts; but such a stipulation in a contract is regarded as being against the policy of the law, and, for that reason, void; and, notwithstanding such a stipulation in the contracts, an action may be maintained upon the contract without offering to comply with the stipulation. Such was the conclusion reached by this court, after a review of the authorities, in the case of Holmes v. Richet, 56

Cal. 307. In that case we held that an agreement to refer a case to arbitration will not be regarded by the courts; but they will take jurisdiction and determine a dispute between parties, notwithstanding such agreement.

But the first of the stipulations referred to is not the equivalent of the last; it does not attempt to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts over the contracts; it simply makes their enforcement dependent upon the settlement and ascertainment by a third person of the amount due and unpaid. As such, the obligation of the defendant to pay for the work did not arise until the final estimate was made by the chief engineer, showing all the work which had been done, the payments which had been made upon it, and the balance which remained due and unpaid. Upon the production of such a document the company promised to pay at its office in the city of San Diego. The right of the contractors to payment, or to enforce payment was, therefore, by their contract, made dependent upon the act of the engineer, and until performance of that, no action could be maintained to enforce performance of the promise to pay, unless the defendant waived the condition by permitting the performance of the act, or the engineer himself, fraudulently or otherwise, refused to perform, or unless there was a breach of the condition by refusal of the defendant to have the estimate made on demand of the contractors, or to pay according to its promise, when it was presented at its office and payment demanded. But there are no such averments contained in the complaint — there are, therefore, no sufficient averments of a breach of the conditions upon which the contracting parties made the payment dependent. One party to a contract cannot complain of the other until he has put his adversary in default by not only a substantial performance of the contract on his part, but a failure or refusal to perform on the other.

In Smith v. Briggs, 3 Denio, 73, defendant had covenanted to pay the plaintiff for doing the carpenter work of certain houses, when he should receive from the architect his certificate that the work was fully and completely finished, according to the specifications annexed to the contract, and it was held that the giving of the certificate by the architect was a condition precedent, the performance of which must be averred in the declaration in an action to recover payment of the work. Morgan v. Birnie, 9 Bing. 672, is to the same effect; and this court in Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, affirmed the same doctrine. "If," says Mr. Justice Bramwell, in Elliot v. Royal Ex. Assurance Co., L. R. 2 Ex. 245, "the original agreement is not simply to pay a sum of money, but that a sum of money shall be paid if something else happens, and that something else is that a third person shall settle the amount, then no cause of action arises until the third party has so assessed the sum. For to say the contrary would be to give the party a different measure or rate of compensation from that for which he bargained." "And," says the Supreme Court of Vermont, in Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673, "if payment for the work performed is dependent upon, and to be made according to the engineer's estimates, as to its amount, and the employing party performs its duty in reference to the employment of suitable engineers, etc., the obligation to pay will not arise until such estimates are made, unless no estimates have been made through the neglect or fault of the engineer or of the party who employs him."

These cases establish the proposition that the action in hand was, according to the allegations of the complaint, prematurely brought, and the demurrer to the complaint ought to have been sustained.

Many other questions arise out of the record, but in view of the conclusions reached, it is unnecessary to pass upon them.

Judgment and order reversed.

THORNTON, J., concurring, specially. I concur in the judgment on the last point ruled in the foregoing opinion. As to the other points I am of opinion that there is no error in the ruling of the court below.

MORRISON, C. J., ROSS, J., MCKINSTRY, J., and MYBICK, J., concurring specially. We concur in the judgment on the ground that averment and proof of the estimates by the engineer, as provided for in the contracts, (or averment and proof of legal cause for the non-production of such estimates,) were essential to the vesting of a cause of action in plaintiffs.

SANFORD M. HILLS, RESPONDENT, v. AUGUSTUS
OHLIG ET AL., PATRICK HOLLINAN, APPELLANT.

MECHANIC'S LIEN — SUFFICIENCY OF CLAIM.—The action was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien. The claim filed was objected to on the ground that it did not state the time given as required by the statute. It purported, however, to state the terms and conditions of the contract, and it did not appear that there was any express agreement as to time. Held, that the objection could not be sustained.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

J. C. Bates, for Appellant.

L. J. Hardy, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien.

The only point presented for decision relates to the claim of lien filed in the recorder's office. The claim as filed states that the plaintiff was by the contract to perform the work and labor and furnish materials for the alteration, construction, and repairing of a certain building, that he did perform the work and labor and furnished materials for the purpose indicated, that it was agreed he was to be paid for the same what they should be reasonably worth, and that they were reasonably worth $601.80.

The law requires that the claim filed shall contain inter alia a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract (Code Civ. Proc., § 1187), and it is urged that the time given was not stated in the claim. So far as we can see, all the terms and conditions are stated. We cannot judicially say that they are not stated as agreed on by the parties and expressed in the contract. The words of the statute, "time given," in our judgment mean the time of payment for the work and labor performed and materials furnished, as agreed on and expressed in the contract. As said above, we cannot say that the contract is not accurately stated; that is, stated as made and agreed on. If this is so, no distinct time was agreed on, but the time of payment was left to the rule fixed by the law on such a state of facts. When this is the case, no time is given in contemplation of law, and the requirement that the "time given" must be stated does not apply. If the words "time given" refer to the time agreed on for the completion of the contract, and no period of time for such completion is fixed by the contract, but such time is allowed as the law gives, the same rule applies, and no time need be stated in the claim.

We are of opinion that the claim, as filed, complied with the statute, and is sufficient.

SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, RESPONDENT, v. A. E.
HORTON ET AL., LEVI CHASE, APPELLANT.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE — DEFAULT — JUDGMENT.— A judgment by default in a foreclosure suit cannot be entered for a larger amount than the complaint shows to be due.

INTEREST — COMPOUNDING.— Compound interest can only be allowed as provided for by § 1919 of the Civil Code.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Rhodes & Barstow, George N. Williams, and Levi Chase, for Appellant.

A. N. Drown, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—Plaintiff filed a complaint to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendant, and no defense having been interposed, a default decree was entered in the case. On this appeal it is urged that the decree was for a larger amount than the complaint shows to have been due, and we think the point is well taken. Computing the interest claimed in the complaint, and adding thereto payments alleged to have been made by the mortgagee for taxes, it appears that the decree is for a larger sum than results from such computation.

It is contended by respondent that the difference may be accounted for by proof of payments made by the mortgagee in the shape of taxes and insurance on the mortgaged premises, after suit brought, but this assumption will not support the decree.

"A decree pro confesso only concludes a party as to the averments in the bill, and does not amount to a confession of any fact not alleged in it." (De Leuw v. Neely, 71 Ill. 473); and the same rule is found in § 580, Code Civ. Proc.

The attention of the court below is directed to § 1919 of the Civil Code in computing interest upon the interest which is not punctually paid. That section declares that the parties may agree that it shall become a part of the principal, and thereafter bear the same rate of interest as the principal debt. This appears to us to be the limit.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF J. M. KELLEY, DECEASED.

PARTIAL DISTRIBUTION — EXECUTRIX — RIGHT OF APPEAL.—An executrix may appeal from an order directing a partial distribution, but in the absence of the evidence on which the order was made, the proceedings being regular, and it appearing from the facts found that the condition of the estate was such as to justify the order, there is no ground for a reversal.

APPEAL from an order of the Superior Court of the county of Yolo directing a partial distribution.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

J. H. McKune, for Appellant.

F. E. Baker, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.—This is an appeal from an order of partial distribution, made under § 1658 to § 1661 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is taken by the executrix.

First—The point made that the executrix cannot be heard to question the propriety of the order, or to appeal therefrom, is answered by § 1660, which declares that the executrix may resist the application.

Second—The court, after a hearing, found that prior to May 1, 1882, funds had come to the possession of the executrix sufficient to pay all the debts known to the executrix, and all the debts, charges, and expenses of administration which had accrued prior to April 4, 1882, together with the legacies of the first class, and that since that time the further sum of seven thousand dollars had come to her hands; that the legacies to the petitioners could be paid without loss to creditors or injury to the fund necessary to pay the expenses of administration accrued and to accrue. The case comes to us on appeal from the order without the evidence. We cannot see that any error was committed. The court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and the proceedings seem to be in strict conformity to the sections above referred to.

Order affirmed.

EDMUND MARKS, RESPONDENT, v. E. BLACK RYAN, APPELLANT.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—ERECTION OF BUILDINGS—LEASE.—In an action to recover the value of a dwelling-house and barn erected by a tenant on leased premises, it appeared that there were several successive leases, and that the buildings were erected during the first lease and remained upon the land when the subsequent leases were executed. No provision for their removal was contained in either of the leases, nor were they referred to except in a covenant on the part of the tenant as set forth in the opinion of the court. The complaint alleged that the buildings were the personal property of the plaintiff, and that the defendant had taken possession of them and prevented their removal. On the trial of the case the plaintiff produced a conveyance from the tenant as evidence of his title. The conveyance was executed during the term created by the last lease. Afterwards, and before the expiration of the term, the landlord conveyed the premises to Charles Crocker. The defendant was the agent of Crocker, and the facts relied on as proof of a conversion by the former occurred after the conveyance to the latter. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover, that the buildings were a part of the realty and not personal property, and that the evidence failed to establish any right on his part to remove them.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts not stated in the syllabus appear in the opinion of the court.

McAllister & Bergin, for Appellant.

Deuprey & Hutchinson, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—By the assignment and specifications of error we are confined to the consideration of the simple question, whether the buildings, for the value of which the plaintiff recovered judgment in this action, were the personal property of the plaintiff at the time of the alleged conversion of them by the defendant.

The Pacific Glass Works, a corporation, was the owner of the premises upon which said buildings were standing, and on the 18th day of December, 1867, executed a lease of said premises to one John Anderson, for the term of one year, who before the expiration of that term erected upon said premises the house and barn in controversy. At the expiration of that term said Pacific Glass Works made and said John Anderson accepted another lease of the said premises, which contains the following clause:—

“And that at the expiration of the said term the said party of the second part will quit and surrender the said premises in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof will permit, damages by the elements excepted, and the said party of the second part further covenants and agrees that during his occupancy of the said demised premises he will not put nor suffer to be put thereon, nor use the same, nor any part thereof, nor the buildings thereon, or to be erected thereon, nor suffer the same to be used by any other person or persons, for the erection or working of any still, distillery, apparatus, or appliances for the illicit or other distillery or manufacture of spirituous or other liquors."

After that two other leases of the same premises were executed between the same parties, for the same rent, and on the same terms as that last above mentioned, differing from that only in dates and length of terms. The last of said leases is dated April 15, 1875, and is for the term of two years. On the 17th day of July, 1875, Anderson executed what purports to be a conveyance of the house and barn in controversy to the plaintiff in this action. "At the time of the execution and delivery of said conveyance Annie Langstone was, and had been for between two and three years, in occupation of the land, house, and barn mentioned in the complaint, as tenant of said Anderson, paying him therefor during that time the monthly rent of twenty-five dollars; and after the execution of said conveyance the plaintiff duly notified her thereof, and thereafter the plaintiff collected rent of her therefor, twenty-five dollars per month, for one or two months, and twenty dollars per month thereafter, until about February, 1876, one John J. Haley notified her not to pay any more rent to plaintiff, but to pay the rent to Charles Crocker, to whom he, Haley, said the land in the complaint described belonged."

Annie Langstone testified that she paid rent to the plaintiff five or six months, and that she then ceased paying rent to him because Mr. Haley notified her not to pay any more rent to plaintiff. After that she "paid rent to D. W. Parkhurst, the agent." At times to the defendant; i. e., when she did not have the rent when Mr. Parkhurst called, she had to go to the office and pay it to defendant.

On the 9th of March, 1876, Chester & Hyde, who had a contract with the plaintiff to remove said building off of said lot, went upon the premises, and while making preparations to remove said buildings were handed the following:—

"SAN FRANCISCO, March 9, 1876.

"To Edmund Marks, his employees, Hyde & Chester, house-movers, their servants and agents—Notice: You are hereby notified not to move, displace, or in any manner disturb a certain house situated on the Nuevo Potrero and now occupied by Mrs. Anna Langstone. If you fail to take notice as above, and persist in removing said house, you will be prosecuted according to law.

“CHAS. CROCKER,

By E. RYAN, Agent.

After receiving this nothing more was done toward removing said buildings, and the plaintiff afterwards commenced this action.

It is contended that defendant had no right or authority to interfere with the removal of said buildings. But that in our view of the case is not a material fact. If the plaintiff owned the buildings and had a right to remove them no one had any right to interfere. If he did not have a right to remove them, the defendant did not, by reason of interfering in the manner and to the extent that he is shown to have interfered, render himself liable to pay for the buildings in an action for their conversion.

If we follow the cases of Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 60, and Jungerman v. Bovee, 19 Cal. 355, we must hold that the facts proven in this case are not sufficient to justify the finding “that said buildings were at the date last aforesaid (March 9, 1876), the personal property of the plaintiff.”

Neither of those cases is distinguishable in principle from this case. The earlier one certainly is not. According to the doctrine of those cases upon the execution of a new lease the lessee “is in the same situation as if the landlord, being seized of the land, had leased both land and fixtures to him.” In that case we do not think that any one would claim that the lessee could remove the buildings, or that they were not fixtures annexed to the land.

The correctness of the doctrine here laid down is doubted, or, more strictly speaking, denied in Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, however, in the same year, 1878, said: “When the same tenant continues in possession under a new lease containing different terms and conditions, making no reference to the old lease, reserving no rights to the lessee in fixtures annexed during the previous term, and not removed before its expiration, and containing the covenant to deliver up the premises at the end of the term in the same condition, this is not the extension of or holding over under an existing lease; it is the creation of a new tenancy. And it follows that whatever was a part of the freehold when the lessee accepted and began his occupation under the new lease must be delivered up at the end of the term, and cannot be severed on the ground that it was put in as a trade fixture under a previous lease which has expired. The failure of the lessee to exercise his right to remove during the former term, or to reserve it in his new contract, precludes him from denying the title of his landlord to the estate and the fixtures annexed, which have become part of it. The occupation under the new lease is in effect a surrender of the premises to the landlord under the old." (Watris v. National Bank, 124 Mass. 571-576.) And the New York Court of Appeals, in Loughran v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, said: "A surrender of the premises, after the expiration of the lease is such an abandonment as vests the title in the landlord. In reason and principle the acceptance of a lease of the premises, including the buildings, without any reservation of right or mention of any claim to the buildings and fixtures, and occupation under the new letting, are equivalent to a surrender of the possession to the landlord at the expiration of the first term." And in Ewell on Fixtures (p. 174), this is said to be well settled.

If that be so it logically follows that the rights of the plaintiff and his grantor, Anderson, must be viewed in the same light as they would be if the buildings had been erected before, and had been standing upon the land at the time of the execution of the first lease; or as if the second or any subsequent lease had been in fact the first. And viewed in that light, it is quite clear that the buildings standing upon the premises were a part of the realty, and would have passed with it by deed, although not specifically mentioned in it.

And it appears by the record that prior to the time of the alleged interference of the defendant with the removal of said buildings the premises had been conveyed by Anderson's lessors to other parties.

There can be no question that in the absence of any agreement to the contrary a dwelling-house and barn erected upon the land of his landlord by a tenant would, when so erected, be annexed to the realty. In Van Ness v. Packard, 2 Peters, 137,

Story, J., delivering the opinion of the court, observed that "if the house were built principally for a dwelling-house for the family, independently of carrying on the trade, then it would doubtless be deemed a fixture falling within the general rule, and immovable."

We think it quite clear that if the consequence of taking a lease of the premises after said buildings had been erected thereon, was to place the lessor and the lessee in the same positions that they would have respectively occupied in the absence of any former lease, the finding of the court that said buildings were, on the 9th day of March, 1876, the personal property of the plaintiff, is not sustained by the evidence, and the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for new trial.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, RE-SPONDENT, v. A. MEAD, APPELLANT.

EJECTMENT — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — OFFER TO PURCHASE. — The action was ejectment. The plaintiff claimed under a patent from the United States. The defendant relied on the Statute of Limitations. Evidence was given at the trial tending to show that the defendant had offered to purchase the land of the plaintiff within five years before the commencement of the action. In submitting the case to the jury the court directed them to disregard this evidence. A verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was granted. Held, that the offer to purchase, if made, was a recognition of the title of the plaintiff, and an answer to the claim of adverse possession on the part of the defendant, and that a new trial was, therefore, properly granted.

APPEAL from an order of the Superior Court of the county of Colusa granting a new trial.

Dyas & Bridgford, for Appellant.

H. M. Albery and W. F. Goad, for Respondent.

ROSS, J.—The true and only paper title to the land in dispute is, and since March 17, 1875, has been in the plaintiff, as evidenced by a United States patent of that date. The plea of the defendant was the Statute of Limitations, and he relied upon adverse possession of the property for five years immediately preceding the commencement of the action as constituting a bar to the plaintiff's action to recover it.

There was evidence given on the trial tending to show an offer on the part of defendant to purchase the property from the plaintiff within the period of five years next preceding the commencement of the action. Such an offer, if made, was a clear recognition of plaintiff's title, and a perfect answer to the defendant's claim of adverse possession. (Lovell v. Frost, 44 Cal. 474; Tyler on Ejectment, 921.) An offer to purchase the property from the party having the legal title to it does not come within the doctrine of the case of Cannon v. Stockman, 36 Cal. 535, and of kindred cases.

H. J. LAUGHLIN, APPELLANT, v. RICHARD WRIGHT ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

FINDINGS — INSUFFICIENCY. — When findings are not waived, and the court fails to find upon one of the material issues made by the pleadings, the judgment cannot be sustained.

PROMISSORY NOTE — INTEREST. — The fact that the payee of a promissory note has in his hands sufficient money belonging to the maker to pay the interest thereon, the money not being used for that purpose, does not prevent the note from bearing simple interest according to its terms.

HOMESTEAD — PROPERTY USED AS A HOTEL. — The mere filing of a declaration of homestead is not enough to make the property a homestead within the meaning of the statute. The use of the property is an important element to be considered. Where the property is primarily and chiefly used as a hotel for the accommodation of the public, it would be doing violence to the statute to regard it as a homestead, although the owner may reside there with his family for the purpose of carrying on the business.

LXIII. CAL.—8.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Santa Barbara, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was brought to foreclose a mortgage executed to secure the payment of a promissory note. The facts bearing upon the points decided appear in the opinion of the court.

J. B. Hall, Richards & Boyce, and Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for Appellant.

Williams & Williams, for Respondents.

ROSS, J.—The issue raised by the pleadings as to whether the promissory note for the security of which the mortgage sought to be foreclosed was given, had been paid, was the issue in the case, and upon that issue there is no finding. In other respects, also, the findings do not sustain the judgment. The court found the due execution of the note and mortgage on the 20th of November, 1875. The note was for $1479, payable one year after its date, with interest at the rate of one and one half per cent per month, payable monthly, and if not so paid to be compounded monthly. The court also found that the plaintiff, who was in charge of the mortgaged premises, received from the rents thereof the sum of $3000, out of which he paid to and on account of the mortgagors $580.80. This, according to the findings, left of the rents in the plaintiff's hands $2419.20. Out of this the court below allowed the plaintiff the amount of the principal sum of the note — $1479 — and gave the defendant, Mary Glasgow, who was one of the mortgagors, judgment against the plaintiff for the balance of the rents, $940.20, on a counter-claim set up by her against the plaintiff.

This action on the part of the court below could only have been based on the idea that because the plaintiff had in his hands sufficient funds derived from the rents of the mortgaged premises with which to pay the interest on the note as it became due, the note ceased to bear interest. But clearly this was not so. If it be true that the plaintiff held in his hands sufficient funds of the mortgagors with which to pay the interest, and did not do so, it may be that the interest should not be compounded, but it certainly would not prevent the note from bearing simple interest, according to its terms. To hold that it would, would be to hold that paid which was not paid.

As the case must go back for a new trial, it is proper that we should indicate our views upon another point involved in the case; and to do that it is necessary to go somewhat into the facts as they appear in the record.

The defendant Mary Glasgow was formerly the wife of the defendant Richard Wright, and was such at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage in suit. It was they who executed them. The mortgaged premises consist, according to the record before us, of two lots in the town of Guadalupe, in the county of Santa Barbara, on which is erected a building called the Wright Hotel. This property was encumbered by a mortgage in favor of Schwartz & Co. for $1573.02; by a lien in favor of Schwartz, Hartford & Co. for $1100; by a lien in favor of one Douglas for $247.50, and by a mortgage in favor of the plaintiff for $1200. To get rid of these encumbrances the Wrights put the plaintiff in charge of the property, with power to rent and collect the rents, and executed to him a power of attorney appointing him their attorney in fact "to raise money on" the property "by executing our notes for such sums as to our attorney may seem proper, and on such terms, and to become payable at such time, and to draw such interest, not exceeding one and one half per cent per month, as to our said attorney may seem proper, and by executing such mortgage to secure said notes in our names, places, and stead on said real estate, and the improvements thereon or relating thereto as to our said attorney may seem proper, the money for which said notes are drawn, and which said mortgages are to secure, is to be used exclusively to pay off and settle all debts now standing against the aforesaid property." Pursuant to this power of attorney the plaintiff borrowed of the bank of San Luis Obispo the sum of $2000, for which he executed as the attorney in fact of the Wrights a promissory note secured by a mortgage on the premises. In order to give the mortgage to the bank priority the plaintiff released his own mortgage on the property. With the money the plaintiff thus got from the San Luis Obispo Bank, increased by advances made by himself, he paid off at the request of the Wrights the mortgage of Schwartz & Co., and the liens of Schwartz, Hartford & Co., and of Douglas, aggregating $2920.52. Subsequently, to wit, on the 20th of November, 1875, the Wrights executed to the plaintiff the note and mortgage in suit for $1479, being the amount of the mortgage released by plaintiff in order to obtain the money from the bank, together with accumulated interest. When the mortgage executed to the bank became due the bank demanded the money, and in order to pay it the plaintiff borrowed, as the attorney in fact of the Wrights, of one Greening the sum of $2000, executing therefor as their attorney in fact a note secured by a mortgage on the property.

The plaintiff claims that after having paid out of the rents collected the several amounts to the Wrights, and the interest on the mortgages and the taxes and insurance on the property, there remained a balance due him, whereas, the defendant, Mary Glasgow, formerly Mary Wright, now asserts that the mortgages executed by the plaintiff under the power of attorney were void, on the ground that the premises constituted the homestead of herself and her former husband. It is true that the husband—the defendant Richard Wright—filed a declaration of homestead on the premises on the 25th of May, 1874, which was prior to the execution of the power of attorney. But the mere filing of a declaration of homestead does not of itself constitute the premises embraced within it, the homestead of the declarant. The use of the property is an important element to be considered. From the record in this case it appears that the premises in question were used by the Wrights primarily and principally as a hotel for the accommodation of the public. It was so used by them at the time of the filing of the declaration, and until August, 1874, when, because of the embarrassed condition of their business, they left the hotel and put it in other hands. The Wrights, it is true, lived in the hotel until August, 1874, but their residence there was but incidental to the business of “running the hotel.” When they became embarrassed in their business they sought a residence elsewhere, and put the hotel property in charge of others; and this was prior to the execution of the power of attorney to the plaintiff. It would be doing violence to the statute to regard property so used as a homestead, which is, and was intended to be the place where the home is. On this subject see Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 183; Rhodes v. McCormick, 4 Iowa, 374; Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 228; Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 319.

F. A. GIBBS, PETITIONER, v. WASHINGTON BARTLETT ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

MANDAMUS — WHEN THE WRIT WILL LIE. — Where it is clearly the duty of the board of election commissioners to call and hold an election, performance of such duty cannot be refused on the ground that there may not be sufficient funds in the treasury to defray the expenses.

THE petitioner prayed for a writ of mandate to compel the defendants, as members of the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, to provide for, call, and hold a special election for the purpose of submitting to the qualified electors of that city and county the question of ratifying a charter for its government, prepared and proposed by a board of fifteen freeholders, as provided by art. 11, § 8, of the Constitution.

The defendants denied that it was their duty to provide for, call, and hold such an election, and alleged specifically as a reason for their refusal that it would necessitate a large expenditure of money from the general fund of the city and county, and that there was not and would not be any money in such fund during the then fiscal year with which to defray such expenses.

John F. Swift, and Russell J. Wilson, for Petitioner.

Wm. Craig, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM. — The duties sought to be enforced on the part of the respondents are clearly enjoined by law. Performance of these duties cannot be refused on the ground set up by respondents, to wit, that there may not be sufficient funds in the treasury to defray the expenses of the election.

Let the writ issue as prayed.

JAMES FARRIS ET AL., APPELLANTS, v. H. P. MERRITT ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

PLEADING — FICTITIOUS NAME — AMENDED COMPLAINT. — A defendant sued by a fictitious name is a party to the action from its commencement, and an amendment to the complaint by inserting the true name does not change the cause of action.

ID. — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — DEMURRER. — The Statute of Limitations is not available on demurrer unless all the facts which the defendant would be required to prove under a plea of the statute appear on the face of the complaint.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Yolo.

The action was ejectment. One of the defendants was sued by a fictitious name, and the complaint was afterwards amended and the true name inserted. The defendants demurred separately to the amended complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The demurrers were sustained, and the plaintiffs declined to amend.

Freeman & Bates, and Dunlap & Van Fleet, for Appellants.

J. H. McKune, and W. B. Treadwell, for Respondents.

McKEE, J.—The court erred in sustaining the demurrers to the amended complaint filed on the 2d of April, 1882.

The demurrers admitted all the material allegations of the complaint. These showed that the plaintiffs were the owners in fee, and entitled to the possession of the demanded premises, and that the defendants were in possession of the same, and wrongfully withheld them from the plaintiffs. The cause of action was, in no respect, different from that stated in the first complaint, which had been filed on the 8th of August, 1881, except that it ran against a party named as a defendant, whose name did not appear in the first complaint, who, it was alleged, was in possession as a tenant of his co-defendant, Merritt. But this new name was alleged to be the real name of one of the defendants named in the first complaint by a fictitious name. Being a party named in that complaint by a fictitious name, he was a party to the action from its commencement. (Sacramento v. Spencer, 58 Cal. 737.) It was necessary, however, to amend the complaint by inserting his real name when ascertained, otherwise no judgment could be taken and enforced against him. (Sec. 474, Code Civ. Proc.; McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 577; Campbell v. Adams, 50 Cal. 205; Baldwin v. Morgan, 50 Cal. 585.) Such an amendment, however, does not change the original cause of action. Merritt was a proper party defendant. Section 379 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a landlord may be made a defendant to an action of ejectment. Whether the Statute of Limitations had run in favor of either of the demurring defendants at the time of filing the amended complaint was a question which could not be raised by demurrer, unless the complaint contained allegations of all the facts necessary to constitute adverse possession by the defendants, according to the provisions of the sections of the Code which they invoked by their demurrers. No such allegations were contained in the complaint; it did allege an ouster on the 20th of December, 1876, and, assuming that the cause of action then accrued, the action was brought within five years at the filing of the first complaint. But while it is a fact that more than five years had run at the time of filing the amended complaint, in which the real name of the defendant Platt was, for the first time inserted, yet the right of the plaintiffs as alleged owners in fee of the demanded premises was not forfeited by the mere lapse of time. They could only be deprived of their title or barred of their action by proof of an adverse possession by the defendants, according to the requisites and requirements of the Statute of Limitations, upon which they relied; and the burden of the allegata et probata of such a statutory right was upon them. Such is the case of Lawrence v. Ballou, 50 Cal. 258, referred to by respondents' counsel.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded with direction to overrule the demurrers, and allow the defendants to answer.

HENRY GILMAN, RESPONDENT, v. ADAM BOOTZ,
APPELLANT.

PLEADING — COMPLAINT — ANSWER — NONSUIT.—The complaint alleged that the defendant purchased of one Galvin certain real estate, and agreed to pay eight hundred dollars in gold coin therefor, but had only paid four hundred dollars. An assignment of the indebtedness to the plaintiff was also alleged. The answer admitted the purchase, but denied that the consideration was eight hundred dollars in gold coin, and averred the agreement to be that the defendant should pay four hundred dollars in money, and four hundred dollars in board and lodging. At the trial the plaintiff proved the assignment and rested. The defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to make out a case. The court denied the motion, and after hearing evidence on the part of the defendant and in rebuttal, rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff as demanded in the complaint. Held, that the answer put in issue the allegations of the complaint as to the terms of the agreement, and that the motion for a nonsuit should have been granted.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

C. J. Beerstecher, and F. J. Castelhun, for Appellant.

George W. Tyler, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—The court below must have denied the motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the answer failed to deny the allegations of the complaint, except as to the assignment to the plaintiff. In so construing the answer the court misconceived its meaning. The answer denied that the sale was for eight hundred dollars in gold coin, as alleged in the complaint, and then proceeded to aver that the contract of sale was for four hundred dollars in money, and four hundred dollars to be paid in boarding the plaintiff. This was in legal effect to deny that the sale was for eight hundred dollars, or on any other terms than as set forth in the subsequent averments of the answer above stated. When, then, the plaintiff only offered the assignment to him and rested, he had offered no evidence to establish the main allegation of his complaint, and the nonsuit should have been granted.

Nothing which subsequently occurred on the trial removed the injury done by this error, and the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded. So ordered.

THE HOGS BACK CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY, RESPONDENT, v. THE NEW BASIL CONSOLIDATED MINING COMPANY, APPELLANT.

SERVICE BY MAIL — INSUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT. — An affidavit of service by mail is insufficient when it fails to show that the person making service, and the person on whom it is made, reside, or have their offices in different places, between which there is a regular communication by mail.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Placer County.

The plaintiff and defendant are corporations. The action was brought in the Superior Court of Placer County. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and the plaintiff confessed the demurrer, and obtained leave to amend within twenty days. An amended complaint was filed accordingly, with an affidavit attached showing an attempted service by mail. A judgment by default was entered against the defendant for failing to answer the amended complaint. The additional facts appear in the opinion of the court.

W. R. Daingerfield, and Edward Lynch, for Appellant.

Hale & Craig, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM. — In this case plaintiff had judgment against defendant by default; the court below denied a motion to open the default, and defendant appealed.

The following is the affidavit of service of the amended complaint:—

“D. W. Spear of said Placer County, being duly sworn, says: That he is a citizen of the United States, and is, and was on the 20th day of October, 1881, over eighteen years of age, and not a party to this action. That on the 20th day of October, 1881, the amended complaint in the said action was filed; that forthwith, to wit, on the 20th day of October, 1881, he, affiant, deposited in the postoffice at Auburn, Placer County, California, a copy of the said amended complaint, enclosed in a sealed envelope, postage prepaid, and directed to Edward Lynch (the attorney for defendant herein), at No. 324 Pine Street, San Francisco, California, the place where said attorney resides and has his office."

The affidavit of service was insufficient, and therefore the default in the case was improperly entered. (Reed v. Allison, 61 Cal. 461; Cunningham v. Warnekey, 61 Cal. 507; Moore v. Besse, 85 Cal. 185; People v. Alameda T. R. Co. 30 Cal. 182; § 1012, Code Civ. Proc.)

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded with leave to appellant to file an answer to the complaint within twenty days after the filing of the remittitur herein in the court below.

S. S. BRADFORD ET ALS., APPELLANTS, v. CALEB DORSEY ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

MECHANIC'S LIEN — INSOLVENCY — LIMITATION.—An action to foreclose mechanics' liens must be commenced within ninety days after the liens are filed, notwithstanding the insolvency of the debtor. A debt so secured is not provable under the insolvency act, and the commencement of foreclosure proceedings are not stayed by any of its provisions.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Tuolumne County.

The facts appear in the opinion of the court.

Street & Street, for Appellants.

Dorsey & Nicol, for Respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—Action to foreclose mechanics' liens. It appears by the allegations of the complaint that the action was not commenced within ninety days after the liens were filed, and a demurrer to the complaint on that ground among others was sustained. The plaintiffs declined to amend, and a judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. This appeal is from that judgment.

The demurrer was properly sustained, unless the commencement of the action within ninety days after the liens were filed was stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190; Code Civ. Proc. § 356.) And the appellants contend that they were prohibited by statute from commencing their action within the time prescribed for its commencement, by reason of the owners of the mines, against which said liens were filed, being adjudged insolvent by a court of competent jurisdiction after said liens were filed, and before the expiration of the period of ninety days from the date of such filing.

The provisions of the insolvent act which are principally relied on by the appellants are contained in sections six and forty-five of said act. The former declares that upon the court making an order adjudging the petitioner insolvent, all proceedings against him shall be stayed. The latter, that "no creditor proving his debt or claim shall be allowed to maintain any suit at law or in equity therefor against the debtor, but shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit against him, and all proceedings already commenced, or unsatisfied judgments already obtained thereon, shall be deemed to be discharged and surrendered thereby; provided, that no valid lien existing in good faith thereunder shall be thereby affected; and further provided, that a creditor proving his debt or claim shall not be held to have waived his right of action or suit against the debtor where a discharge has been refused, or the proceedings have been determined without a discharge. And no creditor whose debt is provable under this act shall be allowed, after the commencement of proceedings in insolvency, to prosecute to final judgment any action therefor against the debtor until the question of the debtor's discharge shall have been determined."

The appellants did not prove their debts, and if they were not provable under said act, said appellants were not prohibited from commencing an action or actions for the foreclosure of their liens within ninety days after the same had been filed.

The debts or claims of the appellants were not provable until after they had released or conveyed their claims to the assignee upon the property. (§ 44.) After doing that they could have proved their whole debts. (§ 44.) But it is not alleged that they ever released or conveyed their claims upon the property to the assignee, and therefore they could not be admitted to prove their whole debts. They might have been admitted as creditors for the balance of their debts after deducting the value of the property against which they had filed their liens. But that would not constitute them creditors having provable debts. Whether they could be admitted to prove anything depended upon the value of the property against which they had filed their liens. If that was sufficient to satisfy their claims, then they could not be admitted to prove their debts or any part thereof. They clearly could not be included in the category of creditors having provable debts. (Montgomery v. Merrill, 62 Cal. 385.)

Other grounds of demurrer were specified, which it is unnecessary to consider.

Judgment affirmed.

JESSIE RIOE, APPELLANT, v. JOHN H. MCKUNE ET AL.,
RESPONDENTS.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS — PURCHASE — SURVEY — BOUNDARY.— Certain swamp and overflowed lands situated in township five north, range five east, Mount Diablo meridian, were purchased from the State prior to the completion of the government surveys. The lands were surveyed by the county surveyor under a statute of the State then in force. One of the lines described in the field notes commenced at the southwest corner of section one, and ran north eighty chains to the township line. A certificate of purchase was issued in accordance with this survey, and subsequently a patent was also issued in which reference was made both to the survey and field notes. At the time of the survey the section lines had not been run, but the township line referred to in the field notes had been run and established. When the section lines were run the southwest corner of section one was located considerably more than eighty chains south of the township line. The question was as to the northern boundary of the lands so purchased. Held, that the township line constituted the boundary.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Sacramento, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was ejectment against a landlord and his tenant, and the judgment was in their favor. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

S. Solon Holl, for Appellant.

Freeman & Bates, for Respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—The respondent, McKune, purchased of the State five hundred and sixty acres of swamp and overflowed land which had not then been surveyed by the United States, but of which he procured a survey to be made by the county surveyor of the county in which said land was situated according to the provisions of the statute then in force.

The controversy is as to the location of the northern boundary line of a tract sold by the State to the respondent. He claims that the land purchased by him is bounded on the north by the northern line of township five north of range five east. And he bases that claim upon the field notes of the survey by the county surveyor, of which the following is a copy:—

“Beginning at the southwest corner of section one; thence north eighty chains to the township line; thence east nine chains to Cosumnes River; in all, eighty chains; thence south on range line forty chains; thence south forty chains; thence west thirty-eight and fifty-one hundredths chains to Cosumnes River, in all sixty chains, to place of beginning.”

When that survey was made the location of the southwest corner of section one had not been determined by a United States survey. But the township line referred to had been run. That line and the Cosumnes River constituted the only fixed objects referred to in said field notes. After the respondent had purchased the land it was surveyed by the United States, and according to that survey the southwest corner of said section one is considerably more than eighty chains south of said township line, and the strip of land lying between a line eighty chains north of the south line of said section, and said township line was subdivided into lots numbered one, two, three, four, which the State afterwards undertook to sell and convey to the appellant. So that the only question which we have to decide is whether these lots were included in the conveyance of the State to the respondent.

The certificate of purchase issued March 16, 1864, to the respondent, describes the land sold to him as follows:—

“Survey number six hundred and fifteen, Sacramento County, the north half, the southwest quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of section one, township five north, range five east, Mount Diablo base meridian."

And in the patent issued to respondent January 24, 1872, the following description is given:—

"Said lands being situated in Sacramento County, and described as follows, to wit: Survey number six hundred and fifteen, swamp and overflowed land, Sacramento County, township number five north, range number five east, Mount Diablo meridian, section number one; the north half, the southwest quarter, and west half southeast quarter, section one, and more particularly described in the field notes of said survey as follows: The north half, the southwest quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of section one, township five north, range five east, Mount Diablo meridian, containing five hundred and sixty acres."

As before stated the respondent purchased before the United States survey was made, and before the lines of section one had been run; and at the time of such purchase there were no such legal subdivisions as half or quarter sections of said section in existence. But by reference to the field notes of the survey of the county surveyor we find a definite description of said land by metes and bounds, and the respondent purchased the land included in that survey. The county surveyor could not run the section lines, nor subdivide into half or quarter sections, but he could survey a tract of five hundred and sixty acres, which should be bounded on the north by a township line, and on the east by the Cosumnes River, and by the aid of those two fixed monuments and the courses and distances given, there is no difficulty in determining the proper boundaries of the land conveyed to the respondent. And we do not doubt that the north line of township five constitutes the northern boundary of said land.

We find no error in the rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence to the introduction of which the appellant objected.

Judgment and order affirmed.

THE PEOPLE BY REL. G. F. CULBERTSON, APPELLANT,
v. I. J. POTTER, AUDITOR, ETC., RESPONDENT.

OFFICE — SALARY — CONTEST — DE FACTO AND DE JURE OFFICERS.—An officer de facto, acting even in good faith under a claim of right to an office, is not entitled to recover the compensation provided by law to the exclusion of the officer de jure.

10.—QUALIFICATION.—Section 907 of the Political Code, which requires the officer-elect to qualify within fifteen days from the commencement of his term, has no application during the pendency of a contest.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Tuolumne County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Dorsey & Nicol, for Appellant.

E. A. Rogers, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—This was an application to compel the auditor of Tuolumne County to draw his warrant in favor of petitioner and appellant on the county treasurer for the sum of eight hundred and seventy dollars, which had been allowed by the board of supervisors of the county as compensation for services, which had been rendered by the petitioner as a de facto member of the board, pending a contest between him and a supervisor-elect, in which the latter was adjudged to have been legally elected, and to be entitled to the office. The judgment was rendered on the 5th of December, 1878, but the incumbent, instead of surrendering the office, appealed from the judgment to the Supreme Court, where it was affirmed on August 16, 1881. The term of the office commenced on the first Monday of March, 1879. From that time until the final determination of the contest by the decision of the Supreme Court the petitioner excluded the officer-elect from the office, and for the services rendered by him during the time that he intruded himself into the office to which he was not elected, he asked the county to compensate him.

The court below properly refused the prayer of the petitioner. An officer de facto, acting even in good faith under a claim of right to an office, is not entitled to recover from a county the compensation provided by law for such services to the exclusion of the officer de jure. "It will be remembered," says the Supreme Court of Iowa in McCue v. County of Wapello, 51 Iowa, 60, "that one exercising the power of an office without lawful authority is regarded as an officer de facto, not for his own protection or advantage, but for the protection of the public and those who are doing business with him. When his right to the possession of the office is to be determined he cannot be declared an officer de jure, on the ground that he has been an officer de facto. It is therefore a rule of law that when an officer seeks to recover the emoluments of an office he must show his right to the possession of the office. The rule is based upon the ground that the officer de jure who has been ousted from his place by an intruder has a property interest in the emoluments of the office, of which he cannot be deprived by one having no title thereto. This property right demands protection, and the officer de facto cannot recover emoluments to which the officer de jure is entitled." (56 Iowa, 331.) Actual incumbency merely, gives no right of recovery. (Dorsey v. Smyth, 28 Cal. 21.)

Appellant, however, claims that the rule has been changed by the Political Code of this State. In this he is mistaken. Section 963 of that Code declares that pending a contest for an office no warrant for any part of the salary of the office must be drawn or paid. From this it results that after the contest has been finally decided the officer de jure is the only person entitled to the salary. (Dorsey v. Smyth, 28 Cal. 21; Stratton v. Oulton, 28 Cal. 45.)

In answer to this result it is claimed that the appellant was the officer de jure, because the officer elect failed to qualify before the expiration of fifteen days from the commencement of his term of office, as he was required to do by section 907 of the Political Code; and the appellant, as the incumbent of the office, was compelled by section 879 of such Code to hold over and perform the duties of the office until his successor had been elected and qualified.

These sections of the Code do not admit of such a construction. Where a contest is pending for an office, section 907 has no application until the contest has been finally determined (Pearson v. Wilson, 57 Miss. 862); otherwise it would be in the power of an incumbent in office to hold over after the expiration of his term, and defeat the will of the people at an election by contesting the election of his successor. Of course such a contest may be made by an incumbent in good faith; but when decided against him he becomes an intruder in the office ab initio and throughout, and not an officer de jure. There cannot be two officers de jure to the same office. After the judgment of December 5, 1878, there was no legal compulsion upon the incumbent to hold over after the commencement of the term to which his successor was elected. On the contrary the law made it his duty to surrender the office to his successor at the commencement of the term, and if he continued thereafter to exercise its functions he did so at his peril.

Judgment affirmed.

FERDINAND REIS, APPELLANT, v. FANNIE P. LAWRENCE, RESPONDENT.

MARRIED WOMAN — DIVORCE — DEED — ACKNOWLEDGMENT — ESTOPPEL.—Where a decree of divorce obtained by a married woman is void, but she assumes her maiden name, lives apart from her husband, and continuously acts and represents herself as a femme sole, a deed of conveyance of her separate real estate, made and acknowledged by her as an unmarried woman, is valid and binding.

APPEAL from a judgment of the late District Court of the third judicial district in and for the county of Alameda, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The action was brought against Fannie P. Lawrence and Edwin A. Lawrence on a promissory note for money loaned, and to enforce a lien for the payment thereof arising from certain conveyances of real estate absolute on their face, but intended as security. A judgment was rendered on the note against Edwin A. Lawrence. The additional facts are stated in the opinion of the court, and the dissenting opinion of Mr. JUSTICE MCKEE.

Edward J. Pringle, for Appellant.

The respondent is estopped from denying the validity of her deed, because, in the desertion of her husband by herself, and of herself by her husband, the reasons which protect a married woman from the operation of an equitable estoppel cease. (Lawrence v. Spear, 17 Cal. 421; Blumenberg v. Adams, 49 Cal. 308; Patterson v. Lawrence, 90 Ill. 174; Frary v. Booth, 37 Vt. 78.)

She is estopped from denying the validity of her deed, because the reasons which protect a married woman from the operation of an equitable estoppel cease when she denies the very status which affords the protection.

Granted that a married woman may not be estopped by her acts so long as her character is recognized or known, yet she is raised above or falls below this protection when she claims to have been divorced from her husband, resumes her maiden name, and acts, signs, and conveys as a single woman. All the sense and reason of protecting her as a married woman then cease, or else she is a licensed plunderer. The question, then, is not whether a married woman can be estopped, but whether a woman shall not be estopped from calling herself married.

The defendant was married on the 13th of April, 1871; she obtained a decree of divorce from her husband on the ground that he had deserted her as early as the 1st of March, 1872; he then obtained a decree of divorce from her on the ground that she had deserted him in July, 1872.

Married for less than eleven months, and ever since deserting and deserted, divorcing and divorced! Truly she was not "much married," and was very much divorced. And yet she claims to invalidate a deed made during the period of the double desertion because she was not examined "without the hearing of" this husband.

A case completely in point is Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20; and see Ruger v. Heckel, 28 N. Y. S. C. 489.

Our Code removing the disabilities of married women, and codifying the laws of estoppel does not exempt a married woman from their operation. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subs. 2 and 3.)

We cannot, by judicial construction, add an element which the Code, having spoken on the subject, has industriously omitted.

William Irvine, for Respondent.

The doctrine of estoppel has no application. Points 2, 3, 4, and 5 of appellant's brief is devoted to a consideration of estoppel as applied to married women.

To answer them all at once it has been held time and again that a married woman is not bound by an estoppel. Her title to land can only pass by deed, and the acknowledgment is a part of the deed. (Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 494; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 13; Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 591; Selover v. Am. Rus. Co. 7 Cal. 266; Wells on Sep. Prop. of Wife, § 267; Looney v. Adamson, 48 Tex. 619; Marsh v. Mitchell, 26 N. J. Eq. 497; Ennor v. Thompson, 46 Ill. 221; Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666; Board v. Davidson, 65 Ill. 124; Robinson v. Noel, 49 Miss. 253; Stillwell v. Adams, 29 Ark. 346; Heaton v. Fryberger, 38 Iowa, 185; Leftwich v. Neal, 7 W. Va. 560; *Grove v. (Del.) 517.)

To permit an estoppel to operate against her would be a virtual repeal of the statute. (Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 24.)

The title of a femme covert to land cannot be affected by acts of commission short of those required by law to bind her, much less by acts of omission. (Lessee of Delancey v. McKeen, 1 Wash. C. C. 354.)

Estoppel does not conclude her, even when she represents herself as sole. (Behler v. Weyburn, 69 Ind. 143, and cases cited; 2 Hilliard Torts, 506; 48 Pa. St. 497; Wells' Sep. Prop. of Wife, 277; see Bigelow on Estoppel, 490, 491; Herman on Estoppel, p. 236, § 215; Hempstead v. Easton, 33 Mo. 142; *Liverpool Assn. v. Dec. p. 90, note; Klein v. Caldwell, 91 Pa. St. 140.)

Ross, J.—The defendant, Edwin A. Lawrence, is the father of the defendant Fannie P. Lawrence. The latter married one Hiram Hutchinson, in the city of San Francisco, on the 13th of April, 1871. In the year 1873 she went to the Territory of Utah for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from her husband, and on the 6th of May of that year filed in the Probate Court of Salt Lake County, Utah Territory, a petition in which she set forth that Hutchinson deserted and abandoned her on or about the first day of March, 1872, and had ever since continued his desertion and abandonment of her, and praying for a decree of divorce dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between them. On the 15th of July, 1873, the court in which the proceeding was had entered a decree purporting to dissolve the bonds of matrimony existing between Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson, and restoring to the petitioner her maiden name.

From the view we take of the case before us it will not be necessary to determine whether or not the decree of the Probate Court of Utah was validated by subsequent congressional action. Upon the entry of the decree on the 15th of July, 1873, Mrs. Hutchinson resumed her maiden name, and never afterwards lived with Hutchinson, but has ever since that date lived and acted as a single woman, and borne her maiden name.

On the 26th of May, 1874, she was the owner of a certain piece of land situated in Alameda County of this State, which was her separate property, it having been given to her by her father on the occasion of her marriage. On the day last named she signed a power of attorney, very general in its terms, appointing her father her attorney in fact to (among other things) "lease, let, demise, bargain, sell, remise, release, convey, mortgage, and hypothecate" her said land upon such terms and conditions, and under such covenants as to him should seem fit. The power as well as the certificate of acknowledgment described the constituent as "Fannie P. Lawrence, formerly Fannie P. Hutchinson," and the power was so signed. The certificate, however, did not conform to the requirements of our statute prescribing the form for certificates of acknowledgment of married women.

When the power of attorney, so signed and acknowledged, was received by Edwin A. Lawrence, the latter was the owner of various certificates of purchase issued by the State of California for State lands, on which Gustave Reis held a mortgage executed to him by Lawrence. A part of the purchase-money of the lands had been paid, but a part of it remained unpaid. In due course of time an instalment became due. Lawrence needed the money with which to make the payment. He negotiated with Mr. E. B. Mastick for the loan of the required amount on a mortgage he proposed to give on his daughter's land under and by virtue of the power of attorney. The power, the daughter testified on the trial of this case, she signed unwillingly and only after urgent solicitation on the part of her father; and in answer to the question "Why did your father urge you to execute the power of attorney to which you have referred?" she answered: "Because he said he had payments to make on certain lands of his, and that in case of necessity he wished to raise enough money on my property to meet that demand; but that he hardly thought he would be obliged to do so; but he wished to have the paper on hand, so in case of need he could make use of it." In endeavoring to obtain money on the strength of his daughter's land, Edwin A. Lawrence was, therefore, but carrying out the purpose had in view by both when the daughter gave him the power.

His negotiations with Mr. Mastick for a loan of the required money failed of accomplishment on the last day allowed for the payment of the instalment due upon the certificates of purchase. In this extremity he applied to Gustave Reis for the loan of the amount necessary to make the payment, viz., $4,550. Gustave furnished a part of the money, but got the greater part of it from Ferdinand Reis, who is the plaintiff in this action. The loan was accordingly made, and as security for its payment Edwin A. Lawrence executed to the plaintiff Reis a deed for the Alameda land as attorney in fact for Fannie P. Lawrence. At the time of this transaction, which took place on the 27th of June, 1874, Edwin A. Lawrence represented to Reis that his daughter had obtained a divorce from her husband in Salt Lake, and had been restored to her maiden name. Subsequently, to wit, on the 18th of September, 1874, upon application made on behalf of the plaintiff, Fannie P. Lawrence executed to plaintiff a deed for the same land described in the deed already executed to him by her father as her attorney in fact, which deed expressed a consideration of $4,500, and contained the clause: "This deed is given in confirmation of the deed given by me to said Reis on June 27, 1874, by my attorney in fact, hereby ratifying and confirming the same." The certificate of acknowledgment to this confirmatory deed described the grantor as "Fannie P. Lawrence (femme sole)," and complied with the requirements of the statute prescribing the form of such certificates for others than married women, but did not conform to those in respect to the latter.

The case further shows that in the month of July, 1877, Hutchinson commenced an action in the District Court of Marin County of this State against the defendant Fannie for the purpose of obtaining a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony alleged to have existed between them since the 18th of April, 1871, on the ground that the defendant therein, on or about the 1st of July, 1872, deserted the plaintiff in that action, and from that time forth lived apart from him, and denied him all marital rights. After trial the court in which the action was brought decreed the plaintiff a divorce on the ground stated in his complaint.

We assume that the Utah decree was invalid. Nevertheless the fact remains that upon the rendition of that decree the defendant, Fannie P. Lawrence, resumed her maiden name, and thence hitherto continued to act and represent herself as a femme sole. As such she signed and acknowledged the power of attorney to her father for the purpose of enabling him to borrow money on the strength of her land. On the security of that land, and on those representations, the father did borrow money, and to secure its repayment executed to the lender, pursuant to the power, a deed for the premises. Subsequently, and in consideration of that loan, the daughter, still acting and representing herself as a femme sole, executed as such to the lender another deed for the premises, in which she recited that it was given in confirmation of the deed previously executed by her attorney in fact. At this day she seeks to avoid the effect of these conveyances to the injury of the party who parted with his money on the strength of her actions and representations by saying that she was all along a married woman, and that the certificates of acknowledgment to the instruments executed by her were not in accordance with the form prescribed by statute for married women in that they did not recite that she was examined "without the hearing of her husband," a husband who, according to her petition for divorce filed in Utah, had deserted and abandoned her on the 1st day of March, 1872, and whom, according to the record put in evidence from the District Court of Marin County, she had deserted and abandoned in July of the same year, and between whom no marital relations other than the dry, legal relation in fact existed. Of course, under such circumstances the reason for the rule that requires, in cases of married women, the certificate of acknowledgment to recite an examination without the hearing of the husband, does not exist. At least as early as July, 1872, the defendant Fannie lived apart from, and independent of her husband. Later on, in 1873, she resumed her maiden name, and thence hitherto acted and represented herself as a single woman. In that character she executed the instruments in question, and in that character, in our opinion, a court of equity ought to regard her in the construction of them. (As giving support to these views, see Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20; Rosenthal v. Mayhugh, 33 Ohio St. 155; Patterson v. Lawrence, 90 Ill. 174.)

We find it unnecessary to determine whether the rules based on the common law relation of husband and wife are to be applied to their full extent in this State, where the wife is now by statute empowered to dispose of her separate estate without the consent or concurrence of her husband.

It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to the lien prayed for.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MORRISON, O. J., SHARPSTEIN, J., and MYRIOK, J., concurred.

McKEE, J.—I dissent. The case arises out of an equitable action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants to obtain a decree declaring an alleged conveyance of real estate, purporting to have been executed June 27, 1874, by the defendant, Fannie P. Lawrence, by her attorney in fact, Edwin A. Lawrence, to be a mortgage, given to secure payment of the following promissory note:—

"4,550.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27, 1874.

"Sixty days from date, for value received, we jointly and severally promise to pay to the order of Ferdinand Reis forty-five hundred and fifty dollars in U. S. gold coin, with interest at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month till paid.

[Signed.]

FANNIE P. LAWRENCE,

"Formerly Fannie L. Hutchinson, by her attorney in fact, Edwin A. Lawrence.

"E. A. LAWRENCE."

Neither the individual indebtedness of the defendant Fannie, nor the joint indebtedness of her and the defendant Edwin, constituted any part of the consideration of the note. It was given solely for the individual indebtedness of the defendant Edwin A. Lawrence. But both the note and deed were made and delivered by the latter under a pretended power of attorney, whereby the former attempted to constitute and appoint her father, the said Edwin, her attorney in fact, with authority to sell, convey, or mortgage her real estate, on such terms and conditions as to him might seem fit. Ratification of the conveyance made by him under the power was also attempted by her, by a formal deed dated September 18, 1874, which was signed "Fannie P. Lawrence," and subsequently by another deed dated in October, 1874, and signed by the same name. But at the times and dates of those transactions the defendant Fannie was a married woman, the lawful wife of one Hiram Hutchinson; and the real property described in the several instruments in writing was her separate property; and neither the power of attorney nor any of the pretended deeds were executed or acknowledged by her in any manner or form, to make it her act and deed, or to give any power or authority over or concerning her separate real property. It was supposed, however, that her status as the wife of Hiram Hutchinson had been changed by a decree of divorce.

The record shows that she was married to Hutchinson in the city of San Francisco, in the year 1871. There the parties were domiciled, and there, the wife at least, continued to be domiciled until some time in the year 1873, when she went to Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah, for the sole purpose of obtaining a fictitious domicile on which to commence proceedings against her husband for a divorce. The husband appears to have been, at that time, domiciled in the city of New York. After remaining long enough in Salt Lake City to obtain a fictitious domicile under the laws of the Territory, the wife commenced proceedings for divorce by filing a complaint against her husband in the Probate Court of Salt Lake City, and causing a summons to be issued thereon; and after publication of the summons was had for a sufficient length of time under the statute of the Territory, a decree of divorce was entered in the case in her favor, and against her husband, who neither appeared in the proceedings, nor authorized an appearance for him by attorney or otherwise; and immediately after obtaining that decree the plaintiff therein returned to California.

A decree of divorce rendered in a State or Territory other than that in which the marriage of the parties was celebrated is void beyond the limit of the State or Territory where it was rendered, unless one of the parties to the proceedings for divorce had an actual bona fide domicile in the State or Territory. If neither of the parties were actually and in good faith domiciled in the State or Territory in which the decree was rendered, the decree is void in all other States or Territories. (Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 36; Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30; Cheerer v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108; Cox v. Cox, 19 Ohio St. 502; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247; Litowich v. Litowich, 19 Kan. 451.)

But the decree in this case was absolutely void, because, although the legislature of Utah had by statute authorized any Probate Court of the Territory to grant a divorce to any applicant residing in the county in which an action for divorce might be brought, yet the Supreme Court of the Territory in Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 122, decided that the statute, conferring upon the Probate Courts jurisdiction in divorce cases, was opposed to the organic law of the Territory and void; therefore the Utah decree of divorce was rendered by a court that had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, nor of the persons to the action of Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, and the decree rendered therein was wholly void.

It is, however, claimed that the Congress of the United States by an act passed June 28, 1874, "validated and confirmed all judgments and decrees rendered before that date by the Probate Courts of the Territory of Utah, which had been executed, and from which no appeals had been taken"; and that the decree under consideration was ratified and confirmed by that act.

Decrees of divorce are not enumerated in the statute. But it is said that they are comprehended by the phrase "all executed judgments and decrees from which no appeal has been taken." But the decree under consideration was not an existing or executed decree at the time of the passage of the act, because it had been adjudged by the Supreme Court of the Territory in which it was rendered absolutely void. Being no judgment, how could the legislature declare it to be a judgment? That which courts have adjudged void cannot be declared valid by legislation. A legislature can no more impart a binding efficacy to judicial proceedings which are void than it can take from a citizen his property and give it to another. Indeed, as has been said, to do the one thing is to accomplish the other, and therefore I understand it to be a principle of constitutional law, recognized by all courts, that the legislature can never by retrospective proceedings cure a defect of jurisdiction in the proceedings of courts. (Nelson v. Rountree, 23 Wis. 367; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 109; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388.) The reason is manifest. Such proceedings being utterly void, they would acquire vitality as judicial acts, if at all, by the legislative act exclusively, and the curative act must therefore be in its nature a judgment. (McDaniel v. Correll et al. 19 Ill. 226; Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen. 361; State v. Doherty, 60 Me. 504.)

But Congress had no power to render judgment in an action between parties that have never been before it. By the Constitution of the United States the judicial powers of the United States are vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. And the powers of the courts thus ordained and established extend to all possible cases in law and equity, or admiralty and maritime jurisdiction between citizens of domestic States and citizens and subjects of foreign states. With these courts, in the exercise of the judicial powers vested in them by law, Congress cannot interfere. It cannot dispense with them in States or Territories, nor assume any of their functions, not even in the summons and selection of jurors, as the Supreme Court of the United States held in Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. 434.

The Utah decree of divorce was, therefore, a nullity. (Davis v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 818; The State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29; Litowich v. Litowich, 19 Kan. 451.) Being null, the status of the defendant Fannie was, at the times of the transactions under consideration, that of a married woman. As such, however, she was enabled by the laws of the State to alienate or encumber her real property, by herself or her legally authorized agent, in the mode prescribed by the law, but not otherwise. The law which removed her disabilities made her a femme sole, with capacity to act within the limits of the powers conferred upon her; but outside those limits she is still under disability to act. She has no power to change or transfer her real estate in any other mode than that prescribed by the law which conferred upon her power to deal with it at all. Any attempt by her to dispose of it otherwise than as the law directs, the law itself pronounces invalid and void. (§ 1487, Civ. Code; Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 495; Camden v. Vail, 23 Cal. 633; MacLay v. Love, 25 Cal. 368; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393; Smith v. Greer, 31 Cal. 477.) The instruments in writing by which it is sought in this case to charge the separate real property of the wife were, therefore, void, because not executed in the mode prescribed by the law; there was neither in fact nor in law a transfer of her estate; that being so, can she be divested of her title by the courts? Can void transfers of her real estate be made valid? It is claimed that that may be done by the equitable doctrine of estoppel.

Equity, however, does not overturn, but follows the law. It never attempts to breathe life into a legal nonentity. Hence courts of equity have never attempted to divest a married woman of the title to her land by an estoppel in pais. "That," says the Supreme Court of Indiana in Behler v. Weyburn, 59 Ind. 143, "would be overturning the statute which prohibits all modes of encumbering or conveying her land save the one provided for." The same question was involved in the case of Lowell v. Daniels, 2 Gray, 161, in which the court said: "This raises the material question at issue between the parties, whether a married woman and her heirs may be barred of her estate by an estoppel in pais? She can make no valid contract in relation to her estate. Her separate deed of it is absolutely void. If she were to covenant that she was sole, was seized in her own right, and had full power to convey, such covenants would avail the grantee nothing. She could not be estopped by them. The law has rendered her incapable of such a contract, and she finds in her incapacity her weakness. . . . And we think a married woman cannot do indirectly what she cannot do directly; cannot do by acts in pais what she cannot do by deed. She cannot by her own act enlarge her legal capacity to convey an estate.

"This doctrine of estoppel in pais would seem to be stated broadly enough when it is said that such estoppel is as effectual as the deed of the party. To say that one may, by acts in the country, by admission, by concealment, or by silence, in effect do what could not be done by deed would be practically to dispense with all the limitations the law has imposed upon the capacity of married women to alienate their estates. No case at law has been cited, nor have we found one in which it has been held that the estate of a party has been barred by an estoppel in pais, who was incapable of conveying by deed.

To the same effect will be found the cases of Todd v. The Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railroad Company, 19 Ohio St. 514; Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 24; Petit v. Fretz, 9 Casey, 118; Glidden v. Strupler, 52 Pa. St. 400; Rumfelt v. Clemens, 48 Pa. St. 456.) Says Mr. Justice Agnew in the case last cited: "There is no such doctrine in equity as that an estoppel in pais shall work a transfer of the legal title to lands belonging to a married woman. If there were it would be a flat denial of a legislative policy, founded on the most important reasons, entering into the very constitution of society, and social order must lie at the feet of chancery."

I do not deny that a married woman may be estopped in cases of pure torts (Oglesby v. Pasco, 79 Ill. 164), or in cases of fraud where innocent parties, induced by the intentional and fraudulent conduct of the wife, may have acquired rights of property upon the faith of ownership in the husband. (Drake v. Glover, 30 Ala. 382; Connolly v. Branstlor, 3 Bush, 702.) Fraud of course vitiates every contract. "But even this doctrine when applied to married women is," said Mr. Justice Baldwin, in Morrison v. Wilson, supra, "limited under statutes like ours to this: that the contract of a married woman effected by fraud cannot be enforced; but not that a fraudulent representation will divest a femme's title in the face of a statute declaring a different and exclusive mode of divestiture," and a fortiori she will not be divested of the title where she has not been guilty of fraudulent representation. And that is this case; there was no fraudulent representation by the femme covert, for the person with whom her father negotiated for a loan of the money involved in the case testified at the trial that the father produced the power of attorney, note, and conveyance upon which he wanted to borrow the amount of the note, and represented that his daughter had been divorced from her husband in Salt Lake City, and had resumed her maiden name, and that the power of attorney was in all respects regular. Yet the money was not loaned upon these representations. The plaintiff took the advice of his counsel upon the validity and sufficiency of the securities, and acting upon that advice lent his money to the father upon the faith of the securities. In the transaction there was no fraud. All the parties to it, including the attorneys of the plaintiff, believed that the decree of divorce was valid. The woman believed it, and resumed her maiden name; the plaintiff believed it, and lent his money. There was no attempt at deception or fraud. Each one had the same means and opportunity for knowledge and judgment as to the subject of the divorce; and the opinion which was entertained in relation to it was simply a mistake of law. But an estoppel in pais does not arise out of a mistake. It can arise only out of such proof as would be sufficient to maintain an action for deceit or false representation. (Real Estate Co. v. Balch, 45 N. Y. 529.)

"In order to constitute an equitable estoppel with respect to the title of property it must appear that the party to be estopped has made admissions or declarations, or done acts, with the intention of deceiving the other party with regard to the title, or with such carelessness, or culpable negligence, as to amount to a constructive fraud; and that at the time of making the admissions or declarations, or doing the act, he was apprised of the true state of his own title, and that the other party was not only destitute of all knowledge of the true state of the title, but also of all convenient or ready means of acquiring such knowledge." (Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23.)

None of these elements are to be found in this case. The simple facts are that the defendant Fannie obtained a decree of divorce from her husband, which she believed, in common with her father and the plaintiff and his attorneys, was valid; that upon that belief she resumed her maiden name and signed it, in good faith, to all the papers in the transactions in question. It is not found, nor is it claimed, that she represented herself as an unmarried woman, or signed her maiden name to the papers knowingly and intentionally, or fraudulently. Her representation and signatures were simply mistakes by her and by all concerned, the results of which she could not ratify by instruments in writing which were also void. (§§ 2310, 2312, 2314, Civ. Code.) But if her acts had been wrong in the abstract, or if she had acted in bad faith, the wrong could not make her contract good by way of estoppel. "We do not see," says the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Keen v. Coleman, 39 Pa. St. 302, "how there can be an estoppel involved in the very acts to which the incapacity relates that can take away the incapacity. If a legal incapacity can be removed by a fraudulent representation of capacity, then the legal incapacity would have only a moral force, which is absurd." (See also Wilson S. M. Co. v. Fuller, 60 How. Pr. 480; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30; Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108; Cox v. Cox, 19 Ohio St. 502; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156; Hood v. The State, 56 Ind. 263; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247; Litowich v. Litowich, 19 Kan. 451; Van Fossen v. The State, 37 Ohio St. 320; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 36.)

The cases of Patterson v. Lawrence, 90 Ill. 174, and Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20, referred to in the prevailing opinion have no application, in my judgment, to the case in hand. The first was an action founded upon an actual fraud, and the second upon a special contract by the trustees of a married woman, acting under a deed of trust. Neither of them involved the question of the disability or capacity of a married woman to contract in the face of a statute which established the mode of contracting.

THORNTON, J.—I dissent. I see no element of estoppel in this case. The plaintiff had knowledge of all the facts, or ready and accessible means of knowledge, which is always held to be equivalent to knowledge. The plaintiff was not deceived, and without some element of fraud or deceit there can be no estoppel. (Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, where the Supreme Court of this State has spoken in unmistakable terms.) The decree of divorce rendered by the Probate Court of Utah is void. That court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. (Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 122; Ferris v. Higley, 20 Wall. 375.) This decree was not confirmed by the act of Congress of June 28, 1878. I do not think it came within the terms of the act, if it did Congress had no power to confirm a void decree. See Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law, 325.) Petition for a rehearing denied.

[In Bank. — February 13, 1883.]

WILLIAM HAYES, RESPONDENT, v. JOHN H. CAMPBELL, APPELLANT.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — COMMISSION MERCHANTS — CARRIER — LIEN — PAYMENT — TENDER — REPLEVIN. — A carrier of goods received from a firm of commission merchants in San Francisco certain wheat belonging to the plaintiff for transportation to Europe. The wheat was received under a contract with the firm in their own name, but in the course of a business which the carrier knew or had reason to believe was conducted by them merely as agents. The plaintiff had consigned the wheat to the firm with special instructions as to its transportation, and in delivering the same to the carrier under the contract referred to, they exceeded their authority. The firm failed, and on inquiry subsequently made in regard to the wheat, the plaintiff ascertained the terms and conditions of the contract with the carrier, and thereupon demanded the wheat, which the carrier refused to deliver, repudiating the plaintiff as the owner, and claiming a lien upon the wheat for charges arising under the contract. As to a large portion of these charges, the firm had no authority to bind the plaintiff, and no payment or tender was made by him. In an action of replevin to recover the wheat, held, that the carrier was put upon inquiry as to the agency and the authority of the firm, that the plaintiff was not bound by the contract, and that no payment or tender was required before commencing the action.

FINDING — SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE. — The action was tried by the court without a jury, and written findings were filed. On motion for a new trial it was objected that some of the findings were not justified by the evidence. Held, that the evidence was sufficient, and that the objection could not be sustained.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Sacramento, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Milton Andros, and Charles Page, for Appellant.

The defendant had no knowledge of the actual ownership of the wheat, and as the agents of the plaintiff were general shipping and commission merchants, he was bound by the contract, although his instructions may not have been followed. (Civ. Code, § 2369; Green v. Campbell, 52 Cal. 586; Hayes v. Campbell, 55 Cal. 421; Waring v. Mason, 18 Wend. 434; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Met. 193; Munn v. Commission Co. 15 Johns. 44; Bank v. Astor, 11 Wend. 87; Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. 76.)

The defendant had a lien on the wheat for freight, dead freight, and demurrage. The action was brought without any payment or tender by the plaintiff on account of the lien, and there was no waiver of a tender on the part of the defendant.

The mere assertion, unaccompanied by any other act, of a lien greater in amount than the lienor is entitled to, will not obviate the necessity of a tender, for it may be that the right amount would be accepted.

A legal tender is only excused in cases in which it clearly appears that it would be useless to make a tender, or that making tender would be a nugatory act. (Farnsworth v. Howard, 1 Cold. 215; Stone v. Sprague, 20 Barb. 509; Bellinger v. Kitts, 6 Barb. 281; Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. 137, 146; Hazard v. Loring, 10 Cush. 267; Hoyt v. Sprague, 61 Barb. 506.)

The party claiming a waiver must be ready and willing to produce and pay the money, and must be prevented by the creditor declaring he will not receive it. In such case actual production is dispensed with. (Farnsworth v. Howard, ubi sup.; Lacy v. Wilson, 24 Mich. 479; Dorsey v. Barbee, Litt. Sel. Cas. 204; Terrell v. Walker, 65 N. C. 91; 2 Greenl. on Ev. § 603; 2 Pars. on Cont. 643.)

J. H. McKune, and J. C. Ball, for Respondent.

Where a party having knowledge of such facts as would lead an honest man using ordinary caution to make further inquiries, does not make, but on the contrary, studiously avoids making such inquiries, he must be taken to have notice of those facts which, if he had used ordinary diligence, he would readily have ascertained. (Wade on the Law of Notice, §§ 10, 11; Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Younge & C. 305; Hankinson v. Barbour, 29 Ill. 80; Lewis v. Bradford, 10 Watts, 67; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Fink v. Potter, 39 N. Y. 70; Civ. Code, § 19; Bank v. Delano, 4 N. Y. 326.)

Where one has the property of another, with the right to retain it for the satisfaction of a lien, if he demands more than he is entitled to he thereby waives his lien, and without tender of the money due, the owner may recover possession of the property by proper action. (Kerford v. Mondel, 28 Law J. Ex. 303; The Norway, Browning & Lushington's Reports, pp. 377, 404; Allen v. Smith, 12 Conn. B. N. S. 638; 3d Bouvier's Inst. § 3525; Kennet v. Robinson, 2 Marsh. J. J. 84.)

MYRICK, J.—This case was in this court on a former appeal when a new trial was ordered. The decision is reported in 55 Cal. p. 421. A new trial was had, and judgment went for plaintiff. From that judgment, and from the order denying motion for new trial, defendant has appealed. The facts as now presented are in some respects different from those presented on the former appeal.

The transcript shows that the findings as to the following facts were agreed to by the parties:—

Plaintiff was the owner of the wheat in controversy. He shipped the wheat October 18, 1874, by rail from Woodland, Yolo County, consigned generally to E. E. Morgans' Sons, care of Starr Bros. & Campbell, at Vallejo, to be by Morgans' Sons shipped to Europe, and there sold by Morgans' Sons for the account of plaintiff. The charges and cost of transportation to Europe were to be at the rate of £3, 17s, 6d per ton, to be paid by plaintiff. There were no marks on the wheat to indicate either the ownership or destination. E. E. Morgans' Sons were general shipping and commission merchants doing business at the city and county of San Francisco. In 1872-73 they had been largely engaged in purchasing and selling wheat in California, and forwarding the same to Europe for sale. In 1873 and 1874 they were largely engaged in chartering vessels to carry wheat from ports in California to Europe to be sold by them, but were not buying, selling, or shipping their own wheat. In March, 1874, Morgans' Sons made and entered into a charter party with the owner of the British ship Charles Murdoch, by which they chartered the carrying capacity of the vessel at the rate of £4, 7s, 6d per ton. The vessel was to employ stevedores, and the cargo was to be stowed under the captain's supervision and direction. The defendant Campbell was master and part owner of the ship. Pursuant to the charter party the ship proceeded to Vallejo to receive cargo, and at that place, October 18, 1874, the wheat of plaintiff was placed on board the vessel by E. E. Morgans' Sons in their own name, and received by the master under the charter party. On the day following, October 19th, Morgans' Sons became insolvent, and broke the terms of the charter party by refusing to proceed with the loading of the ship; and the ship was not loaded by them other than by placing on board the wheat of plaintiff and others, amounting in all to about two hundred and fifty tons, being less than half a cargo. Prior to the commencement of this action plaintiff demanded from defendant Campbell the possession of his wheat, which was refused, Campbell claiming a lien under his agreement with Morgans' Sons. The defendant incurred no expense in relation to this wheat, and the charter party had no relation to it. The taking on board and discharging was done by stevedores paid by plaintiff, and Morgans' Sons never pretended or represented to defendant or any one that this wheat belonged to them.

In addition to the findings agreed to the court found, among other facts,—

That in conducting their business Morgans' Sons, as charterers, had the Charles Murdoch alongside the wharf at Vallejo as a general ship, and invited and solicited cargo from separate owners of wheat, and that plaintiff sent forward his wheat without any combination or agreement with other shippers; that immediately after the failure of E. E. Morgans' Sons the plaintiff sent his agent, L. D. Stevens, to Vallejo, to ascertain the status of his wheat, and to take measures for its recovery. And the said Stevens, as such agent, had several interviews with the defendant between the 20th and 29th of October, 1874, and therein demanded of the defendant that he surrender to plaintiff the possession of said wheat, and offered to allow the defendant to carry forward said wheat for him to Europe on the same terms and for the same freight money as was stipulated in said charter party; that is to say, the plaintiff offered to pay the defendant £4, 7s, 6d, per ton to carry his said wheat to Europe for him, and the defendant then and there refused to carry forward his wheat for plaintiff at all, and claimed and insisted that the wheat was the property of said E. E. Morgans' Sons; that he did not know or recognize the plaintiff as owner, or interested in said wheat; that the said E. E. Morgans' Sons had broken their said contract with him, and failed to furnish cargo for his said ship as stipulated in said charter party; that there were large sums due him as owner of said ship from E. E. Morgans' Sons for damages in the nature of demurrage, as well as for the freight that might become due for the actual carriage of a cargo to Europe, and the said defendant then and there demanded of the plaintiff that he should, as a condition precedent to the delivery of said wheat to plaintiff, pay,—

1. All damages in the nature of dead freight sustained by the owners of said ship by the failure of said E. E. Morgans' Sons to furnish full cargo for said ship as provided in said charter party.

2. All damages in the nature of demurrage sustained by said owners of said ship by the detention of said ship beyond the lay days provided for in said charter.

3. The freight of all the wheat actually laden on board said ship, as well the wheat of other shippers as the wheat of this plaintiff, and the defendant declined and wholly refused to deliver the wheat of the plaintiff to him on any other terms, and refused to carry the said wheat forward to Europe for him at the rate stipulated in said charter party, and refused to treat plaintiff as the owner of said wheat on any terms.

The court also found that defendant during all the times his ship was awaiting cargo at San Francisco was advised, had notice of, and knew the following facts:—

1. That E. E. Morgans' Sons were, in the matter of chartering and freighting ships during the shipping season of 1874, engaged in chartering ships and sending forward wheat and flour as agents of the grangers (farmers) of California, and that they were not engaged in buying, selling, or shipping such or any goods on their own account.

2. That E. E. Morgans' Sons had no warehouse for storage of wheat in said State.

3. That they had no place of business other than their broker's office in San Francisco.

4. That they depended for cargo on wheat sent forward from time to time from the said farmers as principals for shipment on board their chartered vessels.

3. That E. E. Morgans' Sons did not own or claim to deal with said or any wheat as their own, and such facts were sufficient to put a reasonable man on inquiry as to the actual ownership of said wheat, and said defendant did not deal with said Morgans' Sons as the ostensible owners of said wheat with the belief that said E. E. Morgans' Sons were such owners, but the facts they did know were sufficient to put defendant on inquiry as to the true ownership of said wheat, and by inquiry of said E. E. Morgans' Sons he could have readily ascertained the names of the true owners of said wheat.

Defendant on his motion for new trial objected that these findings were not sustained by the evidence; he also alleged error in the ordering of judgment, averring that defendant had a lien on the wheat which was not extinguished by payment or tender before demand for possession.

We have examined the testimony, and think there is sufficient to sustain the findings objected to. In some respects the testimony is not positive, nor as clear as might be expected where persons are carrying on business as important as the business referred to; yet we find sufficient testimony to justify the findings. Let us take the agreed facts that in 1873 and 1874 Morgans' Sons were engaged in chartering vessels to carry wheat from California to Europe, but were not buying, selling, or shipping their own wheat; that the charter party had no relation to this wheat; that by the terms of the charter party the owners of the vessel were to pay the stevedores for loading, but that in fact plaintiff paid them; that Morgans' Sons never pretended or represented to any one that this wheat belonged to them; together with the testimony of Wolcott, a partner in the firm of E. E. Morgans' Sons, who told the defendant when he applied for cargo that he must wait his turn; of Chapman, agent for the defendant: "I understood that Morgans' Sons in 1874 were shippers of wheat, and agents for the grangers; the grangers were the farmers and wheat-growers of the country generally"; and it seems to us there is some evidence, though perhaps slight, from which the court was justified in finding that the defendant had sufficient notice to put him on inquiry. It seems to us that the main object of the master of the vessel was to obtain a cargo at the high rate named in the charter party, and then force payment, irrespective of who might be the owner, and of their interests or rights. The object of Morgans' Sons in agreeing to pay to the ship owner ten shillings per ton more than he was to receive from the grower is not apparent; however, with that we have nothing to do in this controversy.

If, as found, Morgans' Sons were carrying on a commission business, and in that business chartered the ship, and in receiving plaintiff's wheat and contracting for its carriage acted as his agents, defendant was put upon inquiry as to the extent of their powers. Such inquiry, if pursued, would have led to the information that their powers extended to contracting for carriage at the rate of £3, 17s, 6d per ton, and that they had no power to make a contract which would subject the wheat to charge for dead freight or demurrage. Defendant refused to recognize any right or claim of plaintiff to the wheat. He also refused to deliver it until his requirements as to dead freight and demurrage were complied with. By such refusal he waived the prepayment or tender by the plaintiff of the amount of freight.

It may be added, it does not appear that at the time of plaintiff's demand any dead freight or demurrage had accrued, even if there had been authority to subject the wheat thereto; but defendant claimed the right to hold it for any possible future accruing loss.

THE PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, APPELLANT, v. L. T. STROUP, RESPONDENT.

EJECTMENT — AGREEMENT TO CONVEY — FINDING — DEED.— The plaintiff claimed title to the land in controversy under a conveyance from one Bugbey, which, though absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage, and had been foreclosed against Bugbey. This conveyance was recorded at the time of its execution, but prior thereto Bugbey had made an agreement in writing with the defendant to convey the land to him. The agreement was not recorded, but the defendant had possession of the land when the agreement was made, and remained in possession continuously thereafter. Subsequent to the conveyance to the plaintiff, Bugbey conveyed the land to the defendant in pursuance of the agreement. The court below found that the plaintiff never was the owner, or entitled to the possession of any part of the land. Held, that the fact of notice to the plaintiff of the agreement was included in this finding, and that the deed made by Bugbey to the defendant related back to the agreement, and vested the title in the defendant as against the plaintiff.

APPEAL from a judgment of the late District Court of the county of El Dorado, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of MR. JUSTICE McKEE.

B. C. Clark, and J. N. Young, for Appellant.

A. P. Catlin, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.— This was an action in ejectment. The demanded premises are a portion of the southwest quarter of section sixteen, township ten, range eight east, of Mount Diablo meridian, for which and other parcels of real property the State of California, on the 22d of April, 1867, issued a patent to B. N. Bugbey. For several years before this patent was issued Bugbey and the defendant Stroup, adversely to each other, occupied separate portions of the quarter section, a picket fence constituting the division line between their claims. And, being in possession, on the 24th of July, 1866, they made and entered into the following agreement in writing:—

“Whereas the said B. N. Bugbey seeks to obtain a title from the State of California to that tract of land described as follows, to wit: The southwest quarter of section sixteen, township ten, range eight east, Mount Diablo meridan; now then, the said B. N. Bugbey undertakes and agrees, as soon as he shall acquire a title to said land from the State, to make and execute to said Stroup a good and sufficient deed to all of that portion of said quarter section lying on the north side of a certain picket fence, now used and known as a line fence between the said Bugbey and Stroup on the northerly side of an exact range of said fence from the west line or west boundary of said quarter section to the east line or boundary of said quarter section, at the same price per acre and on the same terms that said Bugbey shall have paid to the State of California for said lands; and the said L. T. Stroup covenants and agrees that he will, in like manner, convey to said Bugbey all of that portion of the northwest quarter of said section sixteen being south or on the southerly side of said fence and range above described, on the same terms as provided above touching the conveyance of the said Bugbey; and it is hereby further agreed that the refusal of one to comply with this agreement that does [not] release the other; but each may be proceeded against, and compelled by law to make good this contract.”

The agreement was not recorded, and on the 8th of June, 1870, Bugbey conveyed the land to the plaintiff by a deed, absolute on its face, which was intended as a mortgage to secure payment of a sum of money which Bugbey owed to the plaintiff. The deed was recorded on the day of its execution, and subsequently, the plaintiff by foreclosure proceedings, to which the defendant was not made a party, obtained a judgment and order of sale against Bugbey, under which the land was sold as a portion of the mortgaged premises to the plaintiff, to whom, on November 14, 1877, the sheriff conveyed it by deed, which purported to convey all the interest which Bugbey had in the land at the date of the judgment and decree of foreclosure. But on the 30th of May, 1874, Bugbey, in fulfillment of his agreement of 1866, had conveyed the land to the defendant. The deed was recorded on the day of its execution. From the date of the agreement of which the deed was the fulfillment the defendant has continuously claimed the land as his own, adversely to Bugbey and all others. He has, also, during all the years of his claim of title before and after the date of the agreement with Bugbey occupied the land openly and notoriously by cultivation and improvements, having upon it a residence, barn, and stable, and having all of it, except what is covered by his improvements, planted in vines. He has thus been all the time in the adverse possession of the land.

The possession of the defendant being, in its inception, adverse to Bugbey, and continued until the date of the agreement of 1866, the defendant lost none of his rights by the agreement. Bugbey, according to the terms of the agreement, undertook to act for the defendant either as agent or trustee in obtaining for him from the State title to the land, of which he was in adverse possession, at the price per acre which the State asked for it from parties in possession. In either case Bugbey, when he obtained the State patent in 1867, held it, so far as it covered the defendant's land, for the benefit of the defendant. In holding it he was simply a trustee of the bare legal title, and was bound to convey it to the defendant upon the payment of the price which was stipulated to be paid. He himself could gain no title by failing to convey, nor could he transfer any title by mortgaging or conveying it to the plaintiff as against the defendant, who had received nothing, not even possession from him. Defendant was in no sense the trustee of Bugbey as to the possession of the land; he claimed and held it of his own right, for his own benefit, subject to no right of Bugbey. The only right which the latter had was a right which arose out of the agreement to recover the money which he had advanced for defendant in procuring the patent.

Being in the exclusive possession of the land under an independent right, that possession was sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry as to the right under which the possession was held. (Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 611; Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 1; Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508.) "That the actual possession of land," says Mr. Justice Crockett, "with the exercise of the usual acts of ownership and dominion over it, operate in law as constructive notice to all the world of the claim of title under which the possessor holds is too well settled to merit discussion." (Talbert v. Singleton, 42 Cal. 395.) Presumptively, therefore, the plaintiff knew when it took its mortgage from Bugbey of the adverse possession and right of the defendant; and when Bugbey in 1874, in performance of his agreement to convey the title which he had obtained for the defendant in 1867, conveyed the title to the defendant, the deed of conveyance related back to the date of the agreement, and transferred the legal estate to the defendant as of the date at which he himself had obtained it, and the continuous adverse possession of the defendant thereafter, under his claim of title from the date of the patent to Bugbey, vested the defendant with absolute title to the land, under sections 322, 323, 326, of the Code of Civil Procedure, long before the commencement of the action. (Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365; Morris v. De Celis, 51 Cal. 56; Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 48 Cal. 7.)

But it is contended that the defendant took a lease of the land from the plaintiff, and that the taking of the lease estops him from denying the title of the plaintiff as his landlord.

The record shows as fact that, on the 21st of April, 1877, ten years after the date of the patent, plaintiff leased the land to the defendant for the term of eight months at the nominal rent of one dollar with the privilege of buying the land from the plaintiff at the expiration of the lease. The defendant testified at the trial that he did not know how he came to execute the lease; that he signed it at the solicitation of some agent of the plaintiff, rather through fear and misapprehension. "I did not," he says, "understand the thing at all. I did not understand my rights."

Being the owner and in possession of the land at the date of the lease, without ever having at any time received the possession from his landlord or his grantor, and having accepted the lease through misapprehension of his rights, the defendant was not estopped by the lease. (Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558; Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 245.)

It is also urged that the defendant is estopped because he offered to buy the title of the plaintiff.

The offer, if any was made at all, was made in 1877, many years after the title of the defendant had become absolute under the Statute of Limitations. Such an offer when made by one in adverse possession before the Statute of Limitations had run in his favor is an acknowledgment of the title of the true owner, which will interrupt the running of the statute. (Abbey Homestead v. Willard, 48 Cal. 615; Lovell v. Frost, 44 Cal. 47; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591.) But when made after the statute has run, and title under it has become absolute, it does not affect the title, nor estop the person making the offer from maintaining his title in any litigation concerning it in which he may be involved. The defendant had the same right as any other owner of property to fortify the title by which he held possession by the purchase of any other title which in his judgment might protect him in the quiet enjoyment of his own against the annoyance or expense of litigation.

We find no errors in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

MORRISON, C. J., ROSS, J., MYRICK, J., THORNTON, J., MCKINSTY, J., and SHARPSTEIN, J., concurring specially.—The general finding in favor of the defendant includes a finding that the plaintiff had notice of the agreement between Bugbey and defendant of date July 24, 1866. The deed subsequently made by Bugbey to defendant related back to the agreement, and vested the title to the property in question in defendant as against the plaintiff. For these reasons we concur in the judgment.

JOHN D. BENNETT, APPELLANT, v. N. PARDINI ET AL.,
RESPONDENTS.

INJUNCTION — DISSOLUTION — ACTION ON UNDERTAKING.—One Grondona brought an injunction suit against John D. Bennett, the plaintiff herein. An undertaking was given, and a preliminary injunction issued as prayed for in the complaint. Bennett moved to dissolve the injunction on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the motion was granted. He also demurred to the complaint on the same ground, and the demurrer was sustained, and notice thereof duly given. Twenty-one days after the service of the notice, the complaint not having been amended, and nothing further done in the case, an action was commenced on the undertaking. The defendants objected that the action was prematurely brought. Held, that the proceedings in the injunction suit amounted to a final determination that Grondona was not entitled to the injunction, and that the objection made by the defendants was untenable.

FINDINGS — JUDGMENT. — If findings are not waived it is error to enter judgment without them.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

Pillsbury & Titus, for Appellant.

Aug. D. Splivalo, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.— This is an action upon an undertaking on injunction.

It was contended in the court below that the action was prematurely brought. That court sustained the contention, and gave judgment for the defendants, who were sureties on the undertaking.

The injunction order, upon the granting of which the undertaking sued on was given, was made in the case of Grondona v. Bennett, plaintiff here, and the writ of injunction was issued thereon on the 3d day of November, 1879. On motion of Bennett on the 12th of December, 1879, the injunction was dissolved. It appears that the motion to dissolve the injunction was made on the complaint alone, and the order granting this motion was based on the sole ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. A demurrer to the complaint on the same ground was, on the 14th of January, 1880, sustained, and the plaintiff had leave to amend within ten days. Notice of the ruling on the demurrer was served on Grondona on the same day. Grondona did not amend, and nothing further has ever been done in the cause.

This action was commenced on the 4th of February, 1880, twenty-one days after the service of the notice above mentioned.

We think the foregoing facts show that it was finally decided that Grondona was not entitled to the injunction on which the undertaking was given. To hold the contrary because a judgment was not entered upon the failure of Grondona to amend, would be adhering to form and disregarding substance. We think that this action was not prematurely brought.

No findings were filed or waived in this case, and this was error.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

Hearing in Bank denied.

J. H. BARTLETT ET AL., RESPONDENTS, v. THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, APPELLANT.

MOB — DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY — EVIDENCE. — In an action to recover damages for the destruction of property alleged to have been burned by a mob, evidence was given on the part of the plaintiffs as to the disturbed condition of the city of San Francisco at and about the time of the fire, and particularly the excitement existing in regard to the Chinese, riotous meetings, and demonstrations on the subject accompanied with acts of violence, the inability of the city authorities to maintain the laws and enforce order, the formation of a committee of safety, and the means adopted to protect property, and preserve the public peace. This evidence was admitted against the objection of the defendant. Held, that the evidence was relevant, and that the objection was properly overruled.

INSTRUCTION — REFUSAL TO REPEAT. — It is not error to refuse to repeat an instruction already substantially given in clear and distinct terms.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

William Craig, city and county attorney, for Appellant.

Gray & Haven, and Chickering & Thomas, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM. — There are many exceptions to the testimony in this case, reserved by the defendant. They were fully argued, and we have since considered them. We think the testimony related to the condition and circumstances of the city at or about the time of the fire by which the property was destroyed, to recover damages for which this action was brought, and that such testimony was relevant.

It was argued that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. We are of the opinion that this contention is untenable.

An exception was reserved to the refusal of the court to give an instruction asked by the defendant. On an examination of the charge of the court we are satisfied that the instruction was substantially given in clear and distinct terms. It was not error to refuse to repeat it.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

NORTHERN INSURANCE COMPANY, RESPONDENT, v.
EDWARD E. POTTER, APPELLANT.

PARTNERS — JOINT LIABILITY — RELEASE. — Partners are jointly liable for the debts of the partnership, but one of several joint debtors is not discharged from liability by a release to the others; and where it is expressly agreed that the release shall not operate in his favor, the liability continues independent of section 1543 of the Civil Code.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Fox & Kellogg, for Appellant.

Lloyd Baldwin, for Respondent.

McKINSTRY, J.— The defendant, Julius Jacobs, and George Easton, were co-partners, doing business as insurance agents, and, as such, were agents of plaintiff. In March, 1879, an account was stated between plaintiff and defendant, Jacobs and Easton, by which a balance of $2,359.02 was found due from the three to plaintiff.

In September, 1879, Jacobs and Easton paid to plaintiff on account of such balance $1,800. At the time of the payment plaintiff released Jacobs and Easton from all further claim or liability with respect to the indebtedness of them and defendant, but it was particularly specified and agreed by and between plaintiff and Jacobs and Easton that the release should not operate, or be construed to release or discharge the defendant.

This action is to recover of defendant the part of the said balance $2,359.02 unpaid by Jacobs and Easton. The partners were joint debtors. (Civ. Code, § 2442.) Section 1543 of the same Code provides: "A release of one of two or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligations of any of the others, unless they are mere guarantors; nor does it affect their right to contribution from him." Independent of the Code the release of Jacobs and Easton would not have discharged the defendant, because it was expressly provided by the parties to it that it should not have that effect.

In Solly v. Forbes, cited and approved by Wilde, C. J., in Thompson v. Lack, 3 Conn. B. 551, it was authoritatively decided that a release of a joint debtor or surety might be qualified and prevented from operating a release of a co-debtor or surety. And Patterson, J. (North v. Wakefield, 13 Q. B. 541), said: "Now the deed contained an express clause that the release to Goddard should not operate to discharge any one jointly or otherwise liable to plaintiff for the same debts. It is plain, therefore, that it did not release the defendant. The reason why a release to one debtor releases all jointly liable is, unless it be held to do so, the co-debtor after paying the debt might sue him who was released for contribution, and so in effect he would not be released; but that reason does not apply when the debtor released agrees to such a qualification of the release as will leave him liable to the rights of the co-debtor."

As the debtors released in the case before us agreed to the continuation of the right of contribution on the part of the defendant, the latter was not discharged.

Section 1543 of the Civil Code seems to give the same effect to a release in general terms as was given by the English courts to the qualified release, expressly providing that the joint debtors not mentioned in the release should not be discharged. The section provides in effect that the joint debtor who accepts a release shall be held to have consented that the liability of his joint debtor should be continued together with his own liability to contribution. It is enough for the present case, however, to decide that defendant was not discharged by the release of Jacobs and Easton.

Judgment affirmed.

Ross, J., and McKee, J., concurred.

M. M. ODELL ET AL., RESPONDENTS, v. HANNAH WILSON ET AL., SAMUEL KAY, APPELLANT.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE — TAX TITLE — JUDGMENT. — In an action to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagors and one Samuel Kay were made defendants. The complaint alleged that Kay had or claimed some interest in the premises subsequent and subject to the mortgage. Kay answered denying that the interest claimed by him was subsequent or subject to the mortgage. It appeared from the evidence that his claim was founded upon a deed executed on a sale for taxes made after the mortgage was given. The court found that the claim was invalid, that Kay had no interest in the premises, and that the allegations of the complaint were true. A judgment was rendered accordingly. Held, that the judgment was erroneous, that the title claimed by Kay was adverse, and not subject to the mortgage; that its validity could not be determined in such an action, and that the judgment should have been without prejudice to the rights of Kay under the tax deed.

IN. — CROSS-COMPLAINT TO QUIET TITLE. — In addition to the answer, Kay filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiffs, alleging that he was the owner of the premises, and praying that his title be quieted. Held, that the cross-complaint was not a proper proceeding, and should have been dismissed.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Sacramento, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Dunlap & Van Fleet, for Appellant.

L. S. Taylor, for Respondents.

THORNTON, J.—This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage on certain lots in the town of Folsom. One Samuel Kay was made a party defendant, and it was alleged that he had or claimed to have some interest or claim upon the mortgaged premises, which was subsequent and subject to the lien of the mortgage. This Kay denied.

In the view we take of the case the other pleadings need not be noticed.

The court found that the claim of Kay was invalid, that he had no interest in the premises, and that all the allegations of his answer were untrue. It further found that all the allegations of the complaint were true.

In finding the allegations of the complaint to be true the court did not find according to the evidence; for the evidence shows that the title of Kay was one arising upon a sale for taxes for which he held a tax deed, executed by the sheriff as tax collector, and this was not a title subject to the mortgage, but adverse to the title of mortgagors and those claiming under them. Any decree made against Kay should have been without prejudice to his claim of title under the tax deed. (San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 465; 21 Cal. 590; Elias v. Verdugo, 27 Cal. 425; Hibernia S. & L. Society v. Ordway, 38 Cal. 681.)

The cross-complaint of Kay should have been dismissed, and a decree of foreclosure should have been rendered as above indicated. The issues arising on the cross-complaint and answer thereto should be determined in another action. We see no case made for a cross-complaint. (Moyle v. Porter, 51 Cal. 639.) Further, the proper parties are not made to determine the issues arising on it. The mortgagors holding the legal title should have been made defendants. The only parties made defendants were the plaintiffs, who were the mortgagees.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

LA SOCIETE FRANCAISE D'EPARGNES ET DE
PREVOYANCE MUTUELLE, RESPONDENT, v. MAT-TIE A. BEARDSLEE ET AL., J. L. L. F. WARREN, APPELLANT.

JUDGMENT BY CONSENT — APPEAL. — The Supreme Court will not entertain an appeal from a judgment entered by consent of the party prosecuting the appeal.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing to modify the judgment.

The action was unlawful detainer. The defendant Beardslee was a tenant of the plaintiff, and sublet to defendants McCarthy and Warren. Moses G. Cobb as attorney for all the defendants entered into a stipulation that judgment be entered against them for the amount of the rent due, and for restitution of the premises, in consideration of which plaintiff granted a stay of proceedings, and waived its right to have the damages trebled.

After the entry of the judgment the defendant Warren made application to the court to modify the judgment so as to relieve him from liability, on the ground that he was only a sub-tenant, and was made a party in order that he as sub-tenant might redeem the term of Beardslee. The court denied the application, and subsequently Warren again applied to the court for a modification of the judgment as to him, on the ground that Moses G. Cobb had no authority to appear for him and make the stipulation referred to. The motion was supported by the affidavit of Warren, Cobb, and Moore, the clerk of Cobb. The court denied the motion.

Moses G. Cobb, for Appellant.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—There are two appeals in this cause prosecuted by defendant Warren; one from the judgment, and one from an order made after judgment, denying Warren's motion to modify the same.

The judgment was taken and entered against Warren by his consent. This disposes of the appeal from the judgment. We will not hear an appeal from a judgment entered by the consent of the party prosecuting the appeal. The judgment must be affirmed.

As to the appeal from the order denying the motion of Warren above stated, we are of opinion from the papers used on the motion that the court was justified in denying the motion aforesaid.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WILLIAM P. LAMBERT, RESPONDENT, v. E. A. McCLOUD, APPELLANT.

REPLEVIN — CONTRACT OF SALE — FINDINGS. — The action was replevin to recover a horse in the possession of the defendant. The possession was acquired from one Coates, to whom the horse had been delivered by the plaintiff under a contract of sale subject to certain conditions to be performed before the title should pass. On a review of the findings, held, that the facts found did not support the judgment.

Chickering & Thomas, for Appellant.

Dudley & Dudley, and Van Ness & Moore, for Respondent.

THORNTON, J.— This is an action of claim and delivery of a horse alleged to be of the value of seven hundred dollars. Judgment passed for plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and defendant appeals from the judgment and the order denying the motion above mentioned.

The principal question arises on the decision of the court below, which, so far as necessary to be stated, is contained in the following findings of fact:

“ 1. That in the month of May, 1876, the plaintiff was the owner, and entitled to the immediate possession of the personal property described in the complaint filed in this action.

“ 2. That in the month of May, and while still the owner of said horse, and so in possession of the said horse, the said plaintiff agreed with one W. D. Coates to sell the said horse to said Coates upon the following terms and conditions, to wit:—

“ That the said Coates should purchase for the said plaintiff as much stock as one thousand dollars would carry upon a margin, to wit, the customary margin allowed in the office of the firm of Hunt & Coates, and should carry such stock for said plaintiff, at the risk of said W. D. Coates, until a profit was realized upon the same of one thousand dollars; and when said profit was so realized, the said Coates should notify the said plaintiff, and that upon the receipt of said notice the said plaintiff should elect to draw down the said profit of one thousand dollars, or carry at his own risk the stock so purchased as aforesaid.

"3. That a bill of sale of said horse from the said plaintiff to said Coates was made and signed by the plaintiff, and was, by the consent and agreement of the said plaintiff and the said Coates, placed in the hands of one John L. Hunt, to be held by him in trust for both parties, until the said Coates should notify the said plaintiff of the realization of a profit of one thousand dollars upon the stock purchased as aforesaid, and that thereupon the said Hunt should deliver the said bill of sale of the said horse to the said Coates.

"4. That it was agreed and understood by and between said parties that the title to said horse should not vest in the said Coates until the delivery to him of the said bill of sale in the manner hereinbefore set forth.

"5. That upon the completion of the said contract, in the month of May, 1876, aforesaid, the said plaintiff, under the terms of said contract, delivered the said horse into the possession of the said Coates.

"6. That the firm of Hunt & Coates, composed of John L. Hunt and W. D. Coates, failed and became bankrupt in the month of January, A. D. 1878.

"7. That thereupon the said plaintiff demanded of said Coates the return of said horse, which demand the said Coates failed and refused to comply with.

"8. That subsequent to the making of the contract hereinbefore set forth, and prior to this action, the said Coates transferred the possession of the said horse to the defendant in this action.

"9. That the said W. D. Coates has not, at any time since the making of the contract hereinbefore set forth, notified said plaintiff of the realization of the profit of one thousand dollars, or given the said plaintiff any notice whatsoever in relation thereto; and that the stock purchased by said Coates has not realized a profit of the said amount since the day of its purchase by the said Coates."

The court held as conclusions of law from the foregoing facts that the sale to Coates was a conditional sale, and that the title of the property in dispute was not to pass to Coates until the performance of the conditions; that the conditions had not been performed, and no title passed to Coates or to defendant. Therefore plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

It is clear that the sale of the horse, as found, was a sale on credit or time; for the stock was to be bought at a future day, and the horse was to be delivered at once. This is the meaning of the findings. (See findings one to five, both inclusive.) On such a sale the right of property and right of possession vest in the purchaser (Coates), unless it is stipulated to the contrary. (Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 Barn. & C. 941; Benjamin on Sales, 3d Am. Ed. § 678.) In this case it was stipulated, and it is so found, that the right of property should not pass until Coates, the purchaser, should notify the plaintiff of the realization of the profit fixed by the contract upon the stock to be purchased by Coates. But it was not stipulated that Coates should not have the right of possession of the horse; and this right is sufficient to maintain the possession of the defendant claiming under Coates, unless such right has terminated. Coates having purchased the stock, as long as he carried it he was entitled to the possession. He was then complying with his contract, and was in no default. There is evidence that Coates purchased the stock in accordance with his agreement, and none to the contrary, and such seems to have been assumed as a fact in the ninth finding, though it is not expressly found. There is no finding that Coates was not carrying the stock purchased by him as above stated, and as long as he was carrying the stock, as we have seen, he was entitled to the possession. To put Coates in default he must have ceased to carry the stock, or it must appear that though he was carrying it, there was no probability that the profit of one thousand dollars would be realized upon it within a reasonable time. We cannot hold as matter of law or fact that he was not carrying the stock as agreed on. This, if true, should have been found. It is assumed by the court below as a fact that he purchased the stock as required by the agreement, and it does not appear but that he was doing all that was necessary to carry it. We cannot know that there was any assessment to be paid on the shares purchased, or anything else to be done by Coates in order to carry the stock in the absence of a finding to that effect. It may be that there was no assessment to be paid, and that nothing was to be done in order to carry the stock; that all that was required was to hold it for a rise.

If it be true that Coates was and is carrying the stock, and there is no reasonable probability that the profit of one thousand dollars will be realized within a reasonable time, this must be made to appear to the court by a finding to that effect, or it cannot be noticed here. This court cannot judicially know that such is the fact. The court below should find it if it be so.

The finding that a firm of Hunt & Coates failed and became bankrupt in January, 1878, shows no breach of the contract on the part of Coates. Coates may still be solvent and able to comply, and actually comply with the contract. There is nothing strange in a firm becoming insolvent, and one of the partners remaining solvent.

Should it appear that Coates has abandoned all idea of carrying out the contract, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover.

It follows from the foregoing that the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and it is so ordered.

MURDER — INFORMATION. — An information for murder is sufficient if it charges the offense committed in the language of the statute defining it; and under such an information the defendant may be convicted of murder in any degree.

Id. — INSTRUCTIONS — GOOD CHARACTER. — The court instructed the jury with reference to the evidence of good character that "such evidence is to be considered and applied by the jury in the case in this way: as a circumstance tending to throw some light upon the principal question involved. Did or did not the defendant fire this shot? Did or did not he commit this offense?" Held, not error.

Id. — INSTRUCTIONS — DRUNKENNESS. — The court also instructed the jury that evidence of drunkenness of the defendant at the time of the alleged crime "can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime." Held, not error.

APPEAL from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial in the Superior Court of the county of Santa Clara. BELDEN, J.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

L. Quint, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, for Respondents.

ROSS, J.— The point chiefly argued for the defendant is that, under the information against him, he could not be legally convicted of murder of the first degree. The information is in the language of the statute defining murder, which is: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." (Pen. Code, § 187.) Murder, thus defined, includes murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree.

It has many times been decided by this court that it is sufficient to charge the offense committed in the language of the statute defining it. As the offense charged in this case included both degrees of murder, the defendant could be legally convicted of either degree warranted by the evidence.

The point is made for defendant that the charge of the court below is erroneous in that it did not define the crime of manslaughter, and instruct the jury that under the information defendant might be convicted of that crime. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that the record does not contain the evidence, and hence it does not appear that a case was made that called for or would have justified such an instruction.

It is contended that the charge of the court below in respect to the good character, of the defendant was erroneous, as also that in respect to the defendant's drunkenness. In neither respect do we think any substantial error was committed.

EVIDENCE — EXAMINATION OF A CHILD — IRREGULARITY.— A child nine years of age was examined as a witness on the part of the prosecution. His testimony was taken without a preliminary examination as to his competency, but at the close of his testimony, and before he left the witness stand, the court examined him in the presence of the defendant, and the jury touching his competency, and found him to be competent. On a previous trial of the case the witness had been examined, and his competency established before he was permitted to testify. Held, that no error prejudicial to the defendant had been committed.

ID.— CONDUCT INDICATING A GUILTY INTENT.— Evidence was given at the trial of the escape, recapture, and conduct of the defendant immediately after his arrest. Held, that the evidence was admissible as indicating a guilty intent.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

Horace Hawes, for Appellant.

A. L. Hart, Attorney-General, for Respondents.

McKee, J.— The defendant was twice tried for the offense of which he was ultimately convicted. The first trial resulted in a disagreement of the jury. On that trial a child of the age of nine years, after having been preliminarily examined as to his competency as a witness, was found to be competent and testified. On the second trial he was permitted, against the objection of the defendant, to testify without having been then examined as to his competency; but at the close of his testimony and before he had left the witness stand, the court, in the presence of the jury and the defendant, again examined him touching his competency, and found him to be competent, and to this no objection was made by defendant's counsel, nor did he move to reject the testimony of the witness on the ground of irregularity in his examination, or on the ground of incompetency.

While it is true that a defendant in a criminal case is entitled to have the question of the competency of a presumably incompetent witness heard and determined in his presence, and on his trial before the court and jury, yet the right of the defendant, in that regard, was not violated in this case. The examination of the witness as to his competency was twice had in the presence of the defendant as prescribed by law. One was a preliminary examination, and the fact that the other was made at the close of the witness' testimony, was not, under the circumstances, prejudicial to the right of the defendant. There was, therefore, no substantial error in the admission of the testimony.

Nor did the court err in admitting the testimony of a witness to prove the conduct, flight, and recapture of the defendant immediately after his arrest.

It is the animus with which an act is done which constitutes its criminality. There must be a joint union of act and intention in every crime (§ 20, Pen. Code); and the intention, like the act, may be proved by direct or indirect evidence of the circumstances connected with the crime. Hence the conduct of a party before and after the principal fact in issue is admissible not as part of the res gestæ, but as a circumstance connected with the act indicating the guilty intent. HOMICIDE — DRUNKENNESS.—The court charged the jury that insanity produced by intoxication will not destroy responsibility if the party, when sane and responsible, makes himself voluntarily intoxicated; and that drunkenness is no excuse for crime, but is a circumstance for the consideration of the jury in determining the degree of the crime. The evidence proved that the homicide was committed on Sunday about one o'clock, P. M., and that the defendant had bought a pint of pure alcohol on the Friday before the homicide, brought it home with him on Friday evening, and drank it, without water, all the next day. Held (1), that the charge was not erroneous; (2), that the evidence tended to prove voluntary intoxication, and that the charge on the subject was relevant.

PUNISHMENT — DISCRETION OF JURY UNDER SECTION 190 OF THE PENAL CODE.—It was not error to instruct the jury that if they find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, with some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it is within their discretion to pronounce such a sentence as would relieve him from the extreme penalty of the law. Section 190 of the Penal Code invests a jury in a criminal case for murder with that discretion; but the discretion is not an arbitrary one, and it is proper for the court to instruct them as to its exercise.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Lake County, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Noel & Bishop, for Appellant.

Attorney-General, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.—This appeal is from a judgment of conviction of murder, and an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Insanity, from the long continued use of intoxicants, was the only defense made on behalf of the defendant. In substance the court charged the jury to the effect that insanity produced by intoxication would not destroy responsibility when the party, when sane and responsible, made himself voluntarily intoxicated, and that drunkenness was no excuse for crime, but it was a circumstance for the consideration of the jury in determining the degree of the crime. The charge upon the subject in the very language by which it was given to the jury was considered and approved by this court in the cases of The People v. Ferris, 55 Cal. 592; People v. Williams, 48 Cal. 345; People v. Lewis, 36 Cal. 531. But it is contended that while it was appropriate to the facts of those cases it was irrelevant to this case, because there was no proof of voluntary intoxication by the defendant at the time of the commission of the homicide, and therefore the charge was erroneous, because it was calculated to mislead the jury.

The homicide was committed on Sunday, the 7th of May, 1882, about one o'clock P. M., and the evidence given on behalf of the defendant proved that he had bought a pint of pure alcohol on the Friday before the homicide, brought it home with him on Friday evening, and drank it without water all of the next day. This evidence certainly tended to prove voluntary intoxication, and the charge on the subject was relevant.

It was not error to instruct the jury that if they found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, with some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it was within their discretion to pronounce such a sentence as would relieve the defendant from the extreme penalty of the law. Section 190 of the Penal Code invests a jury in a criminal case for murder with that discretion; but the discretion is not an arbitrary one, and it was proper for the court to instruct them as to its exercise.

There is no error in the record prejudicial to the defendant, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GEORGE DOUGHERTY, RESPONDENT, v. MAURICE DORE, APPELLANT.

INJUNCTION — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—A cause of action upon an undertaking for an injunction does not accrue until the final determination of the action in which the injunction was obtained.

Id.—FINDING — DAMAGES.—The injunction was obtained to restrain the plaintiff herein, who was the defendant in the injunction suit, from prosecuting certain street work in San Francisco under a contract with the superintendent of streets. The court found in substance that the plaintiff had procured materials for the work of the value of twelve hundred dollars, and that by reason of the injunction these materials were lost and destroyed without any fault on the part of the plaintiff. Damages were awarded in accordance with this finding. Held, that the damages were sufficiently proximate to warrant their recovery.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

Action upon an undertaking for an injunction. The complaint was filed March 19, 1879. The action in which the injunction was obtained was commenced in 1870, and on the 1st of October, 1870, the court vacated the order previously made granting an injunction. The cause was afterwards tried, and on the 12th of March, 1877, a final judgment was entered therein in favor of the defendant—the plaintiff in this action—from which no appeal was taken. The other facts appear in the opinion of the court.

Harmon & Galpin, for Appellants.

The cause of action accrued when the District Court finally decided that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the injunction to procure which the bond was given, that is to say, October 1st, 1870, and the action is barred by § 337, Code Civ. Proc. (Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301; Fowler v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 35.)

The conclusion of law that plaintiff is entitled to payment for twelve hundred dollars costs to replace sixteen hundred cubic yards of grading washed away by reason of said injunction is not sustained by the finding. The injunction was neither cause, proximate nor remote, of the damage. (Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 417; §§ 3300, 3301, Civ. Code; Sedgwick Measure Damages, pp. 58-62; Dorwin v. Potter, 5 Denio, 306.)

J. C. Bates, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—In Clark v. Clayton, 61 Cal. 634, we held that an action brought upon an undertaking for an injunction after the dissolution of the injunction, but before the final determination of the action in which the injunction was obtained, was prematurely brought. There are several reported cases which sustain that doctrine. (Gray v. Veirs, 33 Md. 159; Penny v. Holberg, 53 Miss. 567; Bemis v. Gannett, 8 Neb. 236.)

In Dowling v. Polack, 18 Cal. 625, this precise question was not involved, but the court in its opinion indicates very clearly that its views upon this question were in accord with the doctrine of the cases above cited.

In Fowler v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 34, the court held that an order dissolving an injunction was prima facie, at least, an adjudication that there was no foundation for the injunction, and that it ought not to have issued, and refused to reverse the judgment on the ground that the action was prematurely brought, but reversed it on another ground. In the reporter's statement of the case it is said that "no judgment in Frisbie v. Fowler et al. was offered in evidence." From which we feel authorized to infer that it did not appear whether or not there had been a final determination of the action in which the injunction was sued out. In the case now before us it does appear that the action in which the injunction was sued out was not finally determined until within three years before the commencement of this action. No case or text-writer was cited in support of the doctrine laid down in Fowler v. Frisbie, supra, and we very much doubt its soundness.

In High on Injunctions it is said (§ 1649) that "the general rule is that upon the dissolution of an injunction and failure on the part of the obligors to comply with the conditions of the bond, a right of action at once accrues," and two cases, and two only, viz., Tallahassee R. R. Co. v. Hayward, 4 Fla. 411, and Sizer v. Anthony, 22 Ark. 465, are cited to support that assertion. But in each of those cases the condition of the bond was that the party who sued out the injunction should, in the event of its being dissolved, pay such sum as should be adjudged against him. In the case at bar the defendants' promise, "that in case said injunction shall issue the said plaintiffs will pay to the said parties enjoined such damages, not exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars, as such parties may sustain by reason of the said injunction if the said District Court finally decide that the said plaintiffs were not entitled thereto." If our Code had provided for the giving of a bond or undertaking with a condition that if the injunction should be dissolved the obligors would pay the obligee the damages which he might sustain by reason of the injunction, a right of action upon such a bond would undoubtedly accrue as soon as the injunction should be dissolved. Not because the court had finally decided that the party who sued out the injunction was not entitled thereto, but because the obligors had agreed to pay said damages if the injunction should be dissolved.

On the whole we are satisfied with the decision of Clark v. Clayton, supra, and we do not think that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint.

The appellant further insists that the findings do not support the judgment. The findings show that the plaintiff was a street contractor, and that he had a contract for doing the work which he was temporarily enjoined by the injunction above mentioned from prosecuting, and "that by reason of said injunction and service thereof, and delay caused thereby, a large amount of material placed in said part of said street by said plaintiff, to wit, sixteen hundred cubic yards, which constituted a portion of the grading of said street under said contract, was left without protection or any one to protect same, and was washed away by the action of the water, without any fault of plaintiff, and which said plaintiff had to and did replace at a cost and value of seventy-five cents per cubic yard."

It is urged that "the injunction was neither cause, proximate nor remote, of the damage."

It is doubtless well settled that "the liability upon an injunction bond is limited to such damages as arise from the suspension or invasion of vested legal rights by the injunction." (High on Injunctions, § 1663.)

But the finding is to the effect that the plaintiff in this action did sustain damages by reason of a forced suspension of his work. The injunction did not wash away the work or any part of it, but it prevented the plaintiff from taking measures to protect it against the action of the water. Such at least is the finding. It has been held that one who is enjoined from selling his property until after it has greatly depreciated in value may recover the amount of such depreciation against the party who wrongfully sued out the injunction. (Meysenburg v. Schlieper, 48 Mo. 426.)

In Riddlesbarger v. McDaniel, 38 Mo. 138, the court says: "If the party has been injured in consequence of the injunction, he is entitled to whatever damages he has sustained. Destruction of the premises or their deterioration, . . . and all matters where the party has suffered loss or injury, may be taken into the account in assessing damages."

We are of opinion that the damages which the plaintiff is found to have sustained by reason of the suing out of an injunction which prevented him from prosecuting his work, are sufficiently proximate to justify the decision of the court below.

Judgment affirmed.

SYLVESTER HULL, PETITIONER, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF SHASTA COUNTY, RESPONDENT.

OFFICE — INCUMBENT — SUMMARY PROCEEDING TO RECOVER BOOKS AND PAPERS.—

Under sections 1015 and 1016 of the Political Code, the actual incumbent of an office may maintain a summary proceeding by petition to recover the books and papers pertaining to the office, and the court may order their delivery, and enforce the order by attachment or warrant. His right to the office can only be called in question by an information against him in the nature of a quo warranto.

1D.— QUALIFICATION OF INCUMBENT — INSUFFICIENCY OF BOND AS MATTER OF DEFENSE.— The fact of the incumbency being established, an objection to the qualification of the incumbent on the ground that the penalty of the bond given by him was less than the law required, is not available as a defense to the proceeding. (McKEE, J., and ROSS, J.)

2D.— CLASSIFICATION OF COUNTIES — CENSUS.— Where a county of the third class is found by a new census to have the requisite population for a county of the second class, it may be organized by the board of supervisors as a county of the latter class, but until such organization it remains a county of the third class, and the provisions of the statute fixing the penalty of official bonds in counties of the second class have no application. (McKINSTAY, J.)

CERTIORARI to the Superior Court of the county of Shasta to review certain orders made in a summary proceeding to recover books and papers pertaining to the offices of sheriff and tax collector of that county.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of MR. JUSTICE McKEE.

Clay W. Taylor, A. M. Rosborough, and R. A. Redman, for Petitioner.

I. S. Belcher, and Chipman & Garter, for Respondent.

McKEE, J.— This is a proceeding by certiorari to review a proceeding had in the Superior Court of Shasta County. It appears by the record returned in the proceeding that on the 8th day of January, 1883, W. E. Hopping, claiming to be the sheriff and tax collector of the county of Shasta, and the incumbent in office, commenced the proceeding by filing a petition against Sylvester Hull and Robert Kennedy to compel them to deliver to him the books and papers belonging to the office in their possession, which it was alleged they had refused to deliver to him on demand. Hull and Kennedy appeared in the proceeding; one of them answered the petition, the other did not. Neither denied any of its allegations. The answer of Hull merely averred that the petitioner had not qualified.

But the petition alleged, and the court found that the petitioner was on the 8th of January, 1883, and ever since had been the duly elected and qualified sheriff and tax collector of the county, and the incumbent in office, and as such was entitled to the books and papers of the office in the defendant's possession. It therefore ordered such books and papers to be delivered to the petitioner, and enforced the order by an order for a warrant, directed to a constable of the county, commanding him to make search for, and to take and deliver such books and papers to the petitioner. These orders are now claimed to have been made without, or in excess of, the jurisdiction of the court.

But upon the filing of the petition, the court was authorized by sections 1015 and 1016 of the Political Code to proceed in a summary way after notice of the petition to the adverse parties, and to make the order applied for, and to enforce it by attachment or warrant. By these sections of the Code the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the petition; and as it acquired jurisdiction of the persons of the defendants, it had jurisdiction to make the orders which were made and entered in the proceeding.

The real contention, however, is that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the orders, because the petitioner had not alleged in his petition that he was the "actual incumbent" of the office. The allegation is: "That on the 8th of January, 1883, he was, and ever since has been, and he now is, the duly elected and qualified sheriff and ex officio tax collector of Shasta County, State of California, and at said times he was, and he now is, the incumbent of the said offices." It was also alleged, "that he was formerly, to wit, immediately prior to said 8th day of January, 1883, an incumbent of said offices, and the said Robert Kennedy was, immediately prior to said last named date, under-sheriff and deputy tax collector of said county." These allegations were admitted, and from them, as facts, the inference is fairly deducible that the petitioner Hopping was the complete incumbent, and Hull had been the former incumbent of the office.

Besides, the record shows that Hopping was elected by the people of Shasta County at the general election of 1882; that he received his certificate of election, and within the statutory time after receiving the same took and subscribed the oath of office and gave two bonds; one as the official bond of the sheriff in the sum of ten thousand dollars, and the other as the bond of the tax collector in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, both of which were approved, filed, and recorded, and at the time of the proceeding he was peaceably acting as sheriff, and engaged in performing the duties of the office.

Of course, election alone did not constitute Hopping the incumbent of the office. The law required him, after receiving his certificate of election, to take the oath of office, and give bonds within the time required by law. If he failed to do these things according to law, and within the time required by law, the office was vacant. (Sections 907, 947, 996, Pol. Code; Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 125; People v. Taylor, 57 Cal. 620.) Until an officer-elect takes the oath of office and gives bonds according to law, he is not authorized to discharge the duties of the office. He is not an incumbent.

But the allegations and proofs in the proceeding under review were sufficient to sustain the findings and decision of the court that Hopping was the actual incumbent.

In the case of The People v. Clingan, 5 Cal. 389, which was a proceeding by quo warranto against one who claimed to exercise the duties of sheriff of Marin County, the fact that the claimant acted as sheriff was, in connection with his certificate of election, held sufficient to raise the presumption that he had executed his bond and taken the oath of office. So in the proceeding under review — a proceeding which involved only the question of right to the books and papers of the office, and not of the right to the office itself — there was not only that presumption in favor of incumbency of the office, but the people themselves made out a prima facie case of election, qualification, and incumbency in favor of the petitioner.

But, it is answered, there was no qualification, because, under the United States census of 1880, Shasta County had a population of 9,492 inhabitants, and was, by operation of section 4007 of the Political Code, classified as a second-class county, the sheriff and tax collector of which was required by law to qualify by giving bonds, as sheriff for twenty-five thousand dollars, and as tax collector for the sum of thirty thousand dollars. Such bonds were not given by Hopping; the bonds which he gave were for the amounts fixed by law for counties of the third class; therefore, it is contended, the bonds were wholly insufficient and not according to law, and did not qualify Hopping to discharge the duties of the office, or to become the incumbent of it.

Prima facie, however, the bonds under which he qualified were sufficient. Being sufficient, his right to the office and its incidents was unquestionable. But even if the bonds were insufficient, that circumstance would merely affect his right to the office; it would not touch the question of his incumbency. Being the actual incumbent of the office, he was in possession under color of right; he was at least a de facto officer, and had a vested right to act as such until his right was questioned by some one in a proper proceeding for that purpose. Such a contest could not be originated by certiorari. It can be made only by an original proceeding by information in the nature of a quo warranto against him as incumbent of the office. (People v. Olds, 3 Cal. 176; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 432; Satterlee v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 320; People v. Sassovich, 29 Cal. 480.)

We think the Superior Court regularly pursued its authority, and the orders are affirmed.

Ross, J., concurred.

McKINSTRY, J., filed a concurring opinion as follows:—I concur. Section 4006 of the Political Code reads: "Whenever a new census is taken, the counties on the first day of July thereafter are, by operation of law, classified under such census." If it should be admitted that section 4006 refers to a United States census, that we take judicial notice of the completion of the census of 1880, and of the fact that, by the return of such census Shasta, has a population of more than eight thousand; and it should further be admitted that under the law the failure of the sheriff to file within the time limited by the statute a proper bond, necessarily deprived him of his character as an actual incumbent, the results claimed by petitioner would not follow.

It would not be the effect of the new census to reorganize Shasta as a county government of the second class. Each supervisor must be an elector of the district he represents. (Pol. Code, § 4023.) The new census would impose upon the existing board of supervisors the duty of redistricting the county — a duty which could perhaps be enforced by mandamus. (Pol. Code, § 4023.) The increased population would give Shasta a right to a governmental organization as a second-class county, but the Code provides the only mode by which such organization may be given an actual existence and operation. Until the county is redistricted, and provision made for the selection of the appropriate number of supervisors, Shasta remains of the third class. Otherwise it would be a second-class county as to the sheriff's bond, but a third-class county with reference to the far more important matter of the number of its governing body, their powers and duties.

The title of the Code in which are found the sections above referred to is "The Government of Counties." A county government of the second class is one with five supervisors. Shasta has three supervisors, and cannot have more until the three shall redistrict the county. Until they discharge their duty of providing five districts, so that the county government may be made to accord with other county governments of the second class, Shasta remains a third-class county, although it may be, in a sense, classified as of the second-class, and entitled to a second-class government. Its officers are officers of the third class. The Code contemplates no such anomaly as that a third-class county shall have a second-class sheriff. Section 4122 of the Political Code requires of county officers official bonds corresponding to the class of the county "of which they are officers." All are officers of the same class. Hopping is sheriff of a county of the third class, until the government of a second-class county is set into operation.

SYLVESTER HULL, PETITIONER, v. THE SUPERIOR COURT OF SHASTA COUNTY ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

PROHIBITION — COURT — OFFICER.—Prohibition does not lie to prevent a court from recognising and taking judicial notice of the acts of a ministerial officer either de facto or de jure, nor to set aside judicial acts already done.

APPLICATION for a writ of prohibition. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Clay W. Taylor, A. M. Rosborough, and R. A. Redman, for Petitioner.

I. S. Belcher, and Chipman & Garter, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.—The demurrer to the petition in this proceeding must be sustained. The petition alleges that the Superior Court, “has recognized, does recognize, and, unless prohibited, will continue to recognize and take judicial notice of the acts of W. E. Hopping,” who claims to act as sheriff and tax collector of Shasta County.

Prohibition is not available as a remedy to prevent the acts of a de facto or de jure ministerial officer (People v. Board of Election, 54 Cal. 404; Le Conte v. Berkeley, 57 Cal. 289); nor to prevent judicial acts already done.

The right of one claiming to act as sheriff of a county can only be questioned in a proper proceeding by information in the nature of a quo warranto. (Hull v. Superior Court, ante.)

Demurrer sustained and writ dismissed.

SAN JOSE SAVINGS BANK, RESPONDENT, v. THE SIERRA LUMBER COMPANY, APPELLANT.

CORPORATION — ACTS OF DIRECTOR WHO CEASES TO BE A STOCKHOLDER.—A director of a corporation, who ceases to be a stockholder during the term for which he was chosen, but continues to act as a director, no judgment of ouster having been pronounced against him, is a director de facto, and his acts are valid as to third persons.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for Appellant.

J. Alexander Yoell, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—Action on a promissory note, alleged to have been executed by the defendant to D. M. Delmas, and by Delmas indorsed and transferred to the plaintiff. The defense is that the note in suit was never executed by the defendant.

It is said, and such appears to be the fact from the statement, that Hayward with four others had been regularly chosen and constituted the board of directors of the defendant corporation in October, 1878, when it (the corporation) was organized, that Hayward was then an owner of stock in the corporation, and continued to be such until the 28th of May, 1879, on which day he sold his stock, and it was transferred to the purchaser on the books of the company. The subject of the note came up for consideration at a meeting of the board held on the 1st day of August, 1879, at which time objection was made by one of the board to Hayward's acting as a director on the ground that he was no longer a stockholder of the company. Hayward acted and voted with two members of the board for the execution of the note sued on, the other members voting against it.

It is now contended that as Hayward had ceased to be a stockholder before this vote was cast, his vote was a nullity, and inasmuch as without his vote the authority to execute the note was not conferred by a majority of the board, that the note was made and delivered without authority and was void.

If, as contended, Hayward ceased to be a director when he parted with his stock, the point urged might be maintained. But in our opinion he did not cease to be such director. In fact it appears that he not only acted as director on this occasion, but subsequently during the term for which he was chosen, with the consent of all the members of the board except one.

It may be that on a direct proceeding to determine Hayward's right to hold the position of director a judgment of ouster would have been entered against him, but his title to the place cannot be tried in this action, or impeached collaterally. Until he was ousted on a direct proceeding he was a director de facto, and his acts as director would be valid as to third persons. This, in our judgment, is settled beyond controversy. To hold otherwise would be to render insecure all the operations of corporations.

We find no error in the transcript.

Judgment and order affirmed.

HORACE W. BOWMAN, RESPONDENT, v. THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, APPELLANT.

PLEADING — CARRIER — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.—A complaint which alleges that the plaintiff took passage on defendant's steamer and delivered his baggage to defendant, and that shortly before the arrival of the steamer at its destination, he went down on the main deck to look for his baggage—no check therefor having been given him—and while so doing fell down the main hatchway which had been left open negligently and carelessly, with no light placed near it to warn passengers of danger, and sustained injuries thereby, is not demurrable, on the ground that it shows contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The facts appear in the opinion of the court.

Milton Andros, and Charles Page, for Appellant.

Tyler & Howard, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—The complaint alleges that the defendant was the owner of the steamer Washington, which was running between the city and county of San Francisco and the town of Rio Vista in the county of Solano; that plaintiff took passage on said boat from the former to the latter place; that he delivered to defendant his baggage—a trunk; that a short time before the arrival of the vessel at Rio Vista he went down on the main deck to look for his baggage (no check therefore having been given him by the defendant), and while so doing he fell down the main hatchway and was greatly injured; that such hatchway was left open negligently and carelessly, and no light was placed near it to warn passengers of danger.

There was a demurrer to the complaint which was overruled by the court, and the sufficiency of the complaint is the only question before us on this appeal.

It is claimed that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff appears on the face of the pleading, but we are not prepared to say the point is well taken. It does not appear that the plaintiff had no right, as is claimed, to go upon the main deck to look for his baggage, or that he was guilty of contributory negligence by doing so.

Judgment affirmed.

ANDREW J. DONNELLY ET AL., RESPONDENTS, v. B.
STRUEVEN, APPELLANT.

ATTACHMENT — CONTRACT — TORT.—Plaintiffs sued on a contract, by the terms of which they promised to sell, and defendant promised to buy and pay for, certain personal property at a stipulated price. The breach alleged was that the defendant refused to receive and pay for the property as provided by the terms of the contract, whereby the plaintiffs sustained the damage sued for. An attachment was issued, and the defendant moved to discharge the same on the ground that the action was founded in tort and not in contract. Held, that the action was founded in contract, and the motion was properly denied.

APPEAL from an order of the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, city and county of San Francisco, refusing to discharge an attachment.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

H. H. Lowenthal, for Appellant.

Wm. Matthews, for Respondents.

PER CURIAM.—Plaintiffs sued on a contract, by the terms of which they promised to sell, and defendant promised to buy and pay for, certain hides, at the rate of five dollars each. The breach is that defendant refused to receive and pay for the hides as provided by the terms of the contract, whereby plaintiffs have sustained damages, etc.

An attachment was issued in the case, and defendant served a notice of motion to discharge the same on the following grounds:—

“1. That the undertaking filed herein in behalf of plaintiffs is insufficient in form and substance, and does not comply with the statute in this; that the same does not provide for the payment of attorney’s fees, etc.

“2. That it appears upon the face of the complaint that the cause of action herein, and upon which the attachment is predicated, is one in tort for damages, and not on contract, and is, therefore, not one of the causes authorizing an attachment.”

The second point is the only one we are called upon to consider, and that simply involves the inquiry whether the plaintiffs’ action is founded in tort or contract. Section 556, Code Civ. Proc., requires that a defendant applying to have a writ of attachment discharged shall state in his notice the particular ground upon which he relies: “The notice should have specified the grounds of the motion, and wherein it would be urged that the writ was improperly issued.” (Freeborn v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 337; Loucks v. Edmondson, 18 Cal. 203.)

It appears from the complaint as well as from the affidavit that the plaintiffs’ action was founded in contract, and not in tort, and therefore defendant’s ground of motion was not well taken.

Order affirmed.

P. B. HEWLETT, APPELLANT, v. SIMON EPSTEIN
ET AL., RESPONDENTS.

CORPORATION — DIRECTORS — PLEADING.— In an action against the directors of a mining corporation for failing to make and cause to be posted monthly statements of the receipts, expenditures, and liabilities of the corporation, as required by the Act of the 23d of April, 1880, it must be alleged in the complaint that money had in fact been received and liabilities incurred. An allegation that the directors pretended to have received large sums of money and incurred large liabilities is not sufficient. It should also be alleged that the corporation has an office or place of business.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.— The act in question is not in violation of the Constitution.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The defendants were directors of the Henrietta Gravel Mining Company, a corporation organized for mining purposes, and the plaintiff was a stockholder. The act under which the suit was brought will be found in the Statutes of 1880, p. 400.

H. C. Firebaugh, for Appellant.

Van Dyke & Powell for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.— The order of the court sustaining the demurrer in this case must be affirmed. The averment in the complaint that the "defendants as directors of said corporation pretended to have received and expended in the name of, and on behalf of said corporation large sums of money, and incurred large liabilities," is not sufficient. The averment should have been that they did in fact receive money and incur liability, and the averment in the complaint is not the equivalent thereof.

We would suggest that it would be well for the pleader in an action of this character to set forth the fact that the mining company of which the defendants are the directors had an office or place of business where the itemized account of the affairs of the company should have been posted.

We are of opinion that the act in question is not in violation of any provision of the Constitution.

Judgment and order affirmed.

P. B. HEWLETT, APPELLANT, v. MARK. A. MILLER,
RESPONDENT.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — WRITTEN CONTRACT — SUBSEQUENT PAROL AGREEMENT.

— The action was brought to specifically enforce a written contract to convey real estate. At the trial the defendant was allowed to show that by a subsequent parol agreement he was to retain the title until certain money loaned by him to the plaintiff, and not named in the original contract, should be repaid. Held, that the evidence was competent.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Sacramento, and from an order refusing a new trial.

H. C. Firebaugh and Rhodes & Barstow, for Appellant.

Estee & Boalt, and Beatty & Beatty, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.— The opinion in this case rendered by Department One is hereby approved and adopted as the opinion of the court in Bank, and the following additional authorities are referred to in support of the same. (Joslyn v. Wyman, 5 Allen, 62; Stone v. Lane, 10 Allen, 74; Upton v. National Bank, 120 Mass. 153.)

Judgment and order affirmed. Rehearing denied.

Opinion of the Department:

PER CURIAM.— In an action for the specific performance of a written contract to convey real estate, it is competent for the defendant to show that by a subsequent parol agreement he was to retain the title until other money than that named in the original contract (which had been loaned by him) should be repaid; and he may properly refuse to convey until such other money be repaid. (Clark v. Grant, 14 Ves. Jr. 519; Quinn v. Roath, 37 Conn. 16.) This is practically the only question involved in this case. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

TERESA E. MACNEVIN, APPELLANT, v. HENRY P.
MACNEVIN, RESPONDENT.

APPEALABLE ORDER—JUDGMENT.—An order for judgment is not a final judgment, and an order subsequently made cannot be treated as an order made after "final judgment" and appealable as such.

APPEAL from an order of the late District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, city and county of San Francisco, vacating certain orders granting alimony and counsel fees.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

J. P. Phelan, C. T. Botts, and J. E. McElrath, for Appellant.

Garber, Thornton & Bishop, and McAllister & Bergin, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—This was an action for divorce. Pending proceedings in the case, the court below from time to time made orders requiring the defendant to pay to the plaintiff several sums of money for alimony and counsel fees. Those orders were made enforceable by executions, but they were never enforced, and the court after it had heard the cause upon the merits decided in favor of the defendant; and on the 22d of January, 1879, ordered "that plaintiff's prayer for a decree of divorce be denied, and that defendant have judgment for costs." After the making of this order, on motion of defendant's counsel all the orders formerly made granting to the plaintiff alimony and counsel fees were vacated and set aside by an order made by the court on December 15, 1879. From this order the plaintiff appeals as from an order made after final judgment. But there is no final judgment; the record only shows an order for judgment; hence the order of December 15, 1879, is not an order after final judgment, and is not appealable. (Schaeffer v. The French Savings & Loan Society, 7 Pac. C. L. J. 155; Lake v. King, 16 Nev. 217.)

Appeal dismissed.

WILLIAM DRESBACH, RESPONDENT, v. HIS CREDITORS, H. P. MERRITT, OPPOSING CREDITOR, APPELLANT.

INSOLVENCY — DISCHARGE OF INDIVIDUAL MEMBER FROM FIRM DEBTS.—Under the Insolvency Act of 1852, the discharge of an individual member of a firm from all his debts operates as a discharge of his liability for partnership debts.

ID.—ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.—An assignment by a member of a firm of all his property of every description for the benefit of creditors, under the provisions of the Civil Code, does not preclude him from applying for and receiving a discharge under the insolvent law.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Yolo county, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

J. C. Ball, John T. Carey, and J. W. Armstrong, for Appellant.

A. P. Catlin, Henry Edgerton, and Wallace, Greathouse & Blanding, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—One question involved in this appeal is already disposed of by the recent decision of this court in Hawley v. Campbell, 62 Cal. 442, that an insolvent may, under the Act of 1852, be discharged of his liability for partnership debts.

The other question presented is this: November 23, 1878, Dresbach, a member of a partnership, made his individual assignment of all his property of every description, in trust for the benefit of his creditors. On the 3d day of February, 1879, he commenced these proceedings of voluntary insolvency. Schedules were annexed to his petition, but it is not claimed that at the commencement of the insolvency proceedings he had acquired any property since the assignment of November 23, 1878. It is urged that if a person, being actually insolvent, makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, he cannot apply for relief under the insolvent law, and be discharged from liability; that the assignment was of itself a fraud upon the insolvent law, in that it was a transfer of the property to an assignee of the insolvent's selection, and by it he deprived himself of any property to surrender to his creditors in the insolvency proceedings; that he thus deprived his creditors of all right to have a voice in the selection of a person to administer the estate, which is given by the insolvent law.

The assignment to an assignee of his own selection was authorized by the Civil Code (§ 3449), therefore it cannot be said to be fraudulent in itself; the statute gave the insolvent the right of selection; and the fact that that assignee had the property of the insolvent would not prevent the latter from having the benefit of a discharge in insolvency. We cannot say that nothing passed to the assignee in insolvency. If the property first assigned should yield more than sufficient to pay debts then existing, the assignee in insolvency would doubtless be entitled to the surplus. The right to a discharge in insolvency does not depend on the character or condition of the property assigned, but upon the good faith of the applicant in his proceedings.

The Act of May 4, 1852, section 39, declared that "no assignment of any insolvent debtor, otherwise than as provided in this act, shall be legal or binding upon creditors"; but the enactment of the Code of 1873 (Civil Code, part 2, title 3, "Assignment for the Benefit of Creditors") had the effect of repealing pro tanto, section 39 of the Act of 1852; and thereafter, while the Act of 1852 remained in force, the two systems of assignments under the Code, and assignments in insolvency, were not necessarily antagonistic, and the latter was not entirely exclusive. Judgment and order affirmed.

HERMAN ENKLE, PETITIONER, v. WILLIAM M. EDGAR, AUDITOR OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, RESPONDENT.

OFFICER — SALARY — ALLOWANCE BY THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.—DUTY OF THE AUDITOR.—An "extra clerk" appointed by the tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco, under an authorization of the board of supervisors, at a salary of one hundred dollars per month, is an officer of the city and county with a fixed salary, and when a demand for the salary has been presented to and allowed by the board, and there is money in the treasury applicable to the payment thereof, it is the duty of the auditor, on the presentation of the demand to him, to audit the same in the manner provided by law.

APPLICATION for a mandamus. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

J. P. Langhorne, and T. B. Bishop, for Petitioner.

William Craig, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—The petitioner alleges, and the respondent does not deny that under and by virtue of an authorization of the board of supervisors said petitioner was duly appointed for the month of January, 1883, an "extra clerk" by the tax collector, at a salary of one hundred dollars per month. That within the time prescribed by law said petitioner presented his salary demand to said board of supervisors, and that the same was duly approved and allowed by said board. That thereafter said petitioner presented said demand to the respondent, who is the auditor of said city and county, and requested him to audit the same in the manner provided by law. And that said respondent, as such auditor, refused, and still refuses, to audit said demand.

The grounds upon which the respondent bases his refusal to audit said demand are in effect that he has made a computation of the amount of revenue which the city and county will derive this year from all available sources, and ascertained that the same will not be sufficient to pay the salaries of the salaried officers of said city and county for said entire year.

If, however, the petitioner is an officer of said city and county whose salary is fixed, and stands on the same footing in that respect as other officers of said city and county with fixed salaries, the question whether, in the event of it appearing that the amount of revenue which the city and county will realize within the year will not exceed or equal the total amount of fixed salaries of its officers for the entire year, it is the duty of the auditor to refuse to audit any other claims than those of officers with fixed salaries does not arise in this case.

By an act of the legislature approved March 30, 1872 (Stats. 1871-72, p. 735), the board of supervisors of said city and county is authorized and empowered to authorize the employment of such extra clerks as may be required by the tax collector in his office from time to time, at a salary not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per month each.

It was by virtue of the authority conferred by that act upon the board and tax collector that the petitioner was appointed, and his salary fixed at one hundred dollars per month.

The fixed salaries or compensation of the officers of said city and county are payable out of the general fund in the treasury (Consolidation Act, § 95, subd. 3), and must "be paid out of any moneys in the treasury in preference to any and all other demands whatsoever (payable out of that fund); and in case of any deficiency of funds for the payment of any of the said demands when presented, then all such demands, being presented and registered by the treasurer as in this act required, shall be paid out of any moneys afterward coming into the said treasury, applicable thereto, in the order in which the same are registered." (Consolidation Act, § 96.)

The question whether it would be the duty of the auditor to audit the demand of the petitioner, if there was no money in the general fund out of which it could be paid, does not arise in this case, because the answer admits that there is now in the treasury the sum of one hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars to the credit of said fund.

The only question presented to us by the petition and answer is whether the petitioner is shown to have been, during the month of January, an officer of said city and county with a fixed salary. Upon that question we entertain no doubt. The law which authorized his appointment has been complied with, and that law required that his salary should be fixed at a sum not exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars per month. It was fixed at the sum of one hundred dollars per month.

Ordered that a writ of mandate issue according to the prayer of the petition.

MORRISON, C. J., ROSS, J., MCKINSTRY, J., THORNTON, J., and MCKEE, J., concurred.

A. W. ROYSDON, RESPONDENT, v. WILLIAM B. CARR, APPELLANT.

PLEADING — COMPLAINT — DEMURRER.—The complaint contained four counts. The first count alleged in substance that on the 10th of February, 1878, the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would within a reasonable time thereafter, procure and deliver to him certain letters and correspondence between one George M. Pinney, J. C. Corey, Joseph A. Crawford, and W. H. Culver, promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of five thousand dollars, that the plaintiff did accordingly procure and deliver to the defendant the said letters and correspondence, and that the defendant, though often requested, had not paid to the plaintiff the said sum of five thousand dollars or any part thereof. The defendant demurred to this count for ambiguity and uncertainty, specifying as the particular grounds of demurrer, that it did not state the nature, subject-matter, or substance of the letters or correspondence, or the number or dates of the letters, or by or to whom they were written. The court overruled the demurrer. Held, that it was properly overruled.

PRACTICE — WITHDRAWAL OF COUNTS — EVIDENCE.—Where a complaint contains several counts, and the case goes to trial, and after the evidence is in, the plaintiff elects to proceed upon one of the counts, and withdraws the others, the withdrawal carries with it the evidence admitted under the counts withdrawn.

CONTRACT — VALIDITY — PUBLIC POLICY.—Where an attorney at law, in the course of his professional employment, receives letters and papers from a client, and agrees, with the consent of the client, to deliver the same to a third person, the contract is not void as being against public policy.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The facts, except as to the matters involved in the demurrer, sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Stewart, Vanclief & Herrin, and W. W. Foote, for Appellant.

D. S. & S. L. Terry, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—The demurrer to the first count of the complaint was properly overruled. As the other three counts were withdrawn from the consideration of court and jury, it is not necessary to express any opinion on the demurrer to them.

It was contended on behalf of appellant that the evidence was insufficient to establish the cause of action set forth in the first count of the complaint—the count on which only the cause was submitted and determined. We have examined the evidence, and are of opinion that the contention of appellant is well maintained, and that the evidence fails to establish such cause of action.

It is urged, however, by respondent, that inasmuch as the evidence did establish a contract between the parties, which evidence went to the jury, without objection by appellant (defendant below), and as such evidence showed a right on the part of respondent to recover as much as the jury gave him by its verdict, that this court ought not to reverse. But it is set forth in the statement on motion for a new trial, following a distinct declaration that this was all the evidence introduced at the trial, that the plaintiff withdrew from the consideration of the court and jury all claims and causes of action alleged in the second, third, and fourth counts of his complaint, and relied at the trial solely upon the cause of action stated in the first count, and that the cause was tried solely upon the issues made upon the first count.

In our judgment, this withdrawal carried with it all evidence which had been put in under the three counts withdrawn, and the defendant was not called on to make any objection to such evidence as not admissible under the first count.

A question is presented on an instruction as to the character of the contract sued on. It is contended by appellant that such contract is opposed to public policy and void. We do not think that such a position is sound. Roysdon procured the letters from Pinney, his client, and disposed of them with his consent. He was attorney for Pinney only, and as he acted with the consent of the latter violated no obligation which he owed to him. We say so much as to this last point, as the cause goes back for a new trial.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded.

Hearing in Bank denied.

CHARLES STEDMAN, APPELLANT, v. THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, RESPONDENT.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION — POLICE OFFICERS — ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT — TAKING AND DETENTION OF PROPERTY — DAMAGES.—The city and county of San Francisco is not liable in damages for a wrongful arrest and imprisonment by police officers under an ordinance adopted by the board of supervisors, nor for the taking and detention of property by such officers from the person so arrested.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the city and county of San Francisco.

The complaint alleged in substance that the plaintiff was arrested by members of the police department of San Francisco, and imprisoned for the period of four and a half months, and that they also took from him certain property, and detained the same fourteen months; that these acts were done through the procurement of the defendant under an ordinance previously adopted by the board of supervisors, that there was no cause for them, and that the plaintiff was damaged in the sum of sixty thousand dollars. The defendant demurred for insufficiency, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and a final judgment was entered against him.

Moses G. Cobb, and George W. Chamberlain, for Appellant.

John L. Murphy, and Wm. Craig, for Respondent.

PER CURIAM.—We are unable to perceive upon what theory the defendant could be held responsible by reason of the matters set forth in the complaint. The demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES FARRELL, RESPONDENT, v. WILLIS JONES
ET AL., J. S. CARMICHAEL, APPELLANT.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE — COMPLAINT — JUDGMENT.—Action to foreclose a mortgage. The appeal was heard on the judgment roll. The appellant objected that the judgment was in excess of the amount due shown by the complaint. After examining the allegations of the complaint, Acld, that the objection was not well founded.

PARTIES — SUBSTITUTION.—Where a third person, during the pendency of an action, succeeds to the rights of the plaintiff, the court has power to substitute such person as plaintiff in the action, and notice of the substitution need not be given to a defendant whose default has been entered for failing to appear.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Placer County.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Henley, Whipple & Oates, for Appellant.

John M. Fulweiler, for Respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage. The mortgage was executed by the defendants Jones and Dougherty, who conveyed the mortgaged premises to the defendant McGillivray, who conveyed to the defendant, "The Dardanelles Consolidated Mining Company," which was the owner of said premises at the time of the commencement of this action. None of the defendants appeared in the action with the exception of the defendants McGillivray and Carmichael, who were alleged to have or claim some interest in said premises, or some part thereof, which claim or interest was subsequent to and subject to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage.

The appearance of McGillivray was entered by his attorneys, and defendant Carmichael filed a demurrer specifying that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which was overruled with leave to him to answer within ten days, which he failed to do. Defendant McGillivray neither answered nor demurred. The defaults of all the defendants were duly entered, and a decree of foreclosure was thereupon ordered by the court. From the decree entered pursuant to said order the said defendant Carmichael appeals.

The first ground upon which appellant's counsel claim that the judgment should be reversed is that the decree "is excessive in amount by at least the sum of three payments of interest."

If these payments were made at all they were made by the execution and delivery of a promissory note which purports to be made by the "Dardanelles Con. G. M. Co., by Joseph McGillivray, superintendent," and in regard to that the plaintiff alleges that "he has been informed and believes, and upon such information and belief avers that said Joseph McGillivray had not, as such superintendent or otherwise, any power or authority to bind the said Dardanelles Consolidated Gravel Mining Company thereby, or execute and deliver the said promissory note in the name of said corporation, and that therefore the said promissory note is valueless and in fraud of said plaintiff's rights under and by virtue of said mortgage, and that the plaintiff has not received any consideration for the indorsements as aforesaid, upon said promissory note of Jones and Dougherty, except the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, and that the credit thereon and towards the payment thereof should not be more than seven hundred and fifty dollars."

But appellant says "that it does not appear but that the note of the Dardanelles Mining Company was actually paid." It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff indorsed the amount of said note on the note which the mortgage was given to secure the payment of, and that he has not received any consideration for that indorsement, which if the note had been paid would be a false allegation. We think that those allegations, taken in connection with the allegation that McGillivray had no power or authority to execute and deliver said note, is substantially an allegation that it had not been paid.

The second ground upon which appellant relies is that after the defaults of the defendants had been entered, Jo Hamilton was substituted for the original plaintiff, and the decree is in his favor. The decree recites that Hamilton was "substituted as plaintiff in said action, he having during the pendency of the action succeeded by assignment to the said James Farrell's interest and rights in and to said debt, and the mortgage given to secure the same." Such being the case the court had the power to substitute Hamilton in the action or proceeding, and we know of no reason why the defendants, whose defaults had before been entered, should have had notice of a motion to have such substitution made. And if such notice had been given, the fact would not appear in the judgment roll.

We do not think that the record discloses any error for which the judgment should be reversed.

Judgment affirmed.

JEROME B. COX, RESPONDENT, v. CHARLES McLAUGHLIN, APPELLANT.

CONTRACT — PLEADINGS — EVIDENCE — FINDINGS — VARIANCE — LAW OF THE CASE.—The action was brought on an alleged contract in writing by which the plaintiff and his associates agreed to do certain work for the defendant in the construction of a railroad, and to furnish the materials therefor. The complaint purported to state the contract according to its substance and effect, but the answer denied the contract thus stated, and averred that the contract between the parties was embodied in two instruments therein set forth, one being supplemental to and explanatory of the other. The facts on the subject were proved and found in accordance with the answer. By the terms of the contract payments were to be made from time to time as the work progressed, but these payments were to be based on estimates made by the engineer of the road and reported to the parties. There was no allegation in the complaint, nor any proof in relation to such estimates. After stating, however, that the work had not been completed, the complaint alleged that the completion was prevented by the defendant. In support of this allegation, evidence was given on the part of the plaintiff to the effect that the payments were not made as provided for by the contract, that the failure in the payments rendered it impossible for the plaintiff and his associates to complete the work for want of means necessary to enable them to do so, and that their pecuniary condition and reliance upon the payments were known to the defendant when the contract was made. The facts were found in accordance with this evidence, and it was also found that the work had not been voluntarily abandoned by the contractors, but was wholly and entirely suspended by the defendant. The contract provided in substance that the defendant should have the right, subject to certain conditions as to notice, to cause an increase or diminution of the force of laborers or other means necessary to carry on the work, or to suspend the work entirely, provision being made for delays arising from the exercise of this right, and in regard to the terms of payment in case the work should be entirely suspended. It was proved that the defendant had at different times required the force of laborers employed upon the work to be reduced, and had directed portions of the work to be suspended. On former appeals in the case, the court had decided that the action could not be maintained unless the completion of the work was prevented by the defendant, and that neither a failure in the payments nor the exercise of a right secured to the defendant by the contract was sufficient to constitute prevention. Held, 1. That these propositions had become the law of the case. 2. That no effect could be given to the evidence in regard to the pecuniary condition of the plaintiff and his associates, and that in view of the terms of the contract, this evidence was inadmissible. 3. That the finding as to the entire suspension of the work by the defendant was not sustained by the evidence, and further, that it was inconsistent with another finding on the subject, and in conflict with the complaint. 4. That it was necessary to allege and prove the making of the estimates provided for, or to show some legal cause why they were not made. 5. That the contract set up in the answer and found by the court was different in substance and effect from the contract stated in the complaint, and that the variance was fatal.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the county of Alameda, and from order refusing a new trial.

The parties to the contract were Jerome B. Cox, Thomas J. Arnold, and Jackson R. Myers, known by the firm name of Cox, Myers & Co., of the first part, and Charles McLaughlin, of the second part. After the work was commenced Myers assigned his interest in the contract to Cox and Arnold, and the work from that time was carried on by them. The action was brought by Cox and Arnold, but Arnold subsequently died, and the action was continued in the name of Cox. As originally commenced, one of the objects of the action was to enforce a lien for the work done and materials furnished, and there were certain defendants in addition to McLaughlin. But the complaint has been repeatedly amended, and in the last complaint filed, McLaughlin was the only defendant, and the relief sought was a personal judgment against him. The pleadings and evidence are very voluminous, and it would be useless labor to attempt an analysis of them. The facts stated in the head notes and those appearing in the opinion of the court are sufficient to explain the points decided, and the grounds on which the court proceeded.

S. M. Wilson, and Tully R. Wise, for Appellant.

This case has been before the court on several different appeals. The decisions on the former appeals are to be found as follows: Cox v. Western Pacific R. R. Co. 44 Cal. 18; S. C. 47 Cal. 87; Cox v. McLaughlin, 52 Cal. 590; S. C. 54 Cal. 605.

On these appeals the whole law of the case arising on the present appeal has been settled.

"A previous ruling by the appellate court upon a point distinctly made may be only authority in other cases, to be followed or affirmed, or to be modified or overruled according to its intrinsic merits, but in the case in which it is made it is more than authority; it is a final adjudication, from the consequences of which the court cannot depart, nor the parties relieve themselves." (Phelan v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 45; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 75; Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 311; Mulford v. Estudillo, 32 Cal. 136; Donner v. Palmer, 51 Cal. 629; Jaffe v. Skae, 48 Cal. 543; Meeks v. S. P. R. R. Co. 56 Cal. 517; Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 62 Cal. 558.)

These previous rulings on the former appeals not only were binding on the court below, but are binding also upon the appellate court, and apply as well to the construction of the pleadings as to other questions. (Lucas v. City of San Francisco, 28 Cal. 594.)

The series of complaints in this record from first to last all count upon the same special contract in writing according to its alleged legal effect.

On the first appeal it was held that the contract between McLaughlin and Cox, Myers & Co. was "an entire contract," and that the provision for payments from time to time on the estimates "does not change the character of the contract in this respect and make it severable."

It was also held that the complaint was bad because it did not allege that the work had been completed, nor that its completion had been prevented by McLaughlin, nor that the contract had been rescinded.

On the second appeal, after the complaint had been amended by inserting therein an allegation that McLaughlin prevented the completion of the work, the court held that the complaint was sufficient, but reaffirmed its former decision that the contract was an "entire contract," and not severable.

On the third appeal the court again held that the contract was "an entire contract," and that "assuming the failure to pay as alleged constituted a breach of the contract, the plaintiffs could have treated the specific contract as rescinded, and have brought suit on the implied promise of defendant to pay the value of the work actually done." But the court looking at "the whole frame of the complaint," held that the action was not on an implied promise arising upon a rescission of the special contract, but was based upon a breach of the express contract resulting from the alleged prevention.

The present complaint, in all the particulars above referred to, is exactly like the complaint before the court on the last preceding appeal. The special contract counted upon is the same, and the same allegation is made as to the completion of the work having been prevented by the defendant. We have it then as the settled law of the case now no longer open to discussion.

1. That the action is not indebitatus assumpsit upon an implied promise arising on a rescission of the contract.

2. That the action is based upon the contract, part performance and prevention being alleged as the cause of action.

The answer here is the same as upon the preceding appeal, and denies as well the averment of prevention as the contract sued on, and avers that the contract actually made by the parties was a different contract from that described in the complaint, and annexes copies, which are made part of the answer. Thus it appears that the issues now are the same as upon the last appeal, and it was decided on that appeal that prevention was a vital issue, and the judgment there was reversed because there was no finding of prevention. (52 Cal. 590; 54 Cal. 605.)

On the present appeal, therefore, the judgment below cannot be affirmed here, unless the court can see in the record (1) a finding of prevention; (2) evidence sufficient to sustain such finding.

What is prevention? Nothing more or less than what the word in its ordinary meaning signifies. If McLaughlin did any act, or omitted to do any act, notwithstanding which Cox & Co. could legally proceed to fulfil their contract, they were not prevented. No such act was done, nor was anything omitted. At all times Cox & Co. had the legal right to go on, and McLaughlin protested against their abandonment of the contract.

A party to a contract has the legal power to stop the work under it, but thereby becomes liable to pay to the other party such damages as the latter may suffer by such prevention. If A. agrees to build a house for B. with lumber to be furnished by B., and the latter fails to supply the lumber, he prevents A. from performing, and becomes liable. In neither of these events can A. proceed. But if A. is to build for B., and furnish as well the material as the labor, upon payments from time to time to be made by B., the failure of the latter to pay is not prevention, for, notwithstanding such non-payment A. may still go on.

This, too, was settled on the last appeal, where it was held "that the mere failure to pay the money due upon the contract before the completion of the work did not constitute such 'prevention' as justified a recovery in the present action."

This court adopts also, and fully concurs in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Illinois in Palm v. The Ohio & Miss. R. R. Co. 18 Ill. 219, and makes a long extract from the opinion in that case, delivered by Mr. Justice Caton. This, by adoption, becomes the language of this court. That extract says: "It is undoubtedly true that the failure to make such payments may, in point of fact, leave the other party without the means or credit to go on and complete the job; but such is not the necessary result of such a failure, and we cannot safely adopt it as a conclusion of law that it does prevent the party from going on. The prompt payment of such instalments might be indispensable to enable a party of small means and credit to go on, while another of larger means and more extended credit might be able to complete the contract without embarrassment or sacrifice. Can we inquire into the actual fact, and see whether the non-payment did really stop the plaintiff or not, and thus administer one measure of law to the poor man, and another to the rich?"

The court then demonstrates that no such inquiry could be made.

But the court below, against the objection of the defendant, allowed the plaintiff to introduce evidence as to the pecuniary condition of Cox, Myers & Co. when the contract was made, and the knowledge of the defendant on the subject, for the purpose of showing that the parties contracted with the understanding that a failure in the payments would put an end to the work. This evidence was admitted on the theory of interpretation, but its object was to add to the terms of the contract by construing into it a provision making the payment of the instalments a condition precedent to the further prosecution of the work. It is clear that such evidence was inadmissible. A contract may be read by the light of surrounding circumstances, but the strongest light does not enable the court to make a new contract for the parties. All previous and contemporaneous understandings are merged in the contract as written, and it cannot be contradicted, altered, added to, or varied by parol evidence. In regard to the supposed prevention arising from the total suspension of the work by McLaughlin, it was held on the last appeal, in view of the terms of the contract, that he was authorized to suspend the work, and therefore suspension was not prevention. But the court finds that the work was suspended immediately after the execution of the supplemental contract on the 2d of October, 1865, and it is also found that the work was continued up to the 15th of September, 1866. There is, however, no truth in the finding as to the suspension of the work. It is directly in the face of the evidence.

The learned counsel further argued that as the payments were to be made upon estimates of the engineer, and there was no allegation or proof in relation to such estimates, the plaintiff could not recover, citing Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307; Vanderwerker v. Snyder, 27 Vt. 130; Herrick v. Belknap, 27 Vt. 673; Wilson v. N. Y. & Md. Line Railroad Co. 11 Gill. & J. 58; Kidwell v. New York & Erie R. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 468.

They also contended that the contract stated in the complaint was essentially different from the contract between the parties as set up in the answer and shown by the evidence and findings of the court, and that the plaintiff could not sue on one contract, and recover upon another, citing Washington etc. Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 10 How. 419; Hart v. Rose, Hemp. 238; People v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 632; Rogers v. Cody, 8 Cal. 324; Gilmore v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. 55 Cal. 124.

S. W. Sanderson, and Fox & Kellogg, also for Appellant, argued the same questions in part, and others not passed upon by the court.

McAllister & Bergin, J. P. Hoge, and M. G. Cobb, for Respondent.

1. A previous decision of the appellate tribunal establishes the law of the case, but it does not make the facts of the case; or, as expressed by this court, "facts are not settled by judicial precedents, but only questions of law." (Swift v. Kramer, 13 Cal. 531; or, as stated in Nieto v. Carpenter, 21 Cal. 488.)

"We admit that a previous ruling of the appellate court upon a point directly made is as to all subsequent proceedings a final adjudication, from the consequences of which the court cannot depart, nor the parties relieve themselves." (Phelan v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 39.) But such ruling, if relating to a matter of fact, can only be invoked when the fact re-appears under the same circumstances in which it was originally presented." (U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Peters, 736-741.)

2. Parol evidence of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties is admissible for the purpose of enabling the court to correctly construe the terms of the contract. (U. S. v. Peck, 12 Otto, 65; Saunders v. Clark, 29 Cal. 304.)

3. Subtraction or withholding from the contractors the means of enabling them to perform their contract may constitute prevention. (U. S. v. Peck, 12 Otto, 65; School Dist. v. Hayne, 46 Wis. 518; Phillips v. Seymour, 1 Otto, 649; Canal Co. v. Gordon, 6 Wall. 569; Bean v. Miller, 69 Mo. 393; Jones v. Mial, 82 N. C. 252; Dobbins v. Higgins, 78 Ill. 440; Lincoln v. Schwartz, 70 Ill. 134; Oates v. Kendall, 67 N. C. 241; Kingsley v. City of Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 216; Freeth v. Burr, Law Rep. 9 C. P. 213; Schulte v. Hennessy, 41 Iowa, 356; Grand Rapids and Bay City R. R. Co. v. Van Duzen, 29 Mich. 444; Howard v. Wilmington and Susquehanna R. R. Co. 1 Gill, 322-343; Graves v. Donelson, 24 Conn. 635; Central Military Park R. R. Co. v. Spurck, 24 Ill. 588; Schwartz v. Saunders, 46 Ill. 23; Court v. Ambergate, 6 E. L. & E. 230; Hochester v. De La Tour, 20 E. L. & E. 160; Thompson v. Lane, 8 Bosw. 485; Lamoroux v. Rolfe, 36 N. H. 36; Shaw v. Grandy, 5 Jones (N. C.) 57.)

4. The evidence as to the pecuniary condition of Cox, Myers & Co. was clearly admissible on the question of prevention. It tended to show that McLaughlin, by failing to pay the instalments, knowing that such failure would compel an abandonment of the work, not only violated his obligations under the contract, but prevented its completion. True, mere non-payment in and of itself, as announced by this court, and we hope simply for the purposes of this contract, does not constitute prevention. Yet, most assuredly, in connection with other circumstances, it has a bearing, and is relevant as evidence upon the question as to whether or not McLaughlin did prevent performance of the contract; and does not the pecuniary condition of the parties have a like bearing? The case of The United States v. Peck is strongly in point.

5. Only since July 1, 1874, has it been the statute law of this State that "no variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits." (Code Civ. Proc. § 469.)

How a party can be misled by the adverse party claiming relief upon the contract he himself sets up as the true one, is not readily apparent. Especially is this the case when the litigation for years has been between the same parties upon the same contract. Parties cannot thus play fast and loose. The law will not sanction it.

Upon the former appeal appellant procured reversal of judgment in favor of respondent upon the ground that the contract set up in the answer was the true contract determinative of the rights of the parties, and that according to the same, respondent was not entitled to retain the judgment recovered, and this court so adjudged and ordered a new trial to determine the rights of the parties under the contract. Upon this retrial counsel say this is not the contract in controversy at all.

They are estopped from so claiming. (Philadelphia & Wilmington R. R. v. Howard, 13 How. 336; Lilley v. Adams, 108 Mass. 52; Hooker v. Hubbard, 102 Mass. 241.

Such practice is simply trifling with the administration of justice.

Briefs in reply were filed by S. M. Wilson, Tully R. Wise, Fox & Kellogg, and Rhodes & Barstow.

Ross, J.—For many reasons the judgment of the court below is erroneous. The action is one at law, on a special contract, the plaintiff alleging part performance of the contract on his part, and that of his predecessors in interest, and the preventing of the completion of it by the defendant. The case has been here repeatedly, the complaint on which the last trial was had being the seventh complaint filed in the action. Naturally enough, therefore, certain propositions have become the law of the case. Among them that averment and proof of prevention is essential to a recovery by plaintiff, inasmuch as there is no pretense of the work contracted for having been completed or the contract rescinded. (44 Cal. 18; 47 Cal. 87; 54 Cal. 605; 52 Cal. 590.) It has also become the law of the case that neither the mere failure of the defendant to pay the instalments as they became due, nor the exercise by defendant of a right secured to him by the contract itself, constituted prevention. (52 and 54 Cal. supra.)

For the purpose of overcoming the first of these last-mentioned obstacles, the plaintiff was permitted on the last trial in the court below, against the defendant's objections, to introduce testimony to the effect that both parties knew at the time of making the contract that the contractors relied, and were compelled by their pecuniary resources to rely, upon the payment by the defendant of the instalments as they became due; and the court below so found. In rightly holding such testimony erroneously admitted, MR. JUSTICE MYRICK, speaking for the court, when the case was last under consideration, said: "Parol evidence of surrounding circumstances may be given to aid in the proper interpretation of an instrument; but where the parties have themselves used words which require no interpretation, where the words are understood, there is no occasion for aid to their proper interpretation or meaning. In this case the parties had, by their contract, clearly expressed two ideas or agreements: First, that the contractors were to perform certain work; second, that the defendant was to make payments therefor in instalments. The words as to these agreements are of very plain signification. This court had decided non-payment of instalments was not prevention; therefore, by the terms of the contract payment was not a condition precedent. In order to make payment a condition precedent a clause would have to be inserted, injected into the contract, which the parties themselves did not see fit to place there. It is not in evidence that the parties agreed by parol that the payments should be conditions precedent; but even if they had so agreed, the well-known rule would apply, that their final conclusions were as they have expressed them in writing." (10 Pac. C. L. J. 263.)

Of course this testimony was introduced, and the finding made thereon—the ninth—was made as bearing upon the question of prevention. Neither could have any other bearing. From the findings themselves it is sufficiently obvious that the prevention found by the court below was based upon the facts detailed in the ninth and tenth findings; and this becomes perfectly plain when the evidence is considered, from which it appears that the only attempt made to show prevention was to show the non-payment of the instalments by the defendant, the “surrounding circumstances” just alluded to, and suspension of the work by the defendant. In the tenth finding the court found that the defendant entirely suspended the work immediately after October 2, 1865. But this finding, as was justly said by MR. JUSTICE MYRICK in the opinion already referred to, “is not sustained by the evidence. The evidence is that McLaughlin directed the diminution of the laboring force to but a few men. This he had a right to do according to the express terms of the contract. (54 Cal. 605.)” It may be added that by the express terms of the contract between the parties, the defendant was authorized to entirely suspend the work; the contract prescribing the consequences of such suspension. Prevention implies ex vi termini, a breach of contract; and, of course, a party cannot commit a breach of contract by exercising a right secured to him by the contract. The finding that the defendant entirely suspended the work is, therefore, insufficient to constitute prevention. (54 Cal. 607.) Besides, the finding is, as already shown, unsupported by the evidence; and is in conflict with another (the fourth) finding made by the court, in which it is found that the plaintiff furnished material and performed labor and service of great value in and about the execution of the contract up to September 15, 1866. It is also in conflict with the averment of the complaint itself, in which it is expressly charged that Cox and Arnold, as the successors in interest of Cox, Meyers & Co., diligently prosecuted the work until September 15, 1866.

Moreover, there is in this case neither averment nor proof that the estimates of the engineer, on which alone, according to the terms of the contract between the parties as proved and found, the defendant was to pay, were made, nor is there any legal cause shown, or attempted to be shown, why such estimates were not made. This question has recently been before us in two cases, one of which is Loup v. C. S. R. R. Co. 63 Cal. 97, and the other Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, in which the conclusion was reached, to which we adhere, that in such cases averment and proof of the making of such estimates is essential to put the party making the agreement in default, unless legal cause is averred and proved why they were not made.

But further and beyond all this, the contract declared on by the plaintiff is essentially different from the contract set up by the defendant and proved and found by the court to have been made between the parties; and the respective rights and obligations of the parties under the one are essentially different from what they are under the other.

By the contract stated in the complaint, the obligation of Cox, Meyers & Co. was limited "to the extent of doing, and furnishing materials for, all the gradation, masonry, and bridging, and all other things necessary and proper to place said roadbed (of the railroad referred to) ready for the cross-ties and iron equipment, and no more." By the contract proved and found their obligation went far beyond this. By that, the work to be done by them was to include all bridges, viaducts, embankments, excavations, road-crossings, culverts, drains, and all other things necessary, usual, and proper to place the part of the railroad described complete for the cross-ties and iron equipment to be placed thereon, and according to certain plans and specifications annexed to the contract and made part of it. The work to be done by them was to be done in the best and most thorough manner, and all that portion of the railroad undertaken to be built by them was to be equal to the best constructed railroad in the State, and was to be in full compliance with the contract then existing between McLaughlin and The Western Pacific Railroad Company, and in full compliance with the requirements of the board of directors of that company. It is manifest that performance of the obligations imposed on Cox, Meyers & Co. by the contract alleged in the complaint would by no means be a compliance with the obligations imposed on them by the contract proved and found.

Furthermore, the defendant's obligations, as well as his rights, are essentially different under the two. The contract proved and found is not alleged in the complaint to have been made, is not alleged to have been performed in whole or in part by the plaintiff, nor to have been broken by the defendant. The alleged contract, for the breach of which the action was brought, was not proved.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Mich. Mullany, of counsel for Appellant.

Tully R. Wiss, for Respondent.

The question is whether in an action of ejectment a person having no title can give in evidence facts that would render a patent perfect on its face null and void. We maintain that such evidence is inadmissible. (Bledsoe's Devisees v. Well, 4 Bibb. 329; Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 327; Jackson v. Lawton, 10 Johns. 24; Patterson v. Tatum, 8 Sawy. 172; Dodge v. Perez, 2 Sawy. 654; Jackson v. May, 16 Johns. 184; Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. 374; Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wall. 434; U. S. v. Atherton, 102 U. S. 372; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 404; Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 475; Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 256; French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 169; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 339; 93 U. S. 169.)

Upon questions of fact the decision of the land office is conclusive. (Dilla v. Bohall, 53 Cal. 710; Powers v. Leith, 53 Cal. 711.)

Whenever authority is given to issue a patent upon a prior state of facts, the authority to ascertain the facts is implied.

The judicial department has no authority to decide questions except when the law gives it. (Berry v. Cammet, 44 Cal. 347; Hoemer v. Wallace, 47 Cal. 461; Hestres v. Brennan, 50 Cal. 211; Weaver v. Fairchild, 50 Cal. 360.)

There is nothing in the world that is more a question of fact than the location of a Mexican grant. (Hildebrand v. Stewart, 41 Cal. 387; Burrell v. Haw, 40 Cal. 373; Hess v. Bolinger, 48 Cal. 349; Rutledge v. Murphy, 51 Cal. 388.)

In this case the appellant did not appeal to the commissioner and he could not defeat us in equity. (See Sac. Savings Bank v. Hynes, 50 Cal. 196.) Shipley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 340, also holds that the rulings of the land officers are conclusive.

The Statute of Limitations has run in our favor against all the world but the government. (See Lord v. Sawyer, 57 Cal. 65.)

F. T. Baldwin, and J. O. Campbell, also for Respondent.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

PER CURIAM.—This was an action of ejectment in which judgment was rendered for plaintiff. This appeal is prosecuted by defendant.

The plaintiff claimed under a patent of the United States purporting on its face to have been issued under a grant of land made to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, by acts of Congress passed in the years 1862 and 1864. This patent was offered in evidence, together with other evidence, and to both patent and the evidence referred to, various objections were made by defendant. These objections were overruled by the court, and exceptions were reserved by defendant to its rulings, as to which we consider it only necessary to say that we find no error in the rulings excepted to.

To defeat the recovery by plaintiff defendant offered to show that at the time of the grant by Congress under which the patent to plaintiff's grantor purports to have been issued, the land in controversy was included within the exterior limits of a tract of land claimed as a Mexican grant, and known as "Moquelamos," which was reserved from the grant to the railroads mentioned; that afterwards, on the 5th of December, 1876, he (defendant) was a qualified pre-emptor, and as such entered on the land in dispute for the purpose of acquiring the title thereto under the pre-emption laws of the United States, and has improved the land and continued to reside thereon ever since; that at the time of his settlement the land was and ever since has been surveyed agricultural land of the United States, and subject to pre-emption; that on the 1st day of February, 1877, he (defendant) prepared and offered to file in the land office of the proper district his declaratory statement in due form of law, of his claim to the land, and that the register of the land office, without right refused to permit him to do so, from which decision of the register he appealed, and his appeal is still pending and undetermined before the commissioner of the general land office at Washington. This offer was excluded by the court, and defendant reserved an exception to the ruling.

This was held to be error in Carr v. Quigley, 57 Cal. 395, which cause was decided by Department One, and on petition for rehearing was approved by the court in Bank. On the authority of that case the judgment and order are reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Ross, J., dissenting.—I dissent. The action is ejectment for the recovery of the possession of the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 19, township 4 north, of range 9 east, containing two hundred and forty acres of land.

Judgment for plaintiff. Appeal by defendant.

The statement on motion for new trial recites:—

“On the trial of the action, plaintiff offered and read in evidence, under the objection of defendant, a patent in due form of law, signed by the President of the United States, which patent recited that a grant of land had been made by the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Western Pacific Railroad Company by acts of Congress in the years 1862 and 1864, and by joint resolution of Congress passed in 1865, which purported to convey the land in question; and plaintiff also offered in evidence articles of consolidation between the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company of California, showing that the two corporations were united under the name of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

“The defendant objected to said patent as evidence on the grounds:—

“1st. Said land described in said patent does not appear to have been granted to said Western Pacific Railroad Company.

“2d. There was no evidence that the said Central Pacific

the land is obvious. When he sought to obtain it through the only channel through which it could be obtained — the land department of the government — he was met at the threshold by a refusal on the part of the government officer to permit him to take the first step in the proceedings prescribed by Congress for the acquisition of title from the government.

As already observed, the defendant's offer does not disclose the ground of that refusal. But in the absence of a showing to the contrary, we are bound to presume that the officer acted rightly — perhaps for the reason stated in the defendant's answer, that the government had already executed a patent to another party for the same land — perhaps because the defendant's declaratory statement did not show that he had ever settled on the land. But whatever the reason, the fact remains that he did refuse. In no sense is the defendant in privity with the government. Proof of his settlement and improvement of the land it was essential for him to make before he could be entitled to enter it; and of this proof, as we held in Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 274, "the register and receiver are the exclusive judges, subject to the supervision and control of their superior officers of the land department. The courts have no power to substitute their judgment upon the facts of the defendant's alleged settlement and improvement of the land for that of the officers to whose judgment Congress has confided the determination of those questions." So that we have here the case of a defendant who has never filed a declaratory statement, never made proof of settlement, never paid any money, never received any certificate or other recognition from the officers of the land department, seeking in an ordinary action of ejectment to attack the validity of a patent which is regular on its face, and which purports to convey the land from the government to the plaintiff's grantor. If that can be done, of what avail is the government patent?

If the proceedings on which it is based can be called in question by every stranger who chooses to enter into the possession of the land described in it, where is the security intended to be conferred by it? It is, indeed, difficult to perceive the use of such an instrument if the antecedent proceedings are open to controversy to the same extent after as before its issue.

"The object of the patent," said the court in Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 326, "is to give security and quiet to its holder, as to the title of the property which it purports to transfer to him; but such patent would be anything but an instrument of security and repose, if every one not in privity with the original owner of the title, but simply hoping that by some future action of the government he may possibly possess some interest in the property, could compel the patentee in every instance in which he may seek the aid of the legal tribunals, to establish the validity and regularity of the action of the officers of the State in the selection of the land, and in the issuance of the patent."

It is true that if a patent is issued without authority it may be collaterally attacked in a court of law. But this exception from the general doctrine respecting the presumptions attending such instruments is, as was held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of The St. Louis Smelting & Refining Company v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 645, "subject to the qualification, that when the authority depends upon the existence of particular facts, or upon the performance of certain antecedent acts, and it is the duty of the land department to ascertain whether the facts exist, or the acts have been performed, its determination is as conclusive of the existence of the authority against any collateral attack, as is its determination upon any other matter properly submitted to its decision."

In the case before us, the patent, as has been already observed, is in due form of law, and the land it purports to convey is within a section embraced in the railroad grant. Read, therefore, in the light of the law, or of anything of which the court must take judicial notice, it cannot be said that the patent is invalid. It is true that if the particular piece of land embraced in the patent was included within the limits of a claimed Mexican grant, it was reserved from the grant to the railroad company. (Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761.) But upon what department of the government devolved the duty of ascertaining the fact in relation to that matter? That it was a question of fact cannot be doubted. It could only be ascertained by a survey of the premises. It was one of the facts the officers of the land department were called upon to determine before they could issue the patent to the grantee; and being one of the facts properly determinable by those officers, their deter-

the land is obvious. When he sought to obtain it through the only channel through which it could be obtained — the land department of the government — he was met at the threshold by a refusal on the part of the government officer to permit him to take the first step in the proceedings prescribed by Congress for the acquisition of title from the government.

As already observed, the defendant's offer does not disclose the ground of that refusal. But in the absence of a showing to the contrary, we are bound to presume that the officer acted rightly — perhaps for the reason stated in the defendant's answer, that the government had already executed a patent to another party for the same land — perhaps because the defendant's declaratory statement did not show that he had ever settled on the land. mination in favor of the grantee, as evidenced by the patent, is conclusive on a collateral attack in an action at law, more especially by a stranger to the common or paramount source of title.
